PREFACE.

IT is the fate of thoſe who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the proſpect of good; to be expoſed to cenſure, without hope of praiſe; to be diſgraced by miſcarriage, or puniſhed for neglect, where ſucceſs would have been without applauſe, and diligence without reward.

Among theſe unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have conſidered, not as the pupil, but the ſlave of ſcience, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbiſh and clear obſtructions from the paths of Learning and Genius, who preſs forward to conqueſt and glory, without beſtowing a ſmile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progreſs. Every other authour may aſpire to praiſe; the lexicographer can only hope to eſcape reproach, and even this negative recompence has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithſtanding this diſcouragement, attempted a dictionary of the Engliſh language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every ſpecies of literature, has itſelf been hitherto neglected, ſuffered to ſpread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance, reſigned to the tyranny of time and faſhion, and expoſed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the firſt ſurvey of my undertaking, I found our ſpeech copious without order, and energetick without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be diſentangled, and confuſion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundleſs variety, without any eſtabliſhed principle of ſelection; adulterations were to be detected, without a ſettled teſt of purity, and modes of expreſſion to be rejected or received, without the ſuffrages of any writers of claſſical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no aſſiſtance but from general grammar, I applied myſelf to the peruſal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of uſe to aſcertain or illuſtrate any word or phraſe, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, eſtabliſhing to myſelf, in the progreſs of the work, ſuch rules as experience and analogy ſuggeſted to me; experience, which practice and obſervation were continually increaſing; and analogy, which, though in ſome words obſcure, was evident in others.

In adjuſting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unſettled and fortuitous, I found it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh thoſe irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themſelves once unneceſſary, muſt be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be regiſtred, that they may not be increaſed, and aſcertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewiſe its impropriеties and abſurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proſcribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of neceſſary or common uſe were ſpoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any viſible ſigns, muſt have been ſpoken with great diverſity, as we now obſerve thoſe who cannot read to catch ſounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was firſt reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to expreſs, as he could, the ſounds which he was accuſtomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing ſuch words as were already vitiated in ſpeech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, muſt have been vague and unſettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the ſame ſound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation ariſe in a great part the various dialects of the ſame country, which will always be obſerved to grow fewer, and leſs different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary repreſentation of ſounds by letters, proceeds that diverſity of ſpelling obſervable in the Saxon remains, and I ſuppoſe in the firſt books of every nation, which perplexes or deſtroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, which, being once incorporated, can never be afterward diſmiſſed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, ſtrength from ſtrong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes highth; Quid te exempta juvat ſpinis de pluribus una; to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This

This uncertainty is moſt frequent in the vowels, which are ſo capriciouſly pronounced, and ſo differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologiſts, little regard is to be ſhewn in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errours in orthography, but ſpots of barbarity impreſſed ſo deep in the Engliſh language, that criticiſm can never waſh them away; theſe, therefore, muſt be permitted to remain untouched: but many words have been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance, as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and ſome ſtill continue to be variouſly written, as authours differ in their care or ſkill: of theſe it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always conſidered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is choſen rather than intire, becauſe it paſſed to us not from the Latin integer, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to ſay whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, ſince at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin ſervice in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally ſupplied us; for we have few Latin words, among the terms of domeſtick uſe, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to ſacrifice uniformity to cuſtom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberleſs majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; ſometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the ſame power are uſed indifferently without any diſcoverable reaſon of choice, as in choak, choke; ſoap, ſope; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have ſometimes inſerted twice, that thoſe who ſearch for them under either form, may not ſearch in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of ſpelling by which it is inſerted in the ſeries of the dictionary, is to be conſidered as that to which I give, perhaps not often raſhly, the preference. I have left, in the examples, to every authour his own practice unmoleſted, that the reader may balance ſuffrages, and judge betwixt us: but this queſtion is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning; ſome men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on ſounds and derivations; ſome, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected thoſe in which our words are commonly to be ſought. Thus Hammond writes feciбleneſs for feaſibleneſs, becauſe I ſuppoſe he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and ſome words, ſuch as dependant, dependent; dependance, dependence, vary their final ſyllable, as one or other language is preſent to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wantoned without controul, and vanity ſought praiſe by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a ſcholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among thoſe few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to thoſe, whoſe thoughts have been, perhaps, employed too anxiouſly on verbal ſingularities, not to diſturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been aſſerted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, ſays Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worſe to better. There is in conſtancy and ſtability a general and laſting advantage, which will always overbalance the ſlow improvements of gradual correction. Much leſs ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itſelf, and imitate thoſe changes, which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in obſerving them.

This recommendation of ſteadineſs and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happineſs; or that truth may not be ſucceſſfully taught by modes of ſpelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet ſo loſt in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the ſons of heaven. Language is only the inſtrument of ſcience, and words are but the ſigns of ideas: I wiſh, however, that the inſtrument might be leſs apt to decay, and that ſigns might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In ſettling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated ſyllable. It will ſometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the authour quoted, on a different ſyllable from that marked in the alphabetical ſeries; it is then to be underſtood, that cuſtom has varied, or that the authour has, in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are ſometimes given where the ſound of letters is irregular; and if they are ſometimes omitted, defect in ſuch minute obſervations will be more eaſily excuſed, than ſuperfluity.

In the inveſtigation both of the orthography and ſignification of words, their ETYMOLOGY was neceſſarily to be conſidered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any Engliſh root; thus circumſpect, circumvent, vent, circumſtance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all thoſe that can be referred to any word in Engliſh of greater ſimplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy ſometimes needleſs; for who does not ſee that remoteneſs comes from remote, lovely from love, concavity from concave, and demonſtrative from demonſtrate? But this grammatical exuberance the ſcheme of my work did not allow me to repreſs. It is of great importance, in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the uſual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity muſt be preſerved in ſyſtematical works, though ſometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to inſert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonick dialects are very frequent, and, though familiar to thoſe who have always uſed them, interrupt and embarraſs the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonick: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonick range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Moſt of our polyſyllables are Roman, and our words of one ſyllable are very often Teutonick.

In aſſigning the Roman original, it has perhaps ſometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and conſidering myſelf as employed only in the illuſtration of my own language, I have not been very careful to obſerve whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obſolete.

For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborn to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or uſurp their honours, but that I might ſpare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgment. Of theſe, whom I ought not to mention but with the reverence due to inſtructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of underſtanding. Junius was accurately ſkilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occaſional inſpection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other uſe than to ſhow him a track by which he may deviate from his purpoſe, to which Skinner always preſſes forward by the ſhorteſt way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety diſtracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently diſgraced by his abſurdities.

The votaries of the northern muſes will not perhaps eaſily reſtrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a diſadvantageous compariſon; but whatever reverence is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of cenſoriouſneſs to charge that etymologiſt with want of judgment, who can ſeriouſly derive dream from drama, becauſe life is a drama, and a drama is a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μόνος, monos, who conſiders that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is ſo ſcanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonick the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inſerted Dutch or German ſubſtitutes, which I conſider not as radical but parallel, not as the parents, but ſiſters of the Engliſh.

The words which are repreſented as thus related by deſcent or cognation, do not always agree in ſenſe; for it is incident to words, as to their authours, to degenerate from their anceſtors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is ſufficient, in etymological enquiries, if the ſenſes of kindred words be found ſuch as may eaſily paſs into each other, or ſuch as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, ſo far as it is yet known, was eaſily found in the volumes where it is particularly and profeſſedly delivered; and, by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was ſoon adjuſted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a taſk of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhauſted, what was yet wanting muſt be ſought by fortuitous and unguided excurſions into books, and gleaned as induſtry ſhould find, or chance ſhould offer it, in the boundleſs chaos of a living ſpeech. My ſearch, however, has been either ſkilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

* That I may not appear to have ſpoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here ſubjoined a few Specimens of his etymological extravagance.

As my deſign was a dictionary common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; ſuch as Arian, Socinian, Calviniſt, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained thoſe of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received ſuch as could be found either in books of ſcience or technical dictionaries; and have often inſerted, from philoſophical writers, words which are ſupported perhaps only by a ſingle authority, and which being not admitted into general uſe, ſtand yet as candidates or probationers, and muſt depend for their adoption on the ſuffrage of futurity.

The words which our authours have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonneſs, by compliance with faſhion, or luſt of innovation, I have regiſtred as they occurred, though commonly only to cenſure them, and warn others againſt the folly of naturalizing uſeleſs foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by deſign, merely becauſe they were unneceſſary or exuberant; but have received thoſe which by different writers have been differently formed, as viſcid, and viſcidity, viſcous, and viſcoſity.

Compounded or double words I have ſeldom noted, except when they obtain a ſignification different from that which the components have in their ſimple ſtate. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horſe-courſer, require an explication; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, becauſe the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a conſtant and ſettled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in iſh, as greeniſh, bluiſh, adverbs in ly, as dully, openly, ſubſtantives in neſs, as vileneſs, faultineſs, were leſs diligently ſought, and many ſometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to inſert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offſprings of Engliſh roots, but becauſe their relation to the primitive being always the ſame, their ſignification cannot be miſtaken.

The verbal nouns in ing, ſuch as the keeping of the caſtle, the leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illuſtrate the ſenſe of the verb, except when they ſignify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an abſolute and abſtract ſignification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewiſe omitted, unleſs, by ſignifying rather qualities than action, they take the nature of adjectives; as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horſe, a horſe that can pace: theſe I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are theſe always inſerted, becauſe they are commonly to be underſtood, without any danger of miſtake, by conſulting the verb.

Obſolete words are admitted, when they are found in authours not obſolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deſerve revival.

As compoſition is one of the chief characteriſticks of a language, I have endeavoured to make ſome reparation for the univerſal negligence of my predeceſſors, by inſerting great numbers of compounded words, as may be found under after, fore, new, night, and many more. Theſe, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that uſe and curioſity are here ſatisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination are amply diſcovered.

Of ſome forms of compoſition, ſuch as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to ſignify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, becauſe the uſe of theſe particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is ſo little limited, that they are hourly united to new words as occaſion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of compoſition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which ariſes to foreigners the greateſt difficulty. We modify the ſignification of many verbs by a particle ſubjoined; as to come off, to eſcape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apoſtatize; to break off, to ſtop abruptly; to bear out, to juſtify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to ceaſe; to ſet off, to embelliſh; to ſet in, to begin a continual tenour; to ſet out, to begin a courſe or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expreſſions of the ſame kind, of which ſome appear wildly irregular, being ſo far diſtant from the ſenſe of the ſimple words, that no ſagacity will be able to trace the ſteps by which they arrived at the preſent uſe. Theſe I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myſelf that the collection is complete, I have perhaps ſo far aſſiſted the ſtudents of our language, that this kind of phraſeology will be no longer inſuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be eaſily explained by compariſon with thoſe that may be found.

Many words yet ſtand ſupported only by the name of Bailey, Ainſworth, Philips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionaries ſubjoined: of theſe I am not always certain that they are ſeen in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of ſuch I have omitted many, becauſe I had never read them; and many I have inſerted, becauſe they may perhaps exiſt, though they have eſcaped my notice: they are, however, however, to be yet conſidered as reſting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I conſidered as uſeful, or know to be proper, though I could not at preſent ſupport them by authorities, I have ſuffered to ſtand upon my own atteſtation, claiming the ſame privilege with my predeceſſors of being ſometimes credited without proof.

The words, thus ſelected and diſpoſed, are grammatically conſidered: they are referred to the different parts of ſpeech; traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illuſtrated by obſervations, not indeed of great or ſtriking importance, ſeparately conſidered, but neceſſary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by Engliſh grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity moſt frequently to faſten, is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to ſatisfy thoſe, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleaſed, ſince I have not always been able to ſatisfy myſelf. To interpret a language by itſelf is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by ſynonimes, becauſe the idea ſignified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphraſe, becauſe ſimple ideas cannot be deſcribed. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unſettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which ſuch notions are conveyed, or ſuch things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And ſuch is the fate of hapleſs lexicography, that not only darkneſs, but light, impedes and diſtreſſes it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illuſtrated. To explain, requires the uſe of terms leſs abſtruſe than that which is to be explained, and ſuch terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but by ſuppoſing ſomething intuitively known, and evident without proof, ſo nothing can be defined but by ſuppoſing ſome words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the ſenſe is too ſubtle and evaneſcent to be fixed in a paraphraſe; ſuch are all thoſe which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are ſuffered to paſs for empty ſounds, of no other uſe than to fill a verſe, or to modulate a period, but which are eaſily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphaſis, though it be ſometimes ſuch as no other form of expreſſion can convey.

My labour has likewiſe been much increaſed by a claſs of verbs too frequent in the Engliſh language, of which the ſignification is ſo looſe and general, the uſe ſo vague and indeterminate, and the ſenſes detorted ſo widely from the firſt idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumſcribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of diſtinct and ſettled meaning: ſuch are bear, break, come, caſt, full, get, give, do, put, ſet, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of theſe the whole power is not accurately delivered, it muſt be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every tongue that ſpeaks it, theſe words are hourly ſhifting their relations, and can no more be aſcertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a ſtorm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with ſo great latitude, that they are not eaſily reducible under any regular ſcheme of explication: this difficulty is not leſs, nor perhaps greater, in Engliſh, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with ſucceſs; ſuch at leaſt as can be expected in a taſk, which no man, however learned or ſagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, becauſe I do not underſtand them; theſe might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not ſo far indulge my vanity as to decline this confeſſion: for when Tully owns himſelf ignorant whether leſſus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral ſong, or mourning garment; and Ariſtotle doubts whether οὖρευς, in the Iliad, ſignifies a mule, or muleteer, I may freely, without ſhame, leave ſome obſcurities to happier induſtry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, ſhould be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured, but could not always attain. Words are ſeldom exactly ſynonymous; a new term was not introduced, but becauſe the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then neceſſary to uſe the proximate word, for the deficiency of ſingle terms can very ſeldom be ſupplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of ſuch mutilated interpretations, becauſe the ſenſe may eaſily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extenſive uſe, it was requiſite to mark the progreſs of its meaning, and ſhow by what gradations of intermediate ſenſe it has paſſed from its primitive to its remote and accidental ſignification; ſo that every foregoing explanation ſhould tend to that which follows, and the ſeries be regularly concatenated from the firſt notion to the laſt.

This is ſpecious, but not always practicable; kindred ſenſes may be ſo interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be diſentangled, nor any reaſon be aſſigned why one ſhould be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications, how can a conſecutive ſeries be formed of ſenſes in their nature collateral? The ſhades of meaning ſometimes paſs imperceptibly into each other; ſo that though on one ſide they apparently differ, yet it is impoſſible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the ſame race, though not exactly alike, are ſometimes ſo little different, that no words can expreſs the diſſimilitude, though the mind eaſily perceives it, when they are exhibited bited together; and ſometimes there is ſuch a confuſion of acceptations, that diſcernment is wearied, and diſtinction puzzled, and perſeverance herſelf hurries to an end, by crouding together what ſhe cannot ſeparate.

Theſe complaints of difficulty will, by thoſe that have never conſidered words beyond their popular uſe, be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his ſtudies by involution and obſcurity. But every art is obſcure to thoſe that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to thoſe who have joined philoſophy with grammar; and if I have not expreſſed them very clearly, it muſt be remembered that I am ſpeaking of that which words are inſufficient to explain.

The original ſenſe of words is often driven out of uſe by their metaphorical acceptations, yet muſt be inſerted for the ſake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is uſed for material heat, or whether flagrant, in Engliſh, ever ſignifies the ſame with burning; yet ſuch are the primitive ideas of theſe words, which are therefore ſet firſt, though without examples, that the figurative ſenſes may be commodiouſly deduced.

Such is the exuberance of ſignification which many words have obtained, that it was ſcarcely poſſible to collect all their ſenſes; ſometimes the meaning of derivatives muſt be ſought in the mother term, and ſometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be ſupplied in the train of derivation. In any caſe of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the ſame race; for ſome words are ſlightly paſſed over to avoid repetition, ſome admitted eaſier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better underſtood, as they are conſidered in greater variety of ſtructures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the ſame ſkill, or the ſame happineſs: things equally eaſy in themſelves, are not all equally eaſy to any ſingle mind. Every writer of a long work commits errours, where there appears neither ambiguity to miſlead, nor obſcurity to confound him; and in a ſearch like this, many felicities of expreſſion will be caſually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many ſeeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus ſome explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as hind, the female of the ſtag; ſtag, the male of the hind: ſometimes eaſier words are changed into harder, as burial into ſepulture or interment, drier into deſiccative, dryneſs into ſiccity or aridity, fit into paroxyſm; for the eaſieſt word, whatever it be, can never be tranſlated into one more eaſy. But eaſineſs and difficulty are merely relative, and if the preſent prevalence of our language ſhould invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be aſſiſted by thoſe words which now ſeem only to increaſe or produce obſcurity. For this reaſon I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonick and Roman interpretation, as to CHEER, to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of Engliſh may be aſſiſted by his own tongue.

The ſolution of all difficulties, and the ſupply of all defects, muſt be ſought in the examples ſubjoined to the various ſenſes of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authours.

When firſt I collected theſe authorities, I was deſirous that every quotation ſhould be uſeful to ſome other end than the illuſtration of a word; I therefore extracted from philoſophers principles of ſcience; from hiſtorians remarkable facts, from chymiſts complete proceſſes; from divines ſtriking exhortations; and from poets beautiful deſcriptions. Such is deſign, while it is yet at a diſtance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wiſdom into an alphabetical ſeries, I ſoon diſcovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the ſtudent, and was forced to depart from my ſcheme of including all that was pleaſing or uſeful in Engliſh literature, and reduce my tranſcripts very often to cluſters of words, in which ſcarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the wearineſs of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some paſſages I have yet ſpared, which may relieve the labour of verbal ſearches, and interſperſe with verdure and flowers the duſty deſarts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be conſidered as conveying the ſentiments or doctrine of their authours; the word for the ſake of which they are inſerted, with all its appendant clauſes, has been carefully preſerved; but it may ſometimes happen, by haſty detruncation, that the general tendency of the ſentence may be changed: the divine may deſert his tenets, or the philoſopher his ſyſtem.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as maſters of elegance or models of ſtile; but words muſt be ſought where they are uſed; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations ſerve no other purpoſe, than that of proving the bare exiſtence of words, and are therefore ſelected with leſs ſcrupulouſneſs than thoſe which are to teach their ſtructures and relations.

My purpoſe was to admit no teſtimony of living authours, that I might not be miſled by partiality, and that none of my cotemporaries might have reaſon to complain; nor have I departed from this reſolution, but when ſome performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory ſupplied me, from late books, with an example that was wanting, or when my heart, in the tenderneſs of friendſhip, ſolicited admiſſion for a favourite name.

PREFACE.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have ſtudiouſly endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the reſtoration, whoſe works I regard as th wells of Engliſh undefiled, as the pure ſources of genuine diction. Our language, for almoſt a century, has, by the concurrence of many cauſes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonick character, and deviating towards a Gallick ſtructure and phraſeology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the ground-work of ſtile, admitting among the additions of later times, only ſuch as may ſupply real deficiencies, ſuch as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate eaſily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeneſs antecedent to perfection, as well as of falſe refinement and declenſion, I have been cautious leſt my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and croud my book with words now no longer underſtood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excurſions. From the authours which roſe in the time of Elizabeth, a ſpeech might be formed adequate to all the purpoſes of uſe and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the tranſlation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phraſes of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenſer and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakeſpeare, few ideas would be loſt to mankind, for want of Engliſh words, in which they might be expreſſed.

It is not ſufficient that a word is found, unleſs it be ſo combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the ſentence; ſuch paſſages I have therefore choſen, and when it happened that any authour gave a definition of a term, or ſuch an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a ſupplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwiſe obſerved.

Some words, indeed, ſtand unſupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and conſtant analogy, or names of things ſeldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reaſon to doubt the exiſtence.

There is more danger of cenſure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will ſometimes ſeem to have been accumulated without neceſſity or uſe, and perhaps ſome will be found, which might, without loſs, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not haſtily to be charged with ſuperfluities: thoſe quotations which to careleſs or unſkilful peruſers appear only to repeat the ſame ſenſe, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diverſities of ſignification, or, at leaſt, afford different ſhades of the ſame meaning: one will ſhew the word applied to perſons, another to things; one will expreſs an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral ſenſe; one will prove the expreſſion genuine from an ancient authour; another will ſhew it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous ſentence is aſcertained by a paſſage clear and determinate; the word, how often ſoever repeated, appears with new aſſociates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes ſomething to the ſtability or enlargement of the language.

When words are uſed equivocally, I receive them in either ſenſe; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have ſometimes, tho' rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of ſentiments, by ſhewing how one authour copied the thoughts and diction of another: ſuch quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might juſtly be cenſured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual hiſtory.

The various ſyntactical ſtructures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto uſed, has made our ſtile capricious and indeterminate; when the different combinations of the ſame word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured to ſettle the orthography, diſplay the analogy, regulate the ſtructures, and aſcertain the ſignification of Engliſh words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have not always executed my own ſcheme, or ſatisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is ſtill controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are ſometimes too much contracted, and ſometimes too much diffuſed, the ſignifications are diſtinguiſhed rather with ſubtilty than ſkill, and the attention is harraſſed with unneceſſary minuteneſs.

The examples are too often injudiciouſly truncated, and perhaps ſometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a miſtaken ſenſe; for in making this collection I truſted more to memory, than, in a ſtate of diſquiet and embarraſſment, memory can contain, and purpoſed to ſupply at the review what was left incomplete in the firſt tranſcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though neceſſary and ſignificant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words moſt ſtudiouſly conſidered and exemplified, many ſenſes have eſcaped obſervation.

Yet theſe failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the ſtrength that undertakes it: To reſt below his own aim is incident to every one whoſe fancy is active, and whoſe views are comprehenſive; nor is any man ſatisfied with himſelf becauſe he has done much, but becauſe he can conceive little. When firſt I engaged in this work, I reſolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleaſed myſelf with a proſpect of the hours which I ſhould revel away in feaſts of literature, the obſcure receſſes of northern learning, which I ſhould enter and ranſack, the treaſures with which I expected every ſearch into thoſe neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I ſhould diſplay my acquiſitions to mankind. When I had thus enquired into the original of words, I reſolved to ſhow likewiſe my attention to things; to pierce deep into every ſcience, to enquire the nature of every ſubſtance of which I inſerted the name, to limit every idea by a definition ſtrictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate deſcription, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But theſe were the dreams of a poet doomed at laſt to wake a lexicographer. I ſoon found that it is too late to look for inſtruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my taſk, with thoſe I muſt finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to enquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my firſt experiments, that what I had not of my own was eaſily to be obtained: I ſaw that one enquiry only gave occaſion to another, that book referred to book, that to ſearch was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to perſue perfection, was, like the firſt inhabitants of Arcadia, to chace the ſun, which, when they had reached the hill where he ſeemed to reſt, was ſtill beheld at the ſame diſtance from them.

I then contracted my deſign, determining to confide in myſelf, and no longer to ſolicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than aſſiſtance: by this I obtained at leaſt one advantage, that I ſet limits to my work, which would in time be finiſhed, though not completed.

Deſpondency has never ſo far prevailed as to depreſs me to negligence; ſome faults will at laſt appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and perſevering activity. The nice and ſubtile ramifications of meaning were not eaſily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the neceſſity of diſentangling combinations, and ſeparating ſimilitudes. Many of the diſtinctions which to common readers appear uſeleſs and idle, will be found real and important by men verſed in the ſchool philoſophy, without which no dictionary ever ſhall be accurately compiled, or ſkilfully examined.

Some ſenſes however there are, which, though not the ſame, are yet ſo nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Moſt men think indiſtinctly, and therefore cannot ſpeak with exactneſs; and conſequently ſome examples might be indifferently put to either ſignification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but regiſter the language; who do not teach men how they ſhould think, but relate how they have hitherto expreſſed their thoughts.

The imperfect ſenſe of ſome examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compenſated by innumerable paſſages ſelected with propriety, and preſerved with exactneſs; ſome ſhining with ſparks of imagination, and ſome replete with treaſures of wiſdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but becauſe care will not always be ſucceſsful, and recollection or information come too late for uſe.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, muſt be frankly acknowledged; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable: I could not viſit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my ſkill in the dialect of navigation, nor viſit the warehouſes of merchants, and ſhops of artificers, to gain the names of commodities, utenſils, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books; what favourable accident, or eaſy enquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected; but it had been a hopeleſs labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and conteſting with the ſullenneſs of one, and the roughneſs of another.

To furniſh the academicians della Cruſca with words of this kind, a ſeries of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was profeſſedly written by Buonaroti; but I had no ſuch aſſiſtant, and therefore was content to want what they muſt have wanted likewiſe, had they not luckily been ſo ſupplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omiſſions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great meaſure caſual and mutable; many of their terms are formed for ſome temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a ſtate of increaſe or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore muſt be ſuffered to periſh with other things unworthy of preſervation.

Care will ſometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which ſeldom occur, will ſuffer thoſe to paſs by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return; he that is ſearching for rare and remote things, will neglect thoſe that are obvious and familiar: thus many of the moſt common and curſory words have been inſerted with little illuſtration, becauſe in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy thoſe which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things eaſy from confidence; the mind, afraid of greatneſs, and diſdainful of littleneſs, haſtily withdraws herſelf from painful ſearches, and paſſes with ſcornful rapidity over taſks not adequate to her powers, ſometimes too ſecure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort; ſometimes idle in a plain path, and ſometimes diſtracted in labyrinths, and diſſipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult becauſe it is large, even though all its parts might ſingly be performed with facility; where there are many things to be done, each muſt be allowed its ſhare of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole; nor can it be expected, that the ſtones which form the dome of a temple, ſhould be ſquared and poliſhed like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with ſo much application, I cannot but have ſome degree of parental fondneſs, it is natural to form conjectures. Thoſe who have been perſuaded to think well of my deſign, require that it ſhould fix our language, and put a ſtop to thoſe alterations which time and chance have hitherto been ſuffered to make in it without oppoſition. With this conſequence I will confeſs that I flattered myſelf for a while; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reaſon nor experience can juſtify. When we ſee men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promiſes to prolong life to a thouſand years; and with equal juſtice may the lexicographer be derided, who being able to produce no example of a nation that has preſerved their words and phraſes from mutability, ſhall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and ſecure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change ſublunary nature, or clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been inſtituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulſe intruders; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain; ſounds are too volatile and ſubtile for legal reſtraints; to enchain ſyllables, and to laſh the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to meaſure its deſires by its ſtrength. The French language has viſibly changed under the inſpection of the academy; the ſtile of Amelot's tranſlation of father Paul is obſerved by Le Courayer to be un peu paſſé; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and ſudden transformations of a language ſeldom happen; conqueſts and migrations are now very rare: but there are other cauſes of change, which, though ſlow in their operation, and inviſible in their progreſs, are perhaps as much ſuperiour to human reſiſtance, as the revolutions of the ſky, or intumeſcence of the tide. Commerce, however neceſſary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourſe with ſtrangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themſelves, muſt in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which ſerves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coaſts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouſe, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at laſt incorporated with the current ſpeech.

There are likewiſe internal cauſes equally forcible. The language moſt likely to continue long without alteration, would be that of a nation raiſed a little, and but a little, above barbarity, ſecluded from ſtrangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniencies of life; either without books, or, like ſome of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus buſied and unlearned, having only ſuch words as common uſe requires, would perhaps long continue to expreſs the ſame notions by the ſame ſigns. But no ſuch conſtancy can be expected in a people poliſhed by arts, and claſſed by ſubordination, where one part of the community is ſuſtained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Thoſe who have much leiſure to think, will always be enlarging the ſtock of ideas, and every increaſe of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from neceſſity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of ſpeculation, it will ſhift opinions; as any cuſtom is diſuſed, the words that expreſſed it muſt periſh with it; as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate ſpeech in the ſame proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various ſciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furniſhed with words deflected from their original ſenſe; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the excentrick virtue of a wild hero, and the phyſician of ſanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiouſneſs of ſpeech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which ſome words will be preferred, and others degraded; viciſſitudes of faſhion will enforce the uſe of new, or extend the ſignification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current ſenſe: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen muſt at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will at one time or other, by publick infatuation, riſe into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will uſe them with colloquial licentiouſneſs, confound diſtinction, and forget propriety. As politeneſs increaſes, ſome expreſſions will be conſidered as too groſs and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phraſes are therefore adopted, which muſt, for the ſame reaſons, be in time diſmiſſed. Swift, in his petty treatiſe on the Engliſh language, allows that new words muſt ſometimes be introduced, but propoſes that none ſhould be ſuffered to become obſolete. But what makes a word obſolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how ſhall it be continued, when it conveys an offenſive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once by diſuſe become unfamiliar, and by unfamiliarity unpleaſing.

There

There is another cauſe of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the preſent ſtate of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third diſtinct from both; and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the moſt conſpicuous accompliſhment, is ſkill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations croud upon his memory; and haſte or negligence, refinement or affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expreſſions.

The great peſt of ſpeech is frequency of tranſlation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting ſomething of its native idiom; this is the moſt miſchievous and comprehenſive innovation; ſingle words may enter by thouſands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the ſame, but new phraſeology changes much at once; it alters not the ſingle ſtones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy ſhould be eſtabliſhed for the cultivation of our ſtile, which I, who can never wiſh to ſee dependance multiplied, hope the ſpirit of Engliſh liberty will hinder or deſtroy, let them, inſtead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to ſtop the licence of tranſlatours, whoſe idleneſs and ignorance, if it be ſuffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes we fear be thus irreſiſtible, what remains but to acquieſce with ſilence, as in the other inſurmountable diſtreſſes of humanity? it remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated: tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration; we have long preſerved our conſtitution, let us make ſome ſtruggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology without a conteſt to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people ariſes from its authours: whether I ſhall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of Engliſh literature, muſt be left to time: much of my life has been loſt under the preſſures of diſeaſe; much has been trifled away; and much has always been ſpent in proviſion for the day that was paſſing over me; but I ſhall not think my employment uſeleſs or ignoble, if by my aſſiſtance foreign nations, and diſtant ages, gain acceſs to the propagators of knowledge, and underſtand the teachers of truth; if my labours afford light to the repoſitories of ſcience, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wiſh, I look with pleaſure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the ſpirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promiſed to myſelf: a few wild blunders, and riſible abſurdities, from which no work of ſuch multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furniſh folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt; but uſeful diligence will at laſt prevail, and there never can be wanting ſome who diſtinguiſh deſert; who will conſider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, ſince while it is haſtening to publication, ſome words are budding, and ſome falling away; that a whole life cannot be ſpent upon ſyntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be ſufficient; that he, whoſe deſign includes whatever language can expreſs, muſt often ſpeak of what he does not underſtand; that a writer will ſometimes be hurried by eagerneſs to the end, and ſometimes faint with wearineſs under a taſk, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always preſent; that ſudden fits of inadvertency will ſurprize vigilance, ſlight avocations will ſeduce attention, and caſual eclipſes will darken learning; and that the writer ſhall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yeſterday he knew with intuitive readineſs, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it ſhall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewiſe is performed; and though no book was ever ſpared out of tenderneſs to the authour, and the world is little ſolicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns; yet it may gratify curioſity to inform it, that the Engliſh Dictionary was written with little aſſiſtance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great; not in the ſoft obſcurities of retirement, or under the ſhelter of academick bowers, but amidſt inconvenience and diſtraction, in ſickneſs and in ſorrow: and it may repreſs the triumph of malignant criticiſm to obſerve, that if our language is not here fully diſplayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and compriſed in a few volumes, are yet, after the toil of ſucceſſive ages, inadequate and deluſive; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not ſecure them from the cenſure of Beni; if the embodied criticks of France, when fifty years had been ſpent upon their work, were obliged to change its oeconomy, and give their ſecond edition another form, I may ſurely be contented without the praiſe of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of ſolitude, what would it avail me? I have protracted my work till moſt of thoſe whom I wiſhed to pleaſe, have ſunk into the grave, and ſucceſs and miſcarriage are empty ſounds: I therefore diſmiſs it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from cenſure or from praiſe.

THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welſh were the firſt poſſeſſors of this iſland, whoſe names are recorded, and are therefore in civil hiſtory always conſidered as the predeceſſors of the preſent inhabitants; yet the deduction of the Engliſh language, from the earlieſt times of which we have any knowledge to its preſent ſtate, requires no mention of them: for we have ſo few words, which can, with any probability, be referred to Britiſh roots, that we juſtly regard the Saxons and Welſh, as nations totally diſtinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons ſeized this country, they ſuffered the Britains to live among them in a ſtate of vaſſalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble ſervices. But it is ſcarcely poſſible, that a nation, however depreſſed, ſhould have been mixed in conſiderable numbers with the Saxons without ſome communication of their tongue, and therefore it may, with great reaſon, be imagined, that thoſe, who were not ſheltered in the mountains, periſhed by the ſword.

The whole fabrick and ſcheme of the Engliſh language is Gothick or Teutonick: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except thoſe where the Sclavonian is ſpoken. Of theſe languages Dr. Hickes has thus exhibited the genealogy.

GOTHICK,

Anglo-Saxon,	Francick,	Cimbrick,
Dutch,	German.	Iſlandick,
Friſick,		Norwegian,
Engliſh.		Swediſh,
		Daniſh.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the goſpels ſomewhat mutilated, which, from the ſilver with which the characters are adorned, is called the ſilver book. It is now preſerved at Upſal, and has been twice publiſhed. Whether the diction of this venerable manuſcript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it ſeems however to exhibit the moſt ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonick race, and the Saxon, which is the original of the preſent Engliſh, was either derived from it, or both deſcended from ſome common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they firſt entred Britain, cannot now be known. They ſeem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their ſpeech therefore, having been always curſory and extemporaneous, muſt have been artleſs and unconnected, without any modes of tranſition or involution of clauſes; which abruptneſs and inconnection may be obſerved even in their later writings. This barbarity may be ſuppoſed to have continued during their wars with the Britains, which for a time left them no leiſure for ſofter ſtudies; nor is there any reaſon for ſuppoſing it abated, till the year 570, when Auguſtine came from Rome to convert them to Chriſtianity. The Chriſtian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and ſo gained, from time to time, ſome knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language, capable of expreſſing all the ſentiments of a civiliſed people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphraſe or imitation of Boethius, and his ſhort preface, which I have ſelected as the firſt ſpecimen of ancient Engliſh.

This may perhaps be conſidered as a ſpecimen of the Saxon in its higheſt ſtate of purity, for here are ſcarcely any words borrowed from the Roman dialects.

Of the following verſion of the goſpels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conqueſt, and therefore may properly be inſerted here.

Tranſlations ſeldom afford juſt ſpecimens of a language, and leaſt of all thoſe in which a ſcrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, becauſe they retain the phraſeology and ſtructure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the ſame book, being tranſlated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into compariſon with another. For this purpoſe I have placed the Saxon verſion and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in oppoſite columns; becauſe the convenience of eaſy collation ſeems greater than that of regular chronology.

LUK, CHAP. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a preſt Zacarye by name: of the ſort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren juſte bifore God: goynge in alle the maundementis and juſtifyingis of the Lord withouten playnt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it bifel that whanne Zacarye ſchould do the office of preſthod in the ordir of his courſe to fore God.

5 Aftir the cuſtom of the preſthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encenſen.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encenſying.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him: and ſtood on the right half of the auter of encenſe.

8 And Zacarye ſeynge was afrayed: and drede fel upon him.

9 And the aungel ſayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not: for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wif ſchal bere to thee a ſone: and his name ſchal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng ſchal be to thee: and manye ſchulen have joye in his natyvyte.

11 For he ſchal be great bifore the Lord: and he ſchal not drinke wyn ne ſydyr, and he ſchal be fulfild with the holy goſt yit of his modir wombe.

12 And he ſchal converte manye of the children of Iſrael to her Lord God.

13 And he ſchal go bifore in the ſpiryte and vertu of Helye: and he ſchal turne the hertis of the fadris to the ſonis, and men out of beleeve: to the prudence of juſt men, to made redy a perfyt puple to the Lord.

46 Ða cpæð Maria. Min ſapel mæriað Dihten.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the aungel: wherof ſchal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon fer in hir dayes.

15 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to him; for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nygh bifore God, and Y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to evangeliſe to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſchalt be doumbe.

16 And thou ſchalt not mowe ſpeke, till into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen be don, for thou haſt not beleved to my wordis, whiche ſchulen be fulfild in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidynge Zacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gede out and myghte not ſpeke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde ſeyn a viſioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwellide ſtille doumbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of his office weren fulfillid: he wente into his hous.

20 And aftir theſe dayes Elizabeth his wif conſeyvede and hidde hir fyve monethis and ſeyde.

21 For ſo the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take awey my reproof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ſent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a maydun weddid to a man: whos name was Joſeph of the hous of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hir, and ſayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: bleſſid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne ſche hadde herd: ſche was troublid in his word, and thoughte what manner ſalutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel ſeid to hir, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou haſt founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou ſchalt conſeyve in wombe, and ſchalt bere a ſone: and thou ſchalt clepe his name Jheſus.

28 This ſhall be gret: and he ſchal be clepid the ſone of higheſte, and the Lord God ſchal geve to him the ſeete of Dauith his fadir.

29 And he ſchal regne in the hous of Jacob withouten ende, and of his rewme ſchal be noon ende.

30 And Marye ſeyde to the aungel, on what maner ſchal this thing be don? for Y knowe not man.

31 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to hir, the holy Goſt ſchal come fro above into thee: and the vertu of the higheſte ſchal ouer ſchadowe thee: and therfore that holy thing that ſchal be borun of thee: ſchal be clepide the ſone of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thi coſyn, and ſche alſo hath conſeyved a ſone in hir eelde, and this monethe is the ſixte to hir that is clepid bareyn.

33 For every word ſchal not be impoſſyble anentis God.

34 And Marye ſeide to the hond maydun of the Lord: be it doon to me aftir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haſte into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And ſche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the ſalutacioun of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfild with the holy Goſt.

38 And cryede with a gret voice and ſeyde, bleſſid be thou among wymmen and bleſſid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And whereof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi ſalutacioun was maad in my eeris: the yong child gladide in joye in my wombe.

41 And bleſſid be thou that haſt beleeved: for thilke thingis that ben ſeid of the Lord to thee ſchulen be parfytly don.

45 For he that is mighti hath don to me grete thingis, and his name is holy.

46 And his merſy is fro kyndrede into kyndredis to men that dreden him.

47 He made myght in his arm, he ſcateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

48 He ſette doun myghty men fro ſeete and enhaunſide meke men.

49 He hath fulfillid hungry men with goodis, and he has left riche men voide.

50 He havynge mynde of his mercy took up Iſrael his child,

51 As he hath ſpokun to oure fadris, to Abraham, and to his ſeed into worldis.

52 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned agen into his hous.

53 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfillid to Elizabeth, and ſche bar a ſon.

54 And the neyghbouris and coſyns of hir herden that the Lord hadde magnyfied his mercy with hir, and thei thankiden him.

55 And it was doon in the eightithe day thei camen to circumſide the child, and thei clepiden him Zacarye by the name of his fadir.

56 And his modir anſweride and ſeide, nay; but he ſchal be clepid Jon.

57 And thei ſeiden to hir, for no man is in thi kynrede that is clepid this name.

58 And thei bikenyden to his fadir, what he wolde that he were clepid.

59 And he axinge a poyntel wroot ſeiynge, Jon is his name, and alle men wondriden.

60 And annoon his mouth was openyd and his tunge, and he ſpak and bleſſide God.

61 And drede was maad on all hir neighbouris, and all the wordis weren pupliſchid on alle the mounteynes of Judee.

62 And alle men that herden puttiden in her herte, and ſeiden what manner child ſcal this be, for the hond of the Lord was with him.

63 And Zacarye his fadir was fulfillid with the holy Goſt, and profeciede and ſeide.

64 Bleſſid be the Lord God of Iſrael, for he has viſitid and maad redempcioun of his puple.

65 And he has rered to us an horn of helthe in the hous of Dauith his child.

66 As he ſpak by the mouth of hiſe holy prophetis that weren fro the world.

67 Helth fro oure enemyes, and fro the hond of alle men that hatiden us.

68 To do merſy with oure fadris, and to have mynde of his holy teſtament.

69 The grete ooth that he ſwoor to Abraham our fadir,

70 To geve himſelf to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hond of oure enemyes ſerve to him,

71 In holyneſſe and rightwiſneſſe before him, in alle our dayes.

72 And thou child ſchalt be clepid the profete of the higheſte, for thou ſchalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hiſe weyes.

73 To geve ſcience of heelth to his puple into remiſſioun of her ſynnes.

74 By the inwardeneſs of the merſy of oure God, in the which he ſpringyng up fro on high hath viſited us.

75 To geve light to them that ſitten in derkneſſis, and in ſchadowe of deeth, to dreſſe oure feet into the weye of pees;

76 And the child wexide, and was confortid in ſpiryt, and was in deſert placis till to the day of his ſchewing to Yſrael.

Of

Of the Saxon poetry ſome ſpecimen is neceſſary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their ſyllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impoſſible, to recover, excludes us from that pleaſure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The firſt poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and conſequently muſt have depended upon the quantity of their ſyllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and cloſe their verſes with correſpondent ſounds.

The two paſſages, which I have ſelected, contain apparently the rudiments of our preſent lyrick meaſures, and the writers may be juſtly conſidered as the genuine anceſtors of the Engliſh poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the preſent Engliſh may be plainly diſcovered; this change ſeems not to have been the effect of the Norman conqueſt, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the firſt hundred years after it; the language muſt therefore have been altered by cauſes like thoſe which, notwithſtanding the care of writers and ſocieties inſtituted to obviate them, are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a ſpecimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry seem to have been written, of which I have inserted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Glouceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own form and terminations; for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto the language uſed in this iſland, however different in ſucceſſive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be aſſigned, when the Saxon may be ſaid to ceaſe, and the Engliſh to commence. Robert of Glouceſter however, who is placed by the criticks in the thirteenth century, ſeems to have uſed a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor Engliſh; in his work therefore we ſee the tranſition exhibited, and, as he is the firſt of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extenſive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the ſame meaſure with the foregoing authour of St. Margarite, which, poliſhed into greater exactneſs, appeared to our anceſtors ſo ſuitable to the genius of the Engliſh language, that it was continued in uſe almoſt to the middle of the ſeventeenth century.

Heueden, (þat were of yſmyte,) & oþer lymes alſo,
Flete in blode al fram þe grounde, ar þe batayle were ydo.
Wanne þat blod ſtod al abrod, vas þer gret wo y nou.
Nys yt reuþe vorto hure, þat me ſo volc ſlou?
Ac our ſuete Louerd atte laſte ſlewede ys ſuete grace,
And ſende þe Criſtyne Englyſſe men þe mayſtrye in þe place,
And þe heþene men of Denemarch bynepe were echon.
Nou nas þer gut in Denemarch Criſtendom non;
þe kyng her after to holy chyrche ys herte þe more drou,
And tepegede wel & al ys lond, as hii agte, wel y nou.
Seyn Swythyn at Wyncheſtre byſſop þo was,
And Alcſton at Syrebourne, þat amendede muche þys cas. þe kyng was wel þe betere man þoru her beyre red,
Tuenty wynter he was kyng, ar he were ded.
At Wyncheſtre he was ybured, as he gut lyþ þere.
Hys tueye ſones he gef ys lond, as he byget ham ere.
Adelbold, the eldore, þe kynedom of Eſtſex,
And ſuþþe Adelbrygt, Kent and Weſtſex.
Eygte hondred ger yt was and ſeuene and fyfty al ſo,
After þat God anerþe com, þat þys dede was ydo.
Boþe hii wuſte by her tyme wel her kynedom,
At þe vyfte ger Adelbold out of þys lyue nome.
At Syrebourne he was ybured, & ys broþer Adelbrygt
His kynedom adde after hym, as lawe was and rygt.
By ys daye þe verde com of þe heþene men wel prout,
And Hamteſſyre and deſtrude Wyncheſtre al out.
And þat lond folc of Hamteſſyre her red þo nome
And of Barcſſyre, and fogte and þe ſſrewen ouercome.
Adelbrygt was kyng of Kent geres folle tene,
And of Weſtſex bote vyue, þo he deyde ych wene.

ADELRED was after hym kyng y mad in þe place,
Eygte hondred & ſeuene & fyxty as in þe ger of grace.
þe vorſte ger of ys kynedom þe Deneys þycke com,
And robbede and deſtrude, and cytes vaſte nome.
Mayſtres hii adde of her oſt, as yt were dukes, tueye,
Hynguar and Hubba, þat ſſrewen were beye.
In Eſt Angle hii byleuede, to reſt hem as yt were,
Myd her oſt al þe wynter, of þe vorſt gere.
þe oþer ger hii dude hem vorþ, & ouer Homber come,
And ſlowe to grounde & barnde, & Euerwyk nome.
þer was batayle ſtrong y nou, vor yſlawe was þere
Oſryc kyng of Homberlond, & monye þat with hym were.
þo Homberlond was þus yſſend, hii wende & tounes nome.
So þat atte laſte to Eſtangle agen hym come.
þer hii barnde & robbede, & þat folc to grounde ſlowe,
And, as wolues among ſſep, reulych hem to drowe.
Seynt Edmond was þo her kyng, & þo he ſey þat deluol cas
þat me morþrede ſo þat folc, & non amendement nas,
He ches leuere to deye hymſulf, þat ſuch ſorwe to yſey.
He dude hym vorþ among ys ſon, nolde he noþyg ſle.
Hii nome hym & ſcourged hym, & ſuþþe naked hym bounde
To a tre, & to hym ſſote, & made hym mony a wounde, þat þe arewe were on hym þo þycce, þat no ſtede nas byleuede.
Atte laſte hii martred hym, & ſmyte of ys heued.
þe ſyxte ger of þe crounement of Aldered þe kyng
A nywe oſt com into þys lond, gret þoru alle þyng,
And anon to Redynge robbede and ſlowe.
þe king and Alfred ys broþer nome men ynowe,
Mette hem, and a batayle ſmyte vp Aſſeſdoune.
þer was mony moder chyld, þat ſone lay þer doune.
þe batayle ylaſte vorte nygt, and þer were aſlawe
Vyf dukes of Denemarch, ar hii wolde wyþ drawe,
And mony þouſend of oþer men, & þo gonne hii to ſle;
Ac hii adde alle ybe aſſend, gyf þe nygt nadde y be.
Tueye batayles her after in þe ſulf gere
Hii ſmyte, and at boþe þe heþene mayſtres were.

þe kyng Aldered ſone þo þen wey of deþ nome,
As yt vel, þe vyfty ger of ys kynedom.
At Wymbourne he was ybured, as God gef þat cas, þe gode Alfred, ys broþer, after hym kyng was.

ALFRED, þys noble man, as in þe ger of grace he nom
Eygte hondred & fyxty & tuelue þe kynedom.
Arſt he adde at Rome ybe, &, vor ys grete wyſdom,
þe pope Leon hym bleſſede, þo he þuder com,
And þe kynge's croune of hys lond, þat in þys lond gut ys:
And he led hym to be kyng, ar he kyng were ywys.
An he was kyng of Engelond, of alle þat þer come,
þat vorſt þus ylad was of þe pope of Rome,
An ſuþþe oþer after hym of þe erchebyſſopes echon.
So þat hyuor hym pore kyng nas þer non.
In þe Souþ ſyde of Temeſe nyne batayles he nome
Agen þe Deneys þe vorſt ger of ys kynedom.
Nye ger he was þus in þys lond in batayle & in wo,
An ofte ſyþe aboue was, and bynepe oftor mo;
So longe, þat hym nere by leuede bote þre ſſyren in ys hond,
Hamteſſyre, and Wylteſſyre, and Somerſete, of al ys lond.
A day as he wery was, and aſuoddrynge hym nome
And ys men were ywend auyſſeþ, Seyn Cutbert to hym com.
" Ich am," he ſeyde, " Cutbert, to þe ycham ywend
" To brynge þe gode tytynges. Fram God ycham yſend.
" Vor þat folc of þys lond to ſynne her wylle al geue,
" And gut nolle herto her ſynnes byleue
" þoru me & oþer halewen, þat in þys lond were ybore;
" þan vor gou byddeþ God, wanne we beþ hym byuore,
" Hour Louerd myd ys eyen of milce on þe lokeþ þeruore,
" And þy poer þe wole gyue agen, þat þou aſt ney verlore.
" And þat þou þer of ſoþ yſe, þou ſſalt abbe tokynynge.
" Vor þym men, þat beþ ago to day auyſſynge,
" In lepes & in couſles ſo muche vyſs hii ſiolde hym brynge,
" þat ech man wondry ſſal of ſo gret cacchynge.
" And þe mor vor þe harde vorſte, þat þe water yfrore hys,
" þat þe more agen þe kunde of vyſſynge yt ys.
" Of ſerue yt wel agen God, and ylef me ys meſſager,
" And þou ſſall þy wylle abyde, as ycham ytold her."
As þys kyng herof awoc, and of þys fygte þogte,
Hys vyſſares come to hym, & ſo gret won of fyſs hym brogte,
þat wonder yt was, & namelyche vor þe weder was ſo colde.
þo lyuede þe god man wel, þat Seyn Cutbert adde ytold.
In Deuenyſſyre þer after aryuede of Deneys
þre and tuenty ſſypuol men, all agen þe peys, þe kynge's broþer of Denemarch duc of oſt was:
Oure kynge's men of Engelond mette hem by cas,
And ſmyte þer an batayle, and her gret duc ſlowe,
And eygte hondred & fourty men, & her caronyes to drowe.
þo kyng Alfred hurde þys, ys herte gladede þo,
þat lond folc to hym come ſo þycke ſo yt mygte go,
Of Somerſete, of Wylteſſyre, of Hamteſſyre þerto,
Euere as he wende, and of ys owe folc al ſo.
So þat he adde poer ynou, and atte laſte hii come,
And a batayle at Edendone agen þe Deneys nome,
And ſlowe to grounde, & wonne þe mayſtre of the velde.
þe kyng & ys grete duke bygonne hem to gelde
To þe kyng Alfred to ys wylle, and oſtages toke,
Vorto wende out of ys lond, gyf he yt wolde loke;
And gut þerto, vor ys loue, to auonge Criſtendom.
Kyng Gurmund, þe hexte kyng, vorſt þer to come.
Kyng Alfred ys godfader was. & ybaptyſed ek þer were þretty of her hexte dukes. and muche of þat folc þere
Kyng Alfred hem huld wyþ hym tuelf dawes as he hende,
And ſuþþe he gef hem large gyftes, and let hym wende.
Hii, þat nolde Criſtyn be, of lande ſlowe þo,
And bygonde ſee in France dude wel muche wo.
gut þe ſſrewen come agen, and muche wo here wrogte.
Ac þe kyng Alfred atte laſte to ſſame hem euere brogte.

Kyng

Kyng Alfred was þe wyſoſt kyng, þat long was byuore.
Vor þey me ſegge þe lawes beþ in worre tyme vorlore,
Nas yt nogt ſo his daye. vor þey he in worre were,
Lawes he made rygtuollore, and ſtrengore þan er were.
Clerc he was god ynou, and gut, as me telleþ me;
He was more þan ten ger old, ar he coupe ys abece.
Ac ys gode moder ofte ſmale gyftes hym tok,
Vor to byleue oþer ple, and lokȳ on ys boke.
So þat by por clergye ys rygt lawes he wonde,
þat neuere er nere y mad, to gouernȳ ys lond.
And vor þe worre was ſo muche of þe luþer Deneys, þe men of þys ſulue lond were of þe worſe peys.
And robbede and ſlowe oþere, þeruor he byuonde,
þat þer were hondredes in eche contreye of ys lond,
And in ech toune of þe hondred a teþynge were alſo,
And þat ech man wyþoute gret lond in teþynge were ydo,
And þat ech man knewe oþer þat in teþynge were,
And wuſte ſomdel of her ſtat, gyf me þu vp hem bere.
So ſtreyt he was, þat þey me ledde amydde weyes heye
Seluer, þat non man ne dorſte yt nyme, þey he yt ſeye.
Abbeys he rerde mony on, and mony ſtudes ywys.
Ac Wyncheſtrye he rerde on, þat nywe munſtre ycluped ys.
Hys lyf eygte and tuenty ger in ys kynedom ylaſte.
After ys deþ he wos ybured at Wyncheſtre atte laſte.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himſelf informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which compriſing a relation of many different particulars, conſequently required the uſe of many words and phraſes, may be properly ſpecified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have choſen the firſt, becauſe it ſhows, in ſome meaſure, the ſtate of European ſcience as well as of the Engliſh tongue; and the ſecond, becauſe it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expreſſion.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may ſee the ſterre tranſmontane, that is clept the ſterre of the ſee, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode ſterre. But men ſeen another ſterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the ſchip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode ſterre, right ſo don ſchip men bezonde the parties, be the ſterre of the Southe, the which ſterre apperethe not to us. And this ſterre, that is toward the Northe, that wee clepen the lode ſterre, ne apperethe not to hem. For whiche cauſe, men may wel perceyve, that the lond and the ſee ben of rownde ſchapp and forme. For the partie of the firmament ſchewethe in o contree, that ſchewethe not in another contree. And men may well preven be experience and ſotyle compaſſement of wytt, that zif a man fond paſſages be ſchippes, that wolde go to ſerchen the world, men myghte go be ſchippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, aftre that I have ſeyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Aſtrolabre, that the ſterre that is clept the tranſmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthe toward the parties ſeptemtrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certyn mynutes. For I my ſelf have meſured it by the Aſtrolabre. Now ſchulle ze knowe, that azen the Tranſmontayne, is the tother ſterre, that is clept Antartyke; as I have ſeyd before. And tho 2 ſterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem turnethe alle the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: ſo that tho ſterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; ſo that it hathe als mochel aboven, as it hathe benethen. Aftre this, I have gon toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men ſeen firſt the ſterre Antartyk. And ſo fer I have gon more in tho contrees, that I have founde that ſterre more highe; ſo that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) aftre goynge be ſee and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have ſpoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the ſterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and ſchippynge, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee ſcholde have ſeen alle the roundneſſe of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have ſeyd zou be forn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 ſterres: the whiche halfondelle I have ſeyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have ſeyn toward the Northe, undre the Tranſmontane 62 degrees and 10 mynutes; and toward the partie meridionalle, I have ſeen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have ſeen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and ſo there ne faylethe but that I have ſeen alle the firmament, ſaf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundneſſe of the firmament holt 90 degrees: ſo there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half, of the fourthe partie. And alſo I have ſeen the 3 parties of alle the roundneſſe of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I ſeye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and ſchippynge and conduyt: and alle weyes he ſcholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben ſtreghte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the Tranſmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn under us, ben feet azenſt feet. For alle the parties of ſee and of lond han here appoſitees, habitables or trepaſſables, and thei of this halt and bezond half. And wytethe wel, that aftre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Preſte John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotlond or from Englond toward Jeruſalem, men gon upward alweys. For oure lond is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Weſt: and the lond of Preſtre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Eſt: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and alſo highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day: For the erthe and the ſee ben of round forme and ſchapp, as I have ſeyd beforn. And that that men gon upward to o coſt, men gon dounward to another coſt. Alſo zee have herd me ſeye, that Jeruſalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and ſchewen there, be a ſpere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that ſchewethe no ſchadwe on no ſyde. And that it ſcholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytneſſethe it in the Pſautre, where he ſeythe, Deus operatus eſt ſalutē in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the Weſt, for to go toward Jeruſalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jeruſalem, unto other confynyes of the ſuperficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men gon bezonde tho iourneyes, towarde Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyronynge the roundneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, undre oure contrees on this half. And therfore hathe it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd cownted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed ſometyme from oure contrees, for to go ſerche the world. And ſo he paſſed Ynde, and the yles bezonde Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and ſo longe he wente be ſee and lond, and ſo enviround the world be many ſeyſons, that he fond an yle, where he herde ſpeke his owne langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, ſuche wordes as men ſpeken to beſtes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I ſeye, that he had gon ſo longe, be londe and be ſee, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envirounynge, that is to ſeye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have paſſed forthe, til he had foundee his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and ſo he loſte moche peynefulle labour, as him ſelf ſeyde, a gret while aftre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle aftre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempeſt of the ſee toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle; he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd ſpeke his owne langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was poſſible thinge. But how it ſemethe to ſymple men unlerned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and alſo that men ſcholde falle towarde the hevene, from undre! But that may not be, upon leſſe, than wee mowe falle toward hevene, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe, that men duelle, outher aboven or benethen, it ſemethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than ony other folk. And righte as it ſemethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte ſo it ſemethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere reſoun, the erthe and the ſee, that ben ſo grete and ſo hevy, ſcholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therfore ſeithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui ſuſpendi terrā ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be poſſible thing, that men may ſo envyronne alle the world, natheles of a 1000 perſones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the gretneſſe of the erthe and of the ſee, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde redye him perfitely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundneſſe and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, aftre the opynyoun of the olde wiſe aſtronomeres. And here ſeyenges I repreve noughte. But aftre my lytylle wyt, it ſemethe me, ſavynge here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere underſtondynge, I ſeye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than aftre, be the gret compaſs deviſed be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; ſo that in as many parties, as the grete compas ſchal be departed, in als manye, ſchalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the ſpaces ben leſſe. Now thanne, be the gret compas repreſented for the firmament, and the litille compas repreſented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyſed, be aſtronomeres, in 12 ſignes; and every ſigne is devyſed in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Alſo, be the erthe devyſed in als many parties, as the firmament; and lat every partye anſwere to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that aftre the auctoures of aſtronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe anſweren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 ſithes; and than thei ben 31500 myles, every of 8 furlonges, aftre myles of oure contree. So moche hathe the erthe in roundneſſe, and of heghte enviroun, aftre myn opynyoun and myn undirſtondynge. And zee ſchulle undirſtonde, that aftre the opynyoun of olde wiſe philoſophres and aſtronomeres, oure contree ne Irelond ne Wales ne Scotlond ne Norweye ne the other yles coſtynge to hem, ne ben not in the ſuperficyalte cownted aboven the erthe; as it ſchewethe be alle the bokes of aſtronomye. For the ſuperficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben deſcendynge toward the Weſt. And alſo theſe yles of Ynde, which beth evene azenſt us, beth noght reckned in the climates: for thei ben azenſt us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates ſtrecchen hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundevylle knyghte aboveſeyd, (alle thoughe I bē unworthi) that departed from oure contrees and paſſed the ſee, the zeer of grace 1322. that have paſſed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle ſtraunge places, and have ben in many a fulle gode honourable companye, and at many a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myſelf, for myn unable inſuffiſance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my ſelf) to reſte: for gowtes, artetykes, that me diſtreynen, tho diffynen the ende of my labour, azenſt my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge ſolace in my wrecched reſte, recordynge the tyme paſſed, I have fulfilled theiſe thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherfore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it pleſe hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I ſchalle preye for hem. And alle tho that ſeyn for me a Pater noſter, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my ſynnes, I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his pleſance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I ſchalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beſeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godeneſſe and grace comethe fro, that he voucheſaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire ſoules with inſpiracioun of the Holy Goſt, in makynge defence of alle hire goſtly enemyes here in erthe, to hire ſalvacioun, bothe of body and ſoule; to worſchipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, with outen begynnynge and withouten endynge; that is, with outen qualitee, good, and with outen quantytee, gret; that in alle places is preſent, and alle thinges contenynynge; the whiche that no goodneſſe may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynytee lyvethe and regnethe God, be alle worldes and be alle tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

The firſt of our authours, who can be properly ſaid to have written Engliſh, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confeſſion of a Lover, calls Chaucer his diſciple, and may therefore be conſidered as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to ſpeke of the commune,
It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befalle in fondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All ſodeinly, er it be wiſt,
A tunne, whan his lie ariſt
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Whiche els ſhulde nought gone out.
And eke full ofte a littell ſkare
Vpon a banke, er men be ware,
Let in the ſtreme, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it ſhall reſtreine.
Where lawe failleth, errour groweth.
He is not wiſe, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miſwent,
And thervpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in ſondrie wiſe:
But what man wolde him ſelfe auiſe
His conſcience, and nought miſuſe,
He maie well at the firſt excuſe
His god, whiche euer ſtant in one,
In him there is defaute none
So muſt it ſtande vpon vs ſelue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenarly vpon vs all.
For man is cauſe of that ſhall fall.

The hiſtory of our language is now brought to the point at which the hiſtory of our poetry is generally ſuppoſed to commence, the time of the illuſtrious Geoffry Chaucer, who may perhaps, with great juſtice, be ſtiled the firſt of our verſifyers who wrote poetically. He does not however appear to have deſerved all the praiſe which he has received, or all the cenſure that he has ſuffered. Dryden, who miſtakes genius for learning, and, in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, aſcribes to Chaucer the firſt refinement of our numbers, the firſt production of eaſy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more poliſhed languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harſh terms for having vitiated his native ſpeech by whole cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find ſmooth numbers and eaſy rhymes, of which Chaucer is ſuppoſed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does allow us to diſcover with particular exactneſs; but the works of Gower and Lydgate ſufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and ſome improvements he undoubtedly made by the various diſpoſitions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he ſeems to have been happy and judicious. I have ſelected ſeveral ſpecimens both of his proſe and verſe; and among them, part of his tranſlation of Boetius, to which another verſion, made in the time of queen Mary, is oppoſed. It would be improper to quote very ſparingly an authour of ſo much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book ſo generally known.

CHAUCER.

ALAS! I wepyng am conſtrained to begin verſe of ſorowfull matter, that whilom in floriſhyng ſtudie made delitable ditees. For lo! rendyng muſes of Poetes enditen to me thinges to be writen, and drerie teres. At laſte no drede ne might overcame tho muſes, that thei ne werren fellowes, and foloweden my waie, that is to ſaie, when I was exiled, thei that weren of my youth whilom welfull and grene, comforten now ſorowfull wierdes of me olde man: for elde is comen unwarely upon me, haſted by the harmes that I have, and ſorowe hath commaunded his age to be in me. Heres hore aren ſhad overtimeliche upon my hed: and the ſlacke ſkinne trembleth of mine empted bodie. Thilke deth of men is welefull, that he ne cometh not in yeres that be ſwete, but cometh to wretches often icleped: Alas, alas! with how defe an ere deth cruell turneth awaie fro wretches, and naieth for to cloſe wepyng eyen. While fortune unfaithfull favoured me with light godes, that ſorowfull houre, that is to ſaie, the deth, had almoſte drente myne hedde: but now for fortune cloudie hath chaunged her decevable chere to mewarde, myne unpitous life draweth along ungreable dwellynges. O ye my frendes, what, or whereto avaunted ye me to ben welfull? For he that hath fallin, ſtode in no ſtedfaſt degre.

IN the mene while, that I ſtill record theſe thynges with my ſelf, and marked my wepelie complainte with office of poinctell: I ſaugh ſtondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by ſemblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, ſeyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with ſoche vigour and ſtrength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it ſo, that ſhe were full of ſo grete age, that menne woulden not trowen in no manere, that ſhe were of our elde.

The ſtature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for ſometyme ſhe conſtrained and ſhronke her ſelven, like to the common meſure of menne: And ſometyme it ſemed, that ſhe touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when ſhe hove her hedde higher, ſhe perced the ſelf heven, ſo that the ſight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and ſubtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes ſhe had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her ſelf declaryng, and ſhewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darkneſſe of a forleten and diſpiſed elde had duſked and darked, as it is wonte to darke by ſmoked Images.

In the nethereſt hemme and border of theſe clothes menne redde iwoven therein a Grekiſhe A. that ſignifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hieſt bordure, a Grekiſhe C. that ſignifieth the life contemplatiſe. And betwene theſe two letters there were ſeen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the nethereſt letter to the uppereſt: natheleſſe handes of ſome men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by ſtrength, and

COLVILE.

ITHAT in tyme of proſperite, and floryſhing ſtudye, made pleaſaunte and delectable dities, or verſes: alas now beyng heauy and ſad ouerthrowen in aduerſitie, am compelled to ſele and taſt heuines and greif. Beholde the muſes Poeticall, that is to ſaye: the pleaſure that is in poetes verſes, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ theſe verſes in meter, and the ſorowfull verſes do wet my wretched face with very waterye teares, yſſuinge out of my eyes for ſorowe. Whiche muſes no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or baniſhment. Sometyme the ioye of happy and luſty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and nowe the courſe of ſorowfull olde age cauſeth me to reioyſe. For haſty old age vnloked for is come vpon me with al her incommodities and euyls, and ſorow hath commaunded and broughte me into the ſame old age, that is to ſay: that ſorowe cauſeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled ſkynne trembleth my fleſh, cleane conſumed and waſte with ſorowe. Mannes death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is luſtye, and in pleaſure or welth: but in time of aduerſitie, when it is often deſyred. Alas Alas howe dull and deffe be the eares of cruel death vnto men in miſery that would fayne dye: add yet refuſythe to come and ſhutte vp theyr carefull wepyng eyes. Whiles that falſe fortune fauoryd me with her tranſitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almoſt ouercome me. That is to ſay deathe was redy to oppreſſe me when I was in proſperitie. Nowe for by cauſe that fortune beynge turned, from proſperitie into aduerſitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyuable countenaunce: my wretched life is yet prolonged and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes why haue you ſo often boſted me, ſayinge that I was happy when I had honor poſſeſſions riches, and authoritie whych be tranſitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no ſtedefaſt degre.

WHYLES that I conſiderydde pryuylye with my ſelfe the thynges before ſayd, and deſcrybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I ſawe a woman ſtand ouer my head of a reuerend countenaunce, hauyng quycke and glyſteryng clere eye, aboue the common ſorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of ſtrength, although ſhe ſemed ſo olde that by no meanes ſhe is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her ſtature is of douteful knowledge, for nowe ſhe ſhewethe herſelfe at the commen length or ſtatur of men, and other whiles ſhe ſemeth ſo high, as though ſhe touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when ſhe wold ſtretch fourth her hed hygher, it alſo perced thorough heauen, ſo that mens ſyghte coulde not attaine to behold her. Her veſtures or cloths were perfyt of the finyſte thredes, and ſubtyll workemanſhyp, and of ſubſtaunce permament, whych veſturs ſhe had wouen with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne ſaiynge. The kynde or beawtye of the whyche veſtures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignoraunce of oldenes forgotten hadde obſcuryd and darkened, as the ſmoke is wont to darken Images that ſtand nyghe the ſmoke. In the lower parte of the ſaid veſtures was read the greke letter P. wouen whych ſignifyeth practiſe or actyffe, and in the hygher part of the veſtures the greke letter T. whych eſtandeth for theorica, that ſignifieth ſpeculacion or contemplation. And betwene both the ſayd letters were ſene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a paſſage or waye in ſteppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is vnderſtand from practys or actyf, unto everiche manne of 'hem had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And forsothe this forsaied woman bare smale bokes in her right hande, and in her lefe hand she bare a scepter. And when she sawe these Poeticall muses approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (q'ð she) hath suffered approchen to this sike manne these commen strompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswagen not his sorowes with remedies, but thei would feden and norishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynges of talentes of affeccions, whiche that ben nothyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plentuous of fruictes of reson. For thei holden hertes of men in usage, but thei ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye muses had withdrawen fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commenly emong the peple, I would well suffre the lasse grevously. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myne ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrowen fro me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scoles of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my muses, that is to say, by my notefull sciences. And thus this companie of muses iblamed casten wrothly the chere dounward to the yerth, and shewing by redneſſe ther shame, thei passeden sorowfully the thresholde. And I of whom the sight plounged in teres was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperial auctoritie, I woxe all abashed and stonied, and cast my sight doune to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doune upon the uttereſt corner of my bed, and she beholdyng my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall saine) the perturbacion of my thought.

the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderstand speculacion or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of some vyolente persones had cut the sayde vestures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, such as euery one coulde catch. And she her selfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her lefte hande a scepter, which foresayd phylosophy (when she saw the muses poetycal present at my bed, spekyng sorrowful wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry sayd (with terrible or frownynge countenaunce) who suffred these crafty harlottes to com to thys sycke man? whych can help hym by no means of hys griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increase the same with swete poyson. These be they that doo dystroye the fertile and plentious commodytyes of reason and the fruytes therof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accustome or subdue mens myndes with sickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the same. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen sorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke should not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the studyes of Aristotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence maremaids (that seme swete untyll you haue brought a man to deathe) and suffer me to heale thys my man wyth my muses or scyences that be holsome and good. And after that philosophy had spoken these wordes the sayd companye of the musys poeticall beynge rebukyd and sad, caste down their countenaunce to the grounde, and by blussyng confessed their shamfastnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my syght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, so that I knew not what woman this was hauyng soo great auctoritie) was amasyd and astonyed, and lokyng downeward, towarde the grounde, I began pryvylye to look what thyng she would saye ferther, then she had said. Then she approching and drawynge nere vnto me, sat downe vpon the vttermost part of my bed, and lokyng vpon my face sad with weping, and declynyd toward the earth for sorow, bewayled the trouble of my minde wyth these sayinges folowynge.

The conclusions of the Astrolabie.

This book (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTEL Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certaine evidences thyne abylyte to lerne scyences, touching nombres and proporcions, and also well consydre I thy besye prayer in especyal to lerne the tretyse of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condiscendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therfore I have given the a sufficient astrolabye for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by mediacion of this lytell tretise, I purpose to teche the a certaine nombre of conclusions, pertainynge to this same instrument. I say a certaine nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Truste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothely in any cartes of the astrolabye that I have ysene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges persourme ther behestes: and some of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretise divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latine ne canst thou nat yet but smale, my litel sonne. But nevertheleſſe suffiseth to the these trewe concluſyons in Englishe, as wel as suffiseth to these noble clerkes grekes these same conclusions in greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn: whiche Latyn folke had 'hem firste out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in ther owne tonge, that is to saine in Latine.

And God wote that in all these languages and in manye mo, have these concluſyons ben sufficientlye lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every person discrete, that redeth or hereth this lityl tretise to have my rude ententing excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious endityng and harde sentences is ful hevy at ones, for soch a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothely me semeth better to writen unto a childe twise a gode sentence, than he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe the in my lith Englishe, as trew conclusions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben yshewed in latin, in any comon tretise of the astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeieth everiche in his degree, the more and the lasse. But consydreth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I n'ame but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myn englishe onely for thy doctrine: and with this swerde shal I slene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this tretise shall reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolaby, bycause that thou shalte have the greter knowinge of thine owne instrument.

The seconde party.

The seconde partye shal teche the to werken the very practike of the foresaid conclusions, as ferforthe and also narowe as may be shewed in so smale an instrument portatise aboute. For wel wote every astrologien, that smalleſt fractions ne wol not be shewed in so smal an instrument, as in subtil tables calculed for a cause.

The

The PROLOGUE of the TESTAMENT of LOVE.

MANY men there ben, that with eres openly sprad so moche swalowen the deliciousnesse of jestes and of ryme, by queint knittinge coloures, that of the godenesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle soule so sore have mined and graffed in my spirites, that soche craft of enditinge woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boistous percen the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and planten there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothynge hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of semelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togidder to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the time, and afterward the syght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the first leudnesse. So sothly this leude clowdy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth. Eke it shal yeve sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many soveraine wittes had grete delyte to endite, and have many noble thinges fulfilde, but certes there ben some that speken ther poisye mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasye as we have in heryng of Frenche mens Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englyshe, whiche unneth we Englishe men connen declare the knowleginge: howe should than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chatereth Englishe. Right so truely the understandyn of Englishmen woll not stretche to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we bosten of straunge langage. Let than clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of science, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche also enditen their queint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes; and let us shewe our fantasies in such wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudnesse in travaile, yet soch writing exiten men to thilke thinges that ben necessarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thynge lightly may be conceved to eschue perils, and necessaries to catch, after as aventures have fallen to other peple or persons.

Certes the soverainst thinge of desire and most creture resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unresonable bestes mowen not, sithe reson hath in 'hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is comparisoned to unresonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forsothe the most soveraine and finall perfeccion of man is in knowynge of a sothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creator.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowleging and lovynge his creatour, is the consideracyon of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thylke thinges that ben made, understandynge here to our wyttes, arne the unsene pryvities of God made to us syghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and understondinge. These thinges than forsothe moche bringen us to the ful knowleginge sothe, and to the parfyte love of the maker of hevenly thynges. Lo! David saith: thou haste delited me in makinge, as who saith, to have delite in the tune how God hat lent me in consideracion of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell philosophers: it is a grete likynge in love of knowinge ther cretoure: and also in knowinge of causes in kindelye thynges, consydrid forsothe the formes of kindelye thinges and the shap, a gret kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philosophers with a lyvely studie manie noble thinges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret swet and travaille to us lesten of causes the properties in natures of thinges, to whiche therfore philosophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty lust in kindely vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had all the tresour, al the richesse, al the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therfore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarie, that is to saine, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke presed that soch godenes hated. And bicause this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge with passions and diseses for wantinge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in scorne laughe, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, say he will rende out the swerde of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Gades a mile yet ferther, and over that he had power of strength to pull up the spere, that Alisander the noble might never wagge, and that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edwarde the thirde for al his grete prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more scorne and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogither in the cloudie cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to speak of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the gretteste clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up clene toforne 'hem, and with ther sharp sithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many an other. Envye forsothe commendeth noughte his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so trusty. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the sheves, and made many shockes, yet have I ensample to gader the smale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that falled from the bourde among the smalle houndes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remissailes, as trenchours, and the relese to bere to the almesse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbande Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and these grete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the shedynge after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privyties out of shockes; a slye servaunte in his owne helpe is ofteh moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, wts more hardier in the firste sechers, and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after. For ther passing study han freshed our wittes, and oue understandynge han excited in consideracion of trouth by sharpenes of ther resons. Utterly these thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boistous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind asketh, with dryinge coldes maked the wawes of the ocean se so to arise unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

The PROLOGUES of the CANTERBURY Tales of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his shouris sote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in such licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his swetè breth
Enspirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramm his halvè cours yrunn:
And smalè foulis makin melodye,
That slepin allè night with opin eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And palmers for to sekin strangè strondes,
To servin hallowes couth in sondry londes:
And specially fro every shir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,

The holy blisfull martyr for to ſeke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were ſeke.
Befell that in that ſeſon on a day
In Southwerk at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devote corage,
At night wer come into that hoſtery
Wele nine and twenty in a cumpany
Of ſundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaſhip; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.
The chambers and the ſtablis werin wide,
And wel we werin eſid at the beſt:
And ſhortly whan the ſunnè was to reſt,
So had I ſpokin with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaſhip anone;
And madè forward erli for to riſe,
To take our weye, ther as I did deviſe.
But nathleſs while that I have time and ſpace,
Er' that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reſon,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, ſo as it ſemid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I firſt begin.

The KNIGHT.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the timè that he firſt began
To ridin out, he lovid Chevalrie,
Trouth and honour, fredome and curteſy.
Full worthy was he in his lord'is werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Chriſtendom, as in Hethneſs;
And evyr honoured for his worthineſs.
At Aleſſandre' he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè naciouns in Pruce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Chriſten-man ſo oft of his degree
In Granada; in the ſege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete ſee
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he ben fiftene,
And foughtin for our feith at Trameſene,
In liſtis thrys, and alwey ſlein his fo.
This ilke worthy knight hath ben alſo
Sometimis with the lord of Palathy,
Ayens anothir hethin in Turky;
And evirmore he had a ſov'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wiſe;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevir yet no villany ne ſaid
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay;
Of fuſtian he werid a gipon,
Allè beſmottrid with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde, ſtandyng in ſondrie ſtages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnacles,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraituris,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I ſawe evir.
But certainly I n'iſt nevir
Where that it was, but well wiſt I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I ſawe anone right her figure
Nakid yfletyng in a ſe,
And alſo on her hedde parde
Her roſy garland white and redde,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde,
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè ſonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.
But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was
Thus writtin on a table' of bras.
I woll now ſyng, if that I can,
The armis, and alſo the man,
That firſt came through his deſtine
Fugitife fro Troye the countre
Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
Unto the ſtrondis of Lavine,
And tho began the ſtorie' anone,
As I ſhall tellin you echone.
Firſt ſawe I the diſtruccion
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his falſe untrue forſwerynges,
And with his chere and his leſynges,
That made a horſe, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loſte all ther joye.
And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions caſtill aſſailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus ſlain,
And Polites his ſonne certain,
Diſpitouſly of Dan Pyrrhus.
And next that ſawe I howe Venus,
When that ſhe ſawe the caſtill brende,
Doune from hevin ſhe gan diſcende,
And bade her ſonne Æneas flie,
And how he fled, and how that he
Eſcapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre', old Anchiſes,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchiſes in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.
Then ſawe I next that all in fere
How Creuſa, Dan Æneas wife,
Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong ſonne clepid Julo,
And eke Aſcanius alſo,
Fleddin eke, with full drerie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a foreſt as thei went
How at a tournyng of a went
Creüſa was iloſte, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her ſought, and how her ghoſte
Bad hym to flie the Grekis hoſte,
And ſaied he muſt into Itaile,
As was his deſtinie, ſauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her ſpirite gan appere,
The wordis that ſhe to hym ſaied,
And for to kepe her ſonne hym praied.
There ſawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his ſhippis began to ſaile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As ſtreight as ere thei mightin go.
There ſawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That haſt ihatid all thy life

The HOUSE of FAME.

The Firſt Boke.

NOW herkin, as I have you ſaied,
What that I mette or I abraied,
Of December the tenith daie,
When it was night, to ſlepe I laie,
Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aſlepè wondir ſone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagè milis two
To the corps of ſainct Leonarde,
To makin lithe that erſt was harde.
But as me ſlept me mette I was
Within a temple' imade of glas,

Mercileſs

Mercileſs all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and crie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he ſhould ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any' of ther ſavacion.
  There ſawe I ſoche tempeſt ariſe,
That evèry herte might agriſe,
To ſe it paintid on the wall.
  There ſawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Yprayid Jupiter on hie,
To ſave and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas,
Sithins that he your ſonne ywas.

Gode counſaile of CHAUCER.

FLIE fro the preſe and dwell with ſothfaſtneſſe,
  Suffiſe unto thy gode though it be ſmall,
For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilneſſe,
  Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
  Savour no more then the behovin ſhall,
    Rede well thy ſelf, that othir folke canſt redè,
    And trouthe the ſhall delivir it 'is no drede.
Painè the not eche crokid to redreſſe,
  In truſt of her that tournith as a balle,
Grete reſt ſtandith in litil buſineſſe,
  Beware alſo to ſpurne again a nalle,
  Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
    Demith thyſelf that demiſt othir's dede,
    And trouthe the ſhall deliver it 'is no drede.
That the is ſent receve in buxomeneſſe;
  The wraſtlyng of this worlde aſkith a fall;
Here is no home, here is but wildirneſſe,
  Forthe pilgrim, forthe o beſt out of thy ſtall,
  Loke up on high, and thanke thy God of all,
    Weivith thy luſte and let thy ghoſt the lede,
    And trouthe the ſhall delivir, it 'is no drede.

THIS wretchid world'is tranſmutacion
  As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
Without ordir or due diſcrecion
  Govirnid is by fortun'is errour,
  But nathèleſſe the lacke of her favour
    Ne maie not doe me ſyng though that I die,
    J'ay tout perdu, mon temps & mon labeur
      For finally fortune I doe defie.
Yet is me left the ſight of my reſoun
  To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and doun,
  I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
  But truily no force of thy reddour
    To hym that ovir hymſelf hath maiſtrie,
    My ſuffiſaunce yſhal be my ſuccour,
      For finally fortune I do defie.
O Socrates, thou ſtedfaſt champion,
  She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
Thou nevir dreddiſt her oppreſſion,
  Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
  Thou knewe wele the diſceipt of her colour,
    And that her moſte worſhip is for to lie,
    Iknowe her eke a falſe diſſimulour,
      For finally fortune I do defie.

The anſwerè of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymſelf it wene,
  He that yhath hymſelf hath ſuffiſaunce,
Why ſaieſt thou then I am to the ſo kene,
  That haſt thy ſelf out of my govirnaunce?
  Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
    That thou haſt lent or this, thou ſhalt not ſtrive,
    What woſt thou yet how I the woll avaunce?
    And eke thou haſt thy beſtè frende alive.
I have the taught diviſion betwene
  Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunse,
The nedith not the gallè of an hine;
  That curith eyin derke for ther penaunce,
  Now ſeeſt thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
    Yet holt thine anker, and thou maieſt arive
    There bountie bereth the key of my ſubſtaunce;
    And eke thou haſte thy beſtè frende alive.
How many have I refuſed to ſuſtene,
  Sith I have the foſtrid in thy pleſaunce?
Wolt thou then make a ſtatute on thy quene,
  That I ſhall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
  Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
    About the whele with othir muſt thou drivè
    My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
    And eke thou haſt thy beſtè frende alive.

The anſwere to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adverſitie,
  My frend maiſt thou not revin blind goddeſſe;
That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
  Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a preſſe,
  The nigardis in kepyng ther richeſſe
    Pronoſtike is thou wolt ther toure aſſaile,
    Wicke appetite cometh aie before ſickeneſſe;
    In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

Thou pinchiſt at my mutabilitie,
  For I the lent a droppe of my richeſſe,
And now me likith to withdrawin me,
  Why ſhouldiſt thou my roialtie oppreſſe?
  The ſe maie ebbe and flowin more and leſſe,
    The welkin hath might to ſhine, rain, and haile;
    Right ſo muſt I kithin my brotilneſſe,
    In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execucion of the majeſtie,
  That all purveighith of his rightwiſeneſſe,
That ſamè thyng fortune yclepin ye,
  Ye blindè beſtis full of leudèneſs!
  The heven hath propirtie of ſikirneſs,
    This worldè hath evir reſtleſſe travaile,
    The laſt daie is the ende of myne entreſſe,
    In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilneſſe,
  Let not this man and me thus crie and plain;
And I ſhall quitin you this buſineſſe,
  And if ye liſte releve hym of his pain,
Praie ye his beſt frende of his nobleneſſe
  That to ſome bettir ſtate he maie attain.

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the ſame time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of the Fall of Princes a few ſtanzas are ſelected, which, being compared with the ſtyle of his two contemporaries, will ſhow that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a ſettled ſtate.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
  And hath none horſe to releue his trauayle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may find no bote
Of wel cold whan thruſt doth hym aſſayle,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym auayle,
Tight ſo fare I which in my buſineſſe,
No ſuccour fynde my rudenes to redreſſe.
  I meane as thus, I haue no freſh licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhethorike no floure,
In my labour for to refreſh me:
Nor of the ſuſters in noumber thriſe three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaſo dwell,
They neuer me gaue drinke once of their wel:
  Nor of theyr ſpringes clere and chriſtaline,
That ſprange by touchyng of the Pegaſe,
Their fauour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of ſo great ſcarcitie,
To tame their tunnes with ſome drop of plentie
For Polipheimus throw his great blindnes,
Hath in me derked of Argus the brightnes.

Our

Our life here ſhort of wit the great dulnes
The heuy ſoule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glaſyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a ſtrong batail
With werines my ſpirite to aſſayle,
And with their ſubtil creping in moſt queint
Hath made my ſpirit in makyng for to feint.
And ouermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my ſtepmother called obliuion,
Hath a baſtyll of foryetfulnes,
To ſtoppe the paſſage, and ſhadow my reaſon
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In tranſlating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.
Thus was I ſet and ſtode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer liſt to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me conſtrayne,
Bochas taccompliſh for to doe my payne,
Came ignoraunce, with a menace of drede,
My penne to reſt I durſt not procede.

Forteſcue was chief juſtice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of king Henry VI. He retired in 1471. after the battle of Tewkeſbury, and probably wrote moſt of his works in his privacy. The following paſſage is ſelected from his book of the Difference between an abſolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marvelid by ſome men, why one Realme is a Lordſhyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordſchip, Royall and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callyd Jus Politicum & Regale; ſythen thes two Princes beth of egall Aſtate.

To this dowte it may be anſweryd in this manner; The firſt Inſtitution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cauſe of this diverſyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the firſt Realme, and ſubduyd it to hymſelf by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accompliſhment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppreſſyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Roluſtus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beſte for to ſcle and eate hym; ſo Nembroth ſubduyd to him the People with Might, to have their ſervice and their goods, uſing upon them the Lordſchip that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid firſt a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by other Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then moſt reſemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Cryſtyn Princes uſen the ſame Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys ſayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I ſuppoſe firſt beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, whan Mankynd was more manſuete, and better diſpoſyd to Vertue, Grete Communalties, as was the Feliſhip, that came into this Lond with Brute, wyllyng to be unyed and made a Body Politike callid a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philoſopher, every Communaltie unyed of many parts muſt needs have an Heed; than they choſe the ſame Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Inſtitution, and onyng of themſelf into a Realme, ordeynyd the ſame Realme ſo to be rulyd and juſtyfyd by ſuch Lawys, as they al would aſſent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and bycauſe it is mynyſtrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quaſi Regimen, plurium Scientia, ſive Conſilio miniſtratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon his People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus ſaith, in his Boke de priſcis Hiſtoriis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the ſame Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Aſſent of his People. And in like forme as he ſaith is ruled the Kyngdome of Saba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libie; And alſo the more parte of al the Realmys in Afrike. Which manner of Rule and Lordſhip, the ſayd Diodorus in that Boke, prayſith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby the more ſewerly do Juſtice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is alſo good for his People that receyve therby, ſuch Juſtice as they deſyer themſelf. Now as me ſeymth, it ys ſhewyd opinly ynough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his people Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Deſier and Inſtitution of the People of the ſame Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was neceſſary to give a larger ſpecimen, both becauſe our language was then in a great degree formed and ſettled, and becauſe it appears from Ben Johnſon, that his works were conſidered as models of pure and elegant ſtyle. The tale, which is placed firſt, becauſe earlieſt written, will ſhow what an attentive reader will, in peruſing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffuſed among thoſe claſſes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty, has ſuffered very little change. There is another reaſon why the extracts from this authour are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better truſted than any other edition of the Engliſh books of that, or the preceding ages.

A merry ieſt how a ſergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maiſter Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway,
Affyrme and ſay,
That beſt is for a man:
Diligently,
For to apply,
The buſines that he can,
And in no wyſe,
To enterpryſe,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no ſkyll,
Is neuer lyke to the.
He that hath lafte,
The hoſiers crafte,
And falleth to making ſhone,
The ſmythe that ſhall,
To payntyng fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to writyng ſcole,
An olde butler,
Becum a cutler,
I wene ſhall proue a fole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothyng but kyſſe the cup,
With her phiſick,
Wil kepe one ſicke,
Tyll ſhe haue ſouſed hym vp:
A man of lawe,
That neuer ſawe,
The wayes to bye and ſell,
Wenyng to ryſe,
By marchaundiſe,
I wiſh to ſpede hym well.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo ſeke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in ſute,
Tyll he diſpute,
His money cleane away,

Pletyng the lawe,
For euery ſtrawe,
  Shall proue a thrifty man;
With bate and ſtrife,
But by my life,
  I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an hatter
Wyll go ſmatter,
  In philoſophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a medlar,
  In theology,
All that enſue,
Suche craftes new,
  They driue ſo farre a caſt,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
  Beſhrewe themſelfe at laſt.
This thing was tryed
And verefyed,
  Here by a ſergeaunt late,
That thriftly was,
Or he coulde pas,
  Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would
See how he could,
  A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe how it fyll,
  Take hede and ye ſhall here.
It happed ſo,
Not long ago,
  A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounde,
Of nobles rounde,
  That had he layd a ſide:
His ſonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
  For to beginne with all:
But to ſuffiſe
His chylde, well thriſe,
  That money was to ſmal.
Yet or this day
I have hard ſay,
  That many a man terteſſe,
Hath with good caſt,
Be ryche at laſt,
  That hath begonne with leſſe.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
  His money to imploy,
That certainly,
His policy,
  To ſee it was a joy,
For leſt ſum blaſt,
Myght ouer caſt,
  His ſhip, or by miſchaunce,
Men with ſum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
  And miniſh his ſubſtaunce,
For to put out,
All maner dout,
  He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt,
By his owne wyt,
  And toke an other way:
Firſt fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
  He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
  And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
  To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetouſly,
  He ſupped it fayre vp;
In his owne breſt,
He thought it beſt,
  His money to encloſe;

Then wiſt he well,
What euer fell,
  He coulde it neuer loſe:
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
  Money and marchaundiſe:
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
  In like maner wyſe.
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
  He reight not what he ſpent;
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
  Could him not miſcontent.
With luſty ſporte,
And with reſort,
  Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
  He liued merely.
And men had ſworne,
Some man is borne,
  To haue a lucky howre;
And ſo was he,
For ſuch degre,
  He gat and ſuche honour;
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
  A ſergeaunt well and fayre;
Was redy ſtrayte,
On him to wayte,
  As ſone as on the mayre.
But he doubtleſſe,
Of his mekeneſſe,
  Hated ſuch pompe and pride;
And would not go,
Companied ſo,
  But drewe himſelf a ſide,
To ſaint Katharine,
Streight as a line,
  He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocion,
  There would he nedes abyde.
There ſpent he faſt,
Till all were paſt,
  And to him came there meny,
To aſke theyr det,
But none could get,
  The valour of a peny.
With viſage ſtout,
He bare it out,
  Euen vnto the harde hedge;
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was faine,
  To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
  Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
  But that he wiſt not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
  He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So ſick alway,
  He myght not come abrode.
It happed than,
A marchant man,
  That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
Than gan enquere,
  What him was beſt to do.
And he anſwerde,
Be not aferde,
  Take an accion therfore;
I you beheſte,
I ſhall hym reſte,
  And than care for no more.

I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out.
The ſergeaunt ſaid,
Be not afrayd,
It ſhall be brought about.
In many a game,
Lyke to the ſame,
Haue I bene well in vre,
And for your ſake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And foorth then goth,
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere.
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He ſpake and looked,
So religiouſly.
Yet in a glaſſe,
Or he would paſſe,
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his ſyde,
To ſee how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth withouten ſhame
To do this dede,
But now take hede,
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And ſoftely,
Streyght at the dore he knocked:
And a damſell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere ſayd,
Good ſpede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth ſuch a man,
It is told me:
Well ſyr quod ſhe,
And yf he do what than:
Quod he mayſtreſſe,
No harme doutleſſe:
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly,
Fayne ſpeake would I.
Sir quod ſhe by my fay,
He is ſo ſike,
Ye be not lyke,
To ſpeake with hym to day.
Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray,
This much at my deſire,
Voucheſafe to do,
As go hym to,
And ſay an auſten frere
Would with hym ſpeke,
And matters breake,
For his auayle certayn.
Quod ſhe I wyll,
Stonde ye here ſtyll,
Tyll I come downe agayn.
Vp is ſhe go,
And told hym ſo,
As ſhe was bode to ſay,
He miſtruſtying,
No maner thyng,
Sayd mayden go thy way,
And feth him hyder,
That we togyder,
May talk. A downe ſhe gothe,
Vp ſhe hym brought,
No harme ſhe thought,
But it made ſome folke wrothe.
This officere,
This fayned frere,
Whan he was come aloft,
He dopped than,
And grete this man,
Religiouſly and oft.
And he agayn,
Ryght glad and fayn,
Toke hym there by the hande,
The frere than ſayd,
Ye be diſmayd,
With trouble I underſtande.
In dede quod he,
It hath with me,
Bene better than it is,
Syr quod the frere,
Be of good chere,
Yet ſhall it after this.
But I would now,
Comen with you,
In counſayle yf you pleaſe,
Or ellys nat
Of matters that,
Shall ſet your heart at eaſe.
Downe went the mayd,
The marchaut ſayd,
Now ſay on gentle frere,
Of thys tydyng,
That ye me bryng,
I long full ſore to here.
Whan there was none,
But they alone,
The frere with euyll grace,
Sayd, I reſt the,
Come on with me,
And out he toke his mace:
Thou ſhalt obay,
Come on thy way,
I have the in my clouche,
Thou goeſt not hence,
For all the penſe,
The mayre hath in his pouche.
This marchaunt there,
For wrath and fere,
He waxyng welnygh wood,
Sayd horſon theſe,
With a miſchefe,
Who hath taught the thy good.
And with his fiſt,
Vpon the lyſt,
He gaue hym ſuch a blow,
That backward downe,
Almoſt in ſowne,
The frere is ouerthrow.
Yet was this man,
Well fearder than,
Leſt he the frere had ſlayne,
Tyll with good rappes,
And heuy clappes,
He dawde hym vp agayne.
The frere toke harte,
And vp he ſtarte,
And well he layde about,
And ſo there goth,
Betwene them both,
Many a luſty clout.
They rent and tere,
Eche others here,
And claue togyder faſt,
Tyll with luggyng,
And with tuggyng,
They fell downe bothe at laſt.
Than on the grounde,
Togyder rounde,
With many a ſadde ſtroke,
They roll and rumble,
They turne and tumble,
As pygges do in a poke.

So long aboue,
They heue and ſhoue,
  Togider that at laſt,
The mayd and wyſe,
To breake the ſtrife,
  Hyed them vpward faſt.
And whan they ſpye,
The captaynes lye,
  Both waltring on the place,
The freres hood,
They pulled a good,
  Adowne about his face.
Whyle he was blynde,
The wenche behynde,
  Lent him leyd on the flore,
Many a ioule,
About the noule,
  With a great batyldore.
The wyſe came yet,
And with her fete,
  She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her rocke,
Many a knocke,
  She gaue hym on the crowne.
They layd his mace,
About his face,
  That he was wood for payne:
The fryre frappe,
Gate many a ſwappe,
  Tyll he was full nygh ſlayne:
Vp they hym lift,
And with yll thrift,
  Hedlyng a long the ſtayre,
Downe they hym threwe,
And ſayde adewe,
  Commende us to the mayre.
The frere aroſe,
But I ſuppoſe,
  Amaſed was his hed,
He ſhoke his eares,
And from grete feares,
  He thought hym well yfled.
Quod he now loſt,
Is all this coſt,
  We be neuer the nere.
Ill mote he be,
That cauſed me,
  To make my ſelf a frere.
Now maſters all,
Here now I ſhall,
  Ende there as I began,
In any wyſe,
I would auyſe,
  And counſayle euery man,
His owne craft vſe,
All newe refuſe,
  And lyghtly let them gone:
Play not the frere,
Now make good chere,
  And welcome euerych one.

A ruful lamentacion (written by maſter Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Eliſabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the ſeuenth, and eldeſt doughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Eliſabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the ſeuenth.

O Ye that put your truſt and confidence;
  In worldly ioy and frayle proſperite;
That ſo lyue here as ye ſhould neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vppon me.
Enſaumple I thynke there may no better be.
Your ſelfe wotte well that in this realme was I;
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.
  Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleaſaunt thyng?
Merciſull god this is a ſtraunge reckenyng:
Rycheſſe, honour, welth, and aunceſtry,
Hath me forſaken and lo now here I ly.
  If worſhip myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me ſaued, I neded not fere.
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty meſſangere,
Obey we muſt there is no remedy,
Me hath he ſommoned, and lo now here I ly.
  Yet was I late promiſed otherwyſe,
This yere to liue in welth and delice.
Lo where to commeth thy blandiſhyng promyſe,
O falſe aſtrolagy and deuynatrice,
Of goddes ſecretes makyng thy ſelfe ſo wyſe.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet laſteth, and lo now here I ly.
  O bryttill welth, as full of bitterneſſe,
Thy ſingle pleaſure doubled is with payne.
Account my ſorow firſt and my diſtreſſe,
In ſondry wyſe, and recken there agayne,
The ioy that I haue had, and I dare ſayne,
For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
More wo then welth, and lo now here I ly.
  Where are our caſtels, now where are our towers,
Goodly Rychmonde ſone art thou gone from me,
At Weſtminſter that coſtly worke of yours,
Myne owne dere lorde now ſhall I neuer ſee.
Almighty god vouchesafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edefy.
My palyce bylded is, and lo now here I ly.
  Adew myne owne dere ſpouſe my worthy lorde,
The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In mariage and peaſable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane reſyne,
To be beſtowed vppon your children and myne.
Erſt wer you father, and now muſt ye ſupply,
The mothers part alſo, for lo now here I ly.
  Farewell my doughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye ſhould go where we ſhould ſeldome mete.
Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we leaſt feare, full oft it is moſt nye,
From you depart I fyrſt, and lo now here I lye.
  Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your ſonne, and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
Farewell my doughter Katherine late the fere,
To prince Arthur myne owne chyld ſo dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my ſoule, for lo now here I ly.
  Adew lord Henry my louyng ſonne adew.
Our lord encreaſe your honour and eſtate,
Adew my doughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyſe and fortunate.
Adew ſwete hart my litle doughter Kate,
Thou ſhalt ſwete babe ſuche is thy deſteny,
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.
  Lady Cicyly Anne and Katheryne,
Farewell my welbeloved ſiſters three,
O lady Briget other ſiſter myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly foly flee,
And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I ly.
  A dew my lordes, a dew my ladies all,
A dew my faithful ſeruauntes euerych one,
A dew my commons whom I neuer ſhall,
See in this world wherfore to the alone,
Immortall god verely three and one,
I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy ſeruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in Engliſh written by maſter Thomas More in hys youth for the boke of fortune, and cauſed them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high eſtate power and auctoritie,
  If ye ne know, enſerche and ye ſhall ſpye,
That richeſſe, worſhip, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, reſt, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
That any pleaſure or profit may come by,
To mannes comfort, ayde, and ſuſtinaunce,
Is all at my deuyſe and ordinaunce.

Without

Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a matter haue I brought at laſt,
To good concluſion, that fondly was begonne.
And many a purpoſe, bounden ſure and faſt
With wiſe prouiſion, I haue ouercaſt.
Without good happe there may no wit ſuffiſe.
Better is to be fortunate than wyſe.
And therefore hath there ſome men bene or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my diſprayſe. And other cauſe there nys,
But for me liſt not frendly on them loke.
Thus lyke the fox they fare that once forſoke,
The pleaſaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them,
Becauſe he lept and yet could not come by them.
But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour, and richeſſe,
Much better is than penury and payne.
The nedy wretch that lingereth in diſtreſſe,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortleſſe,
A wery burden odious and loth,
To all the world, and eke to him ſelfe both.
But he that by my fauour may aſcende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende,
O in how bliſt condicion ſtandeth he:
Him ſelf in honour and felicite,
And ouer that, may forther and increaſe,
A region hole in ioyfull reſt and peace.
Now in this poynt there is no more to ſay,
Eche man hath of him ſelf the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and miſchaunce,
Liſt for to liue, and wyll him ſelfe enhaunce,
In wealth and richeſſe, come forth and wayte on me.
And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that truſt in Fortune.

THOU that are prowde of honour ſhape or kynne,
That hepeſt vp this wretched worldes treaſure,
Thy fingers ſhrined with gold, thy tawny ſkynne,
With freſh apparyle garniſhed out of meaſure,
And weneſt to haue fortune at thy pleaſure,
Caſt vp thyne eye, and loke how ſlipper chaunce,
Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.
Sometyme ſhe loketh as louely fayre and bright,
As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde.
She becketh and ſhe ſmileth on euery wight.
But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.
Like any ſerpent ſhe beginneth to ſwell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.
Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and ſo blynde)
As ſoone as Fortune liſt to laugh agayne,
With fayre countenaunce and diſceitfull mynde,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,
Not one or twayne but thouſandes in a rout,
Lyke ſwarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.
Then as a bayte ſhe bryngeth forth her ware,
Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious ſtone:
On whiche the maſed people gaſe and ſtare,
And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone
Amyd her treaſure and waueryng rycheſſe,
Prowdly ſhe houeth as lady and empreſſe.
Faſt by her ſyde doth wery labour ſtand,
Pale fere alſo, and ſorow all bewept,
Diſdayn and hatred on that other hand,
Eke reſtles watche fro ſlepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowſy and lokyng as he ſlept.
Before her ſtandeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dyſceyt, miſchiefe and tiranny.
About her commeth all the world to begge.
He aſketh lande, and he to pas would bryng.
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge:
He would in loue proſper aboue all thyng:
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
He forceth not ſo he may money haue,
Though all the worlde accompt hym for a knaue.
Lo thus ye ſee diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vnſtable here and there among them ſlittes:
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who ſo may ſhe throweth great and ſmall
Not to all men, as commeth ſonne or dewe,
But for the moſt part, all among a fewe.
And yet her brotell giftes long may not laſt.
He that ſhe gaue them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirlth about and pluckth away as faſt,
And geueth them to an other by and by.
And thus from man to man continually,
She vſeth to geue and take, and ſlily toſſe,
One man to wynnyng of an others loſſe.
And when ſhe robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curſeth her full ſore.
But he that receueth it, on that other ſyde,
Is glad, and bleſth her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when ſhe loueth hym no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to.
And he her curſeth, as other fooles do.
Alas the folyſh people can not ceaſe,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway, beſely they preace.
But lord how he doth thynk hym ſelf full wele.
That may ſet once his hande vppon her whele.
He holdeth faſt: but vpward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.
Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perſe.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo then I may well reherſe.
Thus double fortune, when ſhe lyſt reuerſe
Her ſlipper fauour fro them that in her truſt,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the duſt.
She ſodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.
And ſodeynly miſcheueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay eaſily and full ſoft,
In ſtede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the moſt cruell proude mocke:
The deynty mowth that ladyes kiſſed haue,
She bryngeth in the caſe to kyſſe a knaue.
In chaungyng of her courſe, the chaunge ſhewth this,
Vp ſtartth a knaue, and downe there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to deſpyght.
This is her ſport, thus proueth ſhe her myght:
Great boſte ſhe maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.
Pouertee that of her giftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vppon the prece,
And ſeeth how fortunes houſhold goeth to wrake.
Faſt by her ſtandeth the wyſe Socrates.
Ariſtippus, Pythagoras, and many a leſe,
Of olde philoſophers. And eke agaynſt the ſonne
Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tonne.
With her is Byas, whoſe countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes ſtode ſo in dout,
That eche man haſtely gan to cary thence,
And aſked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about:
Wiſedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leeſe.
Heraclitus eke, lyſt felowſhip to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus alſo:
Of which the fyrſt can neuer ceaſe but wepe,
To ſee how thick the blynded people go,
With labour great to purchaſe care and wo.
That other laugheth to ſee the foolyſh apes,
Howe earneſtly they walk about theyr capes.
Of this poore ſect, it is comen vſage,
Onely to take that nature may ſuſtayne,
Baniſhing cleane all other ſurplúſage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good ſo fayne.
But they more pleaſure haue a thouſande folde,
The ſecrete draughtes of nature to beholde.
Set fortunes ſervauntes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full,
That one in ſuretye, that other lyke to fall.
Who lyſt to aduiſe them bothe, parceyue he ſhall,
As great difference between them as we ſee,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicite.

Nows

Now haue I ſhewed you bothe: theſe whiche ye lyſt,
Stately fortune, or humble pouertee:
That is to ſay, nowe lyeth it in your fyſt,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to pleaſe,
If that ye thynke your ſelfe to well at eaſe.
And fyrſt vppon the louely ſhall ſhe ſmile,
And frendly on the caſt her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a whyle,
Put the and kepe the in a fooles paradiſe:
And foorth with all what ſo thou lyſt deuiſe,
She wyll the graunt it liberally parhappes:
But for all that beware of after clappes.
Recken you neuer of her fauoure ſure:
Ye may in clowds as eaſily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cauſe fiſhes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to ſpare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forfare,
As her to make by craft or engine ſtable,
That of her nature is euer variable.
Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any ſeruaunt may,
And in concluſion, that thou ſhalt winne thereby
Shall not be worth thy ſervyce I dare ſay.
And looke yet what ſhe geueth the to day,
With labour wonne ſhe ſhall happly to morow
Pluck it agayne out of thyne hande with ſorow.
Wherefore yf thou in ſuretye lyſt to ſtande,
Take pouerties parte and let prowde fortune go,
Receyue nothyng that commeth from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue: they be onely tho.
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayſt thou boldly defye her turnyng chaunce:
She can the neyther hynder nor auaunce.
But and thou wylt nedes medle with her treaſure,
Truſt not therein, and ſpende it liberally.
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of meaſure:
Bylde not thyne houſe on heyth vp in the ſkye.
None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye,
Remember nature ſent the hyther bare,
The gyftes of fortune count them borowed ware.

THOMAS MORE to them that ſeke Fortune.

WHO ſo delyteth to prouen and aſſay,
Of waveryng fortune the vncertayne lot,
If that the aunſwere pleaſe you not alway,
Blame ye not me: for I commaunde you not,
Fortune to truſt, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fiſt,
She renneth looſe, and turneth where ſhe lyſt.
The rollyng dyſe in whome your lucke doth ſtande,
With whoſe vnhappy chaunce ye be ſo wroth,
Ye knowe your ſelfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyſhe and frogges both.
Caſt in your nette: but be you liefe or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyſt aſſyne:
For it is your owne fiſhyng and not myne.
And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other ſhe ſhall it amende.
There is no manne ſo farre out of her grace,
But he ſometyme hath comfort and ſolace:
Ne none agayne ſo farre foorth in her fauour,
That is full ſatisfyed with her behauiour.
Fortune is ſtately, ſolemne, prowde, and hye:
And rycheſſe geueth, to haue ſeruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an halfpeny:
Some manne a thouſande pounde, ſome leſſe ſome more.
But for all that ſhe kepeth euer in ſtore,
From euery manne ſome parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and ſerue her ſtyll.
Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.
Some man hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of ſtelth.
To ſome ſhe ſendeth children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorſhyp, and reuerence all hys lyfe:
But yet ſhe pyncheth hym with a ſhrewde wyfe.
Then for aſmuch as it is fortunes guyſe,
To graunt no manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her ſelfe lyſt order and deuyſe,
Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counſayle you eche one truſſe vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With ſuche rewarde as fortune hath you ſent.
All thynges in this boke that ye ſhall rede,
Doe as ye lyſt, there ſhall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as ſurely as your crede.
But notwithſtandyng certes in my mynde,
I durſt well ſwere, as true ye ſhall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche anſwere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of aſtronomye.

The Deſcripcion of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third ſonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and proweſſe farre vnder them bothe, little of ſtature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left ſhoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of viſage, and ſuch as is in ſtates called warlye, in other menne otherwiſe, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had ſo much a doe in her trauaile, that ſhee coulde not bee deliuered of hym vncutte: and that he came into the world with the feete forwarde, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the fame runneth) alſo not vntothed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboue the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her courſe in hys beginninge, whiche in the courſe of his lyfe many thinges vnnaturallye committed. None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to whiche his diſpoſicion was more metely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and ſommetime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne parſone, either of hardineſſe or polytike order, free was hee called of dyſpence, and ſommewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vnſtedfaſte frendeſhippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and ſpoyle in other places, and get him ſtedfaſt hatred. Hee was cloſe and ſecrete, a deepe diſſimuler, lowlye of countey-naunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kiſſe whome hee thoughte to kyll: diſpitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the ſuretie and encreaſe of his eſtate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduauntage grew, he ſpared no mans deathe, whoſe life withſtoode his purpoſe. He ſlewe with his owne handes king Henry the ſixt, being priſoner in the Tower, as menne conſtantly ſaye, and that without commaundement or knoweledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to ſome other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wiſe menne alſo weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee reſiſted openly, howbeit ſomwhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that caſe the king his brother (whoſe life hee looked that euil dyete ſhoulde ſhorten) ſhoulde happen to deceaſe (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whoſe life muſt nedes haue hindered hym ſo entendynge, whither the ſame duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterpriſed to be kyng himſelfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoſo diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel ſhote to farre as to ſhort. How beit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the ſelfe nighte in whiche kynge Edwarde died, one Myſtlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate haſte to the houſe of one Pottyer dwellyng in Reddecroſſe ſtrete without Crepulgate: and when he was with haſtye rappyng quickly letten in, hee ſhewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edwarde was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottier then wyll my mayſter the duke of Glouceſter bee kynge. What cauſe hee hadde ſoo to thynke harde it is to ſaye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thynge knewe that hee ſuche thynge purpoſed, or otherwyſe wyſe had anye inkelynge thereof: for hee was not likelye to ſpeake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the courſe of this hyſtorye, were it that the duke of Glouceſter hadde of old foreminded this concluſion, or was nowe at erſte thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occaſion of the tender age of the younge princes, his nephues (as opportunitye and lykelyhoode of ſpede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer entended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr deſtruccion, with the vſurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymſelfe. And for as muche as hee well wiſte and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennynge betwene the quenes kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuiſion ſhoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnynge to the purſuite of his intente, and a ſure ground for the foundacion of al his building yf he might firſte vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde diſpleaſure, abuſe the anger and ygnoraunce of the tone partie, to the deſtruccion of the tother: and then wynne to his purpoſe as manye as he coulde: and thoſe that coulde not be wonne, myght be loſte ere they looked therefore. For of one thynge was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he ſhold ſoone haue made peace beetwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edwarde in his life, albeit that this diſcencion beetwene hys frendes ſommewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health he ſommewhat the leſſe regarded it, becauſe hee thought whatſoeuer buſines ſhoulde falle betwene them, hymſelfe ſhould alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his laſt ſickneſſe, when hee receiued his naturall ſtrengthe ſoo ſore enfebled, that hee dyſpayred all recouerye, then hee conſyderynge the youthe of his chyldren, albeit hee nothynge leſſe miſtruſted then that that happened, yet well forſeynge that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children ſhoulde lacke diſcrecion of themſelf, and good counſayle of their frendes, of whiche either party ſhold counſayle for their owne commodity and rather by pleaſaunte aduyſe too wynne themſelfe fauour, then by profitable aduertiſemente to do the children good, he called ſome of them before him that were at variaunce, and in eſpecyall the lorde marques Dorſette the quenes ſonne by her fyrſte houſebande, and Richarde the lorde Haſtynges, a noble man, than lorde chaumberlayne agayne whome the quene ſpecially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and alſo for that ſhee thoughte hym ſecretelye familyer with the kynge in wanton coumpanye. Her kynred alſo bare hym ſore, as well for that the kynge hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene, claimed of the kinges former promyſe) as for diuerſe other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they loked for. When theſe lordes with diuerſe other of bothe the parties were comme in preſence, the kynge liftinge vppe himſelfe and vnderſette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyſe ſayd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinſmenne and alies, in what plighte I lye you ſee, and I feele. By whiche the leſſe whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what caſe I leaue you, for ſuch as I leaue you, ſuche bee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they ſhoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at varyaunce, myght happe to fall themſelfe at warre ere their diſcrecion woulde ſerue to ſette you at peace. Ye ſee their youthe, of whiche I recken the onely ſuretie to reſte in youre concord. For it ſuffiſeth not that al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfulneſſe happelye woulde ſuffiſe. But childehood muſt be maintained by mens authoritye, and ſlipper youth vnderpropped with elder counſayle, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it, nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche laboureth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of ech of others perſon, impugneth eche others counſayle, there muſt it nedes bee long ere anye good concluſion goe forwarde. And alſo while either partye laboureth to be chiefe, flattery ſhall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduyſe, of whyche muſte needes enſue the euyll bringing vppe of the prynce, whoſe mynd in tender youth infect, ſhal redily fal to miſchief and riot and drawe down with this noble relme to ruine: but if grace turn him to wiſdom, which if God ſend, then thei that by euill menes before pleaſed him beſt, ſhal after fall fartheſt out of fauour, ſo that euer at length euil driftes dreue to nought, and good plain wayes proſper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great cauſes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our miſconſtruccion turneth vnto worſe or a ſmal diſpleaſure done vs, eyther our owne affeccion or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had ſo great cauſe of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be chriſten men, this ſhall I leaue for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any preachers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this ſhal I deſire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kindred or affinitie, whiche ſpirytuall kynred of affynyty, if the ſacramentes of Chriſtes churche, beare that weyghte with vs that woulde Godde thei did, ſhoulde no leſſe moue vs to charitye, then the reſpecte of fleſhlye conſanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worſe, for the ſelfe cauſe that you ought to loue the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde wee ſo deadlye debate, as amonge them, whyche by nature and lawe moſte oughte to agree together. Suche a peſtilente ſerpente is ambicion and deſyre of vaine glorye and ſoueraintye, whiche amonge ſtates where he once entreth crepeth foorth ſo farre, tyll with deuiſion and variaunce hee turneth all to miſchiefe. Firſt longing to be nexte the beſt, afterwarde egall with the beſte, and at laſte chiefe and aboue the beſte. Of which immoderate appetite of woorſhip, and thereby of debate and diſſencion what loſſe, what ſorowe, what trouble hath within theſe fewe yeares growen in this realme, I praye Godde as well forgeate as wee wel remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coulde as well haue foreſene, as I haue with my more payne then pleaſure proued, by Goddes bleſſed Ladie (that was euer his othe) I woulde neuer haue won the courteſye of mennes knees, with the loſſe of ſoo many heades. But ſithen thynges paſſed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occaſion we haue taken ſoo greate hurte afore, that we efteſoones fall not in that occaſion agayne. Nowe be thoſe griefes paſſed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte wel to proſper in wealthfull peace vnder youre coſeyns my children, if Godde ſende them life and you loue. Of whiche twoo thinges, the leſſe loſſe wer they by whome thoughe Godde dydde hys pleaſure, yet ſhoulde the realme, alway finde kinges and paraduenture as good kinges. But yf you among your ſelfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man ſhall periſh and happely he to, and ye to, ere thys land finde peace again. Wherfore in theſe laſt wordes that euer I looke to ſpeak with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer born to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truſte you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne ſurety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to ſitte vp, laide him down on his right ſide, his face towarde them: and none was there preſent that coulde refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they could, and anſwering for the time as thei thought to ſtand with his pleaſure, there in his preſence (as by their wordes appered ech forgaue other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a ſonder. As ſone as the king was departed, the noble prince his ſonne drew toward London, which at the time of his deceaſe, kept his houſhold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourſe to juſtice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at liberue vncorrected. And for this encheaſon

the prince was in the life of his father ſente thither, to the end that the authoritie of his preſence ſhould refraine euill diſpoſed parſons fro the boldnes of their formar outerages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his ſending thyther, was there appointed Sir Antony Woduile lord Riuers and brother vnto the quene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counſayle. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the ſame partie, and in effect euery one as he was nereſt of kin vnto the quene, ſo was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the quene not vnwiſely deuiſed, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauour, the duke of Glouceſter turned vnto their deſtruccion, and vpon that grounde ſet the foundacion of all his vnhappy building. For whom ſoeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himſelf their fauor, hee brake vnto them, ſome by mouth, ſom by writing or ſecret meſſengers, that it neyther was reaſon nor in any wiſe to be ſuffered, that the yong king their maſter and kinſmanne, ſhoold bee in the handes and cuſtodye of his mothers kinred, ſequeſtred in maner from theyr compani and attendance, of which eueri one ought him as faithful ſeruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers ſide: whoſe blood (quod he) ſauing the kinges pleaſure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who ſay remoued from the kyng, and the leſſe noble to be left aboute him, is (quod he) neither honorable to hys mageſtie, nor vnto vs, and alſo to his grace no ſurety to haue the mightieſt of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to ſuffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and ſone perſwaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himſelf, albeit he was a manne of age and of diſcrecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then ſtode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduauncement of them ſelfe. Whiche whither they ſorer thirſted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer hard I wene to geſſe. And if ſome folkes frendſhip had not holden better place with the king, then any reſpect of kinred, thei might peraduenture eaſily haue be trapped and brought to confuſion ſomme of vs ere this. Why not as eaſily as they haue done ſome other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is paſte. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee ſuffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abuſe the name of his commaundement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouiſion forbyd. Of which good prouiſion none of us hath any thing the leſſe nede, for the late made attonemente, in whiche the kinges pleaſure hadde more place then the parties willes. Nor none of vs I beleue is ſo vnwyſe, ouerſone to truſte a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, ſodainely contract in one houre continued, yet ſcant a fortnight, ſhold be deper ſetled in their ſtomackes: then a long accuſtomed malice many yeres rooted.

With theſe wordes and writynges and ſuche other, the duke of Glouceſter ſone ſet a fyre, them that were of themſelf ethe to kindle, and in eſpeciall twayne, Edwarde duke of Buckingham, and Richarde lorde Haſtinges and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The tone by longe ſucceſſion from his anceſtrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. Theſe two not bearing eche to other ſo muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Glouceſter, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kynges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Glouceſter vnderſtandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accoumpanied with ſuche power of theyr frendes, that it ſhoulde bee harde for hym to brynge his purpoſe to paſſe, without the gathering and great aſſemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wiſte was doubtuous, and in which the kyng being on their ſide, his part ſhould haue the face and name of a rebellion: he ſecretly therefore by diuers meanes, cauſed the quene to be perſwaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and alſo ſhold be ieopardous, the king to come vp ſtrong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing ſtudyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred ſhold aſſemble in the kinges name muche people, thei ſhould geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene ſommetyme debate, to feare and ſuſpecte, leſte they ſhoulde gather thys people, not for the kynges ſauegarde whome no manne empugned, but for theyr deſtruccion, hauying more regarde to their olde variaunce, then their newe attonement. For whiche cauſe thei ſhoulde aſſemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whoſe power ſhe wyſte wel farre ſtretched. And thus ſhould all the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof ſhould enſue, which was likely not to be litle, and the moſt harme there like to fal wher ſhe leſt would, all the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and ſay that thei had vnwyſelye and vntrewlye alſo, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her huſband ſo prudentelye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfully obſerued.

The quene being in this wiſe perſwaded, ſuche woorde ſente vnto her ſonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kynge, and ouer that the duke of Glouceſter hymſelfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kynge ſoo reuerentlye, and to the queenes frendes there ſoo louyngelye, that they nothynge earthelye myſtruſtynge, broughte the kynge vppe in greate haſte, not in good ſpede, with a ſober coumpanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when theſe dukes of Glouceſter and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Riuers the kynges vncle, entendyng on the morowe to folow the kynge, and bee with hym at Stonye Stratford miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene theſe dukes and the lorde Riuers a greate while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greate courteſye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes ſecretelye with a fewe of their moſte priuye frendes, ſette them downe in counſayle, wherin they ſpent a great parte of the nyght. And at their riſinge in the dawnyng of the day, thei ſent about priuily to their ſeruantes in their innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them ſelfe ſhortely readye, for their lordes wer to horſebackward. Vpon whiche meſſages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers ſeruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde theſe dukes taken alſo into their cuſtodye the kayes of the inne, that none ſhoulde paſſe foorth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye toward Stonye Stratforde where the kynge laye, they hadde beeſtowed certayne of theyr folke, that ſhoulde ſende backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they ſhould geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themſelfe entended for the ſhewe of theire dylygence, to bee the fyrſte that ſhoulde that daye attende vppon the kynges highneſſe oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderſtode the gates cloſed, and the wayes on euerye ſide beſette, neyther hys ſeruauntes nor hymſelf ſuffered to go oute, parceiuyng well ſo greate a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner preſent with this laſt nightes chere, in ſo ſew houres ſo gret a chaunge marueylouſlye miſliked. How be it ſithe hee coulde not geat awaye, and keepe himſelfe cloſe, hee woulde not, leſte he ſhoulde ſeeme to hyde himſelfe for ſome ſecret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he ſaw no ſuch cauſe in hym ſelf: he determined vppon the ſuretie of his own conſcience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane. Whome as ſoone as they ſawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and ſaye, that hee intended to ſette diſtaunce

beetweene the kynge and them, and to brynge them to confuſion, but it ſhoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne (as hee was a very well ſpoken manne) in goodly wiſe to excuſe himſelf, they taryed not the ende of his aunſwere, but ſhortely tooke him and putte him in warde, and that done, foorthwyth wente to horſebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horſebacke, and departe forwarde, to leaue that lodging for them, becauſe it was to ſtreighte for bothe coumpanies. And as ſone as they came in his preſence, they lighte adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham ſaide, goe afore gentlemenne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, thei came to the kinge, and on theire knees in very humble wiſe, ſalued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor miſtruſtinge as yet. But euen by and by in his preſence, they piked a quarell to the lorde Richard Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, ſayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vncle, hadde coumpaſſed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to ſette variaunce among the ſtates, and to ſubdewe and deſtroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accoumpliſhinge whereof, they ſayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kinges treaſor, and ſent menne to the ſea. All whiche thinge theſe dukes wiſte well were done for good purpoſes and neceſſari by the whole counſaile at London, ſauing that ſommewhat thei muſt ſai. Vnto whiche woordes, the ſting aunſwered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot ſaie. But in good faith I dare well aunſwere for myne vncle Riuers and my brother here, thar thei be innocent of any ſuch matters. Ye my liege quod the duke of Buckingham thei haue kepte theire dealing in theſe matters farre fro the knowledge of your good grace. And foorthwith thei arreſted the lord Richarde and Sir Thomas Waughan knighte, in the kinges preſence, and broughte the king and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counſaile. And there they ſent awaie from the kinge whom it pleaſed them, and ſette newe ſeruantes aboute him, ſuche as lyked better them than him. At whiche dealinge hee wepte and was nothing contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Glouceſter ſente a diſhe from his owne table to the lord Riuers, prayinge him to bee of good chere, all ſhould be well inough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the meſſenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richard with the ſame meſſage for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of coumfort, as one to whom ſuch aduerſitie was ſtraunge. But himſelf had been al his dayes in vre therewith, and therfore coulde beare it the better. But for al this coumfortable courteſye of the duke of Glouceſter he ſent the lord Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to priſon, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in concluſion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to hys doughter maiſtres MARGARET ROPER, within a whyle after he was priſoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good doughter, our lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde: and of worldly thynges I no more deſyer then I haue. I beſeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And ſuch thynges as I ſomewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put theim into your myndes, as I truſte he dothe and better to by hys holy ſpirite: who bleſſe you and preſerue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in hys pore prayers forgetteth none of you all nor your babes, nor your nurſes, nor your good huſbandes, nor your good huſbandes ſhrewde wyues, nor your fathers ſhrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two ſhort ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for hys paſtime while he was priſoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the loſt louer.

EY flatering fortune, loke thou neuer ſo fayre,
Or neuer ſo pleſantly begin to ſmile,
As though thou wouldſt my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou ſhalt me not begile.
Truſt ſhall I God, to entre in a while.
Hys hauen or heauen ſure and vniforme.
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a ſtorme.

DAVY the dycer.

LONG was I lady Luke your ſeruing man,
And now haue loſt agayne all that I gat,
Wherfore whan I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I beſhrew your cat,
But in fayth I bleſſe you agayne a thouſand times,
For lending me now ſome layſure to make rymes.

At the ſame time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whoſe works it ſeems proper to inſert a few ſtanzas, though he cannot be ſaid to have attained great elegance of language.

The prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne whan the ſonne in vyrgyne
By radyante hete enryped hath our corne
When Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, ſmylynge halfe in ſcorne
At out foly and our vnſtedfaſtneſſe
The time whan Mars to warre hym dyd dres,
I callynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftely
Vnder as couerte termes as coulde be
Can touche a trouth, and cloke ſubtylly
With freſhe vtteraunce full ſentencyouſly
Dyuerſe in ſtyle ſome ſpared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly dyd endyte
Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
Maye neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was ſore moued to a forſe the ſame
But ignoraunce full ſoone dyde me dyſcure
And ſhewed that in this arte I was not ſure
For to illumine ſhe ſayd I was to dulle
Aduyſynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he ſo wyll atteyne
Excedyng ferther than his connynge is
His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen ſuche er this
But of reproche ſurely he maye not mys
That clymmeth hyer than he may fotinge haue
What and he flyde downe, who ſhall him ſaue?
Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawen and caſt
That I ne wyſte what to do was beſte
So ſore enwered that I was at the laſte
Enforſed to ſlepe, and for to take ſome reſte
And to lye downe as ſoone as I my dreſte
At Harwyche porte ſlumbrynge as I laye
In myne hoſtes houſe called powers keye.

Of the wits that flouriſhed in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry; and this hiſtory would therefore have been imperfect without ſome ſpecimens of his works, which yet it is not eaſy to diſtinguiſh from thoſe of Sir Thomas Wyat and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three firſt are, I believe, Surry's; the reſt, being of the ſame age, are ſelected, ſome as examples of different meaſures, and one as the oldeſt compoſition which I have found in blank verſe.

Deſcription of Spring, wherein eche thing renewes, fave only the lover.

THE foote ſeaſon that bud, and bloome fourth bringes,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new ſhe ſinges;
The turtle to her mate hath told her tale:

Somer

Somer is come, for every ſpray now ſpringes,
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
The fiſhes flete with newe repayred ſcale:
The adder all her ſlough away ſhe flynges,
The ſwift ſwallow purſueth the flyes ſmalle,
The buſy bee her honey how ſhe mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I ſee among theſe pleaſant thynges
Eche care decayes, and yet my ſorrow ſprynges.

Deſcripcion of the reſtleſs eſtate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides ſcourge had made me runne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary courſe begunne:
And then I ſaw howe my deſyre
Miſguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me loſe a better prey.
For when in ſighes I ſpent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boyling ſmoke dyd ſtill bewray,
The preſent heat of ſecret flame:
And when ſalt teares do bayne my breaſt,
Where love his pleaſent traynes hath ſown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes oppreſt,
Ere that the buddes were ſpronge and blowne.
And when myne eyen dyd ſtill purſue,
The flying chaſe of theyre requeſt;
Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breſte.
When every loke theſe cheekes might ſtayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward ſignes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.
But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that elſe ſhould ſee
My ſpeckled chekes with Cupids hew.
And now the covert breſt I clame,
That worſhipt Cupide ſecretely;
And nouriſhed hys ſacred flame,
From whence no blairing ſparks do flye.

Deſcripcion of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that moſt part in diſcord
Our willes do ſtand, whereby our hartes but ſeldom do accord:
Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The ſimple hartes which he doth ſtrike with froward divers ſtroke.
He cauſeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte,
And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others harte.
Whoſe gleames of burning fyre and eaſy ſparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From eaſye ford where I myghte wade and paſs full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe dark hell:
And me witholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And willes me that my mortal foe I do beſeke of Grace;
He lettes me to purſue a conqueſt welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were loſt, ere that my ſute begunne.
So by this means I know how ſoon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to ſtryfe, and ſo agayne returne.
I know how to content my ſelf in others luſt,
Of little ſtuffe unto my ſelf to weave a webbe of truſt:
And how to hyde my harmes with ſole dyſſembling chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forſakes the face for dred,
And how by ſhame it ſtaynes agayne the Chekes with flamyng red:
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the reſtleſs forge I wote eke how it workes.
I know and con by roate the tale that I woulde tell
But ofte the woordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he ſhakes,
In ſynging how he doth complayne, in ſleeping how he wakes
To languiſh without ache, ſickeleſſe for to conſume,
A thouſand thynges for to devyſe, reſolvynge of his fume;
And though he lyſte to ſee his Ladyes Grace full ſore
Such pleaſures as delyght hys Eye, do not his helthe reſtore.
I know to ſeke the tracte of my deſyred foe,
And fere to fynde that I do ſeek, but chiefly this I know,
That Lovers muſt transfourme into the thynge beloved,
And live (alas! who would believe?) with ſprite from Lyfe removed.
I knowe in harty ſighes and laughters of the ſpleene,
At once to chaunge my ſtate, my will, and eke my colour clene.
I know how to deceyve my ſelf wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chaſtiſed is, by beatynge of the whelpe.
In ſtandynge nere the fyre, I know how that I freaſe;
Farre of I burne, in bothe I waſte, and ſo my Lyfe I leeſe.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde,
How ſmalle a nete may take and maſe a harte of gentle kynde:
Or elſe with ſeldom ſwete to ſeaſon hepes of gall,
Revived with a glympſe of Grace old ſorrowes to let fall.
The hidden traynes I know, and ſecret ſnares of Love,
How ſoone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.
The ſlypper ſtate I know, the ſodein turnes from welthe
The doubtfull hope, the certain wooe, and ſure deſpaired helthe.

A praiſe of his ladie.

GEVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boaſt not your ſelves at all,
For here at hande approcheth one,
Whoſe face will ſtayne you all.
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious ſtone,
I wiſhe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two chriſtall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy;
It would you all in heart ſuffiſe
To ſee that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath loſt the moulde,
Where ſhe her ſhape did take;
Or elſe I doubte if nature coulde
So fayre a creature make.
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whoſe like was never ſeene nor heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe ſhe is Diana chaſt
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede ſtedfaſt;
What will you more we ſay:
If all the world were fought ſo farre,
Who could finde ſuche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a ſtarre
Within the froſty night.

The Lover refuſed of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull yeres are paſt,
My joyfull dayes are gone,
My lyfe it may not laſt,
My grave and I am one.
My Myrth and joyes are fled,
And I a Man in wo,
Deſirous to be ded,
My miſceife to forgo.

I burne

I burne and am a colde,
I freeſe amyddes the fyer,
I ſee ſhe doth witholde
That is my honeſt deſyre.
I ſee my helpe at hande,
I ſee my lyfe alſo,
I ſee where ſhe doth ſtande
That is my deadly fo.
I ſee how ſhe doth ſee,
And yet ſhe wil be blynde,
I ſee in helpyng me,
She ſekes and will not fynde.
I ſee how ſhe doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I ſee when I come nye,
How fayne ſhe would be gone.
I ſee what will ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you ſhall ſee therfore
That ſhe ſhall have her will.
I cannot live with ſtones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The Death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian aſtronomer, in the firſt fight that Alexander had with the Perſians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Gan paſſe the noys of dredfull trumpetts clang,
Shrowded with ſhafts, the heaven with cloude of dartes,
Covered the ayre. Againſt full fatted bulles,
As forceth kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whoſe greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons againſt the Perſians fare,
Now corpſes hyde the purpurde ſoyle with blood;
Large ſlaughter on eche ſide, but Perſes more,
Moyſt fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and numbers bate,
Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.
The litening Macedon by ſwordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his mereſt kyn,
Oxate preſerves with horſemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge ſhould give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where ſtrong youth is ſpent:
Shaking her bloudy hands, Bellone among
The Perſes ſoweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte,
Hym ſmytes the club, hym woundes farre ſtryking bowe,
And him the ſling, and him the ſhining ſword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he reſtes.
Right over ſtoode in ſnowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunnyng clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celeſtiall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aſpect, eclips,
And influence, and conſtellations all;
What earthly chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty ſtorde, what ſigne forewarned death,
How winter gendreth ſnow, what temperature
In the prime tyde doth ſeaſon well the ſoyle,
Why ſummer burnes, why autumne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themſelves how great
Proportion is; what ſway the erryng lightes
Doth ſend in courſe gayne that tyrſt movyng heaven;
What grees one from another diſtant be,
What ſtarr doth lett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more mylde what oppoſition makes,
What fyre doth qualifye Mavorſes fyre,
What houſe eche one doth ſeeke, what plannett raignes
Within this heaven ſphere, nor that ſmall thynges
I ſpeake, whole heaven he cloſeth in his breſt.
This ſage then in the ſtarres hath ſpyed the fates
Threatned him death without delay, and, ſith,
He ſaw he could not fatall order chaunge,
Foreward he preſt in battayle, that he might
Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand deſirous to be ſlain,
The bouldeſt borne, and worthieſt in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And ſeking death, in fyrſt front of his rage,
Comes deſperately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With reckleſſe wordes and clamour him provokes;
And ſayth, Nectanaks baſtard ſhamefull ſtayne
Of mothers bed, why loſeſt thou thy ſtrokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in caſe
Manhood there be ſo much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare
Apollo's laurell both for learninges laude,
And eke for martiall praiſe, that in my ſhielde
The ſeven fold Sophie of Minerve contein,
A match more mete, Syr King, then any here.
The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
The wilfull wight, and with ſoft words ayen,
O monſtrous man (quoth he) what ſo thou art,
I pray thee live, ne do not with thy death
This lodge of Lore, the Muſes manſion marre;
That treaſure houſe this hand ſhall never ſpoyle,
My ſword ſhall never bruiſe that ſkillful brayne,
Long gather'd heapes of ſcience ſone to ſpill;
O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
From Wiſdoms garden give; how many may
By you the wiſer and the better prove:
What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
Perſwades to be downe, ſent to depe Averne,
Where no artes flouriſh, nor no knowledge vailes
For all theſe fawes. When thus the ſovereign ſaid,
Alighted Zoroas with ſword unſheathed,
The careleſs king there ſmoate above the greve,
At th' opening of his quiſhes wounded him,
So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnaſhe,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wiſe
Hym to forbeare, ſett ſpurrs unto his ſtede,
And turnde away, leſt anger of his ſmarte
Should cauſe revenger hand deale balefull blowes,
But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
One Meleager could not bear this ſight,
But ran upon the ſaid Egyptian rude,
And cutt him in both knees: he fell to ground,
Wherewith a whole rout came of ſouldiours ſterne,
And all in pieces hewed the ſely ſeg,
But happely the ſoule fled to the ſtarres,
Where, under him, he hath full ſight of all,
Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
The Perſians waild ſuch ſapience to forgoe,
The very ſone the Macedonians wiſht
He would have lived, king Alexander ſelfe
Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
Who wonne like praiſe for conqueſt of his Yre,
As for ſtoute men in field that day ſubdued,
Who princes taught how to diſcerne a man,
That in his head ſo rare a jewel beares,
But over all thoſe ſame Camenes, thoſe ſame,
Divine Camenes, whoſe honour he procurde,
As tender parent doth his daughters weale,
Lamented, and for thankes, all that they can,
Do cheriſh hym deceaſt, and ſett him free,
From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fooles, of which the following extract will ſhew his ſtyle.

Of Mockers and Scorners, and falſe Accuſers.

O Heartleſs fooles, haſte here to our doctrine,
Leaue off the wayes of your enormitie,
Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
For here ſhall I ſhewe you good and veritie:
Encline, and ye finde ſhall great proſperitie,
Enſuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.
Who that will followe the graces manyfolde
Which are in vertue, ſhall finde auauncement:
Wherfore ye fooles that in your ſinne are bolde,
Enſue ye wiſdome, and leaue your lewde intent,
Wiſdome is the way of men moſt excellent:
Therfore haue done, and ſhortly ſpede your pace,
To quaynt your ſelf and company with grace.

Learne what is vertue, therin is great ſolace,
Learne what is truth, ſadnes and prudence,
Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchaſe,
Forſake your folly and inconuenience,
Ceaſe to be fooles, and ay to ſue offence,
Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
For it and wiſedome is ground of clenlynes.
Wiſedome and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
Whiche man endueth with honour ſpeciall,
But ſuche heartes as ſlepe in fooliſhnes
Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
But in this little barge in principall
All fooliſh mockers I purpoſe to repreue,
Clawe he his backe that feeleth itche or greue.
Mockers and ſcorners that are harde of beleue,
With a rough comb here will I clawe and grate,
To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
And leaue their folly, which cauſeth great debate:
Suche caytiues ſpare neyther poore man nor eſtate,
And where their ſelfe are moſte worthy deriſion,
Other men to ſcorne is all their moſt condition.
Yet are mo fooles of this abuſion,
Whiche of wiſe men deſpiſeth the doctrine,
With mowes, mockes, ſcorne, and colluſion,
Rewarding rebukes for their good diſcipline:
Shewe to ſuche wiſdome, yet ſhall they not encline
Unto the ſame, but ſet nothing therby,
But mocke thy doctrine, ſtill or openly.
So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
That who that will a foole rebuke or blame,
A mocke or mowe ſhall he haue by and by:
Thus in deriſion haue fooles their ſpeciall game.
Correct a wiſe man that woulde eſchue ill name,
And fayne would learne, and his lewde life amende,
And to thy wordes he gladly ſhall intende.
If by misfortune a rightwiſe man offende,
He gladly ſuffereth a iuſte correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him ſelfe putting mekely unto ſubiection,
Folowing his preceptes and good direction:
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He ſhall his teacher hate, ſlaunder and diffame.
Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own ſhame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And ſo is he ſore wounded with the ſame,
And in wo endeth, great miſery and payne.
It alſo proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes caſt,
Shall of all other be mocked at the laſt.
He that goeth right, ſtedfaſt, ſure, and faſt,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his ſcornes caſt,
Againſt a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vſeth the ſame.
But who that of ſinne is cleane in dede and thought,
May him well ſcorne whoſe liuing is ſtarke nought.
The ſcornes of Nabal! full dere ſhould haue been bought,
If Abigayl his wife diſcrete and ſage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes ſought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and aſſwage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyſeus did ſcorne.
So might they curſe the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
So many other of this ſort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus is it foly for wiſe men to encline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for ſee thou ſhall
Them moſte ſcorning that are moſt bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in ſcorne ſet your ioy,
Proudly deſpiſing Gods punition;
Take ye example by Cham the ſonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto deriſion,
Which him after curſed for his tranſgreſſion,
And made him ſeruaunt to all his lyne and ſtocke.
So ſhall ye caytifs at the concluſion,
Since ye are nought, and other ſcorne and mocke.

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilſon, a man celebrated for the politeneſs of his ſtyle, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the ſtate of our language in his time, the following may be of uſe to ſhow.

PRonunciation is an apte orderinge bothe of the voyce, countenaunce, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of ſuche woordes and mater as by ſpeache are declared. The vſe hereof is ſuche for anye one that liketh to haue prayſe for tellynge his tale in open aſſemblie, that hauing a good tongue, and a comelye countenaunce, he ſhal be thought to paſſe all other that haue the like vtteraunce: thoughe they haue much better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cauſe in like maner, as a ſwete ſoundynge lute muche ſetteth forthe a meane deuiſed ballade. Or as the ſounde of a good inſtrumente ſtyrreth the hearers, and moueth muche delite, ſo a cleare ſoundyng voice comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche ſwete melodie, and cauſeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters ſake, then the reporter for the matters ſake. Demoſthenes therfore, that famouſe oratour, beyng aſked what was the chiefeſt point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praiſe to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the ſeconde, and the thirde, he ſtill made anſwere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunſwere, till they lefte aſkyng, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can dooe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubte that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely geſture of his body. Æſchines lykwyſe beyng banniſhed his countrie through Demoſthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demoſthenes aunſwere thereunto, by force whereof he was banniſhed, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the ſame: then (q d Æſchines) you would have marueiled muche more if you had heard hymſelfe ſpeak it. Thus beyng caſt in miſerie and banniſhed for euer, he could not but geue ſuch greate reporte of his deadly and mortal ennemy.

Thus have I deduced the Engliſh language from the age of Alfred to that of Elizabeth; in ſome parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at leaſt, in ſuch a manner that its progreſs may be eaſily traced, and the gradations obſerved, by which it advanced from its firſt rudeneſs to its preſent elegance.

A GRAMMAR OF THE ENGLISH TONGUE.

GRAMMAR, which is the art of uſing words properly, compriſes four parts; Orthography, Etymology, Syntax, and Proſody.

In this diviſion and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without enquiring whether a fitter diſtribution might not be found. Experience has long ſhown this method to be ſo diſtinct as to obviate confuſion, and ſo comprehenſive as to prevent any inconvenient omiſſions. I likewiſe uſe the terms already received, and already underſtood, though perhaps others more proper might ſometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whoſe new terms have ſunk their learning into neglect, have left ſufficient warning againſt the triſling ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into ſyllables, and ſyllables into words. It therefore teaches previouſly the form and ſound of letters.

The letters of the Engliſh language are,

To theſe may be added certain combinations of letters univerſally uſed in printing; as ct, ſt, fl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, and &c, or and per ſe, and. ct, ſt, ſl, ſl, ſb, ſk, ff, ſſ, ſi, ſſi, fi, ffi, ffl, &. 𝔠𝔱, 𝔰𝔱, 𝔣𝔩, 𝔰𝔩, 𝔰𝔟, 𝔰𝔨, 𝔣𝔣, 𝔰𝔰, 𝔰𝔦, 𝔰𝔰𝔦, 𝔣𝔦, 𝔣𝔣𝔦, &.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, becauſe anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expreſſed by the ſame character; but as thoſe letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly ſaid to conſiſt of twenty-ſix letters.

None of the ſmall conſonants have a double form, except ſ, s; of which ſ is uſed in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy; before i, as from die, dying; from beautify, beautifying; in the words ſays, days, eyes; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as ſyſtem, σύστημα, ſympathy, συμπάθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, loweſs.

The ſounds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I ſhall not, like ſome other grammarians, enquire into the original of their form as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and prolation by the organs of ſpeech, as a mechanick, anatomiſt, or phyſiologiſt; nor into the properties and gradation of ſounds, or the elegance or harſhneſs of particular combinations, as a writer of univerſal and tranſcendental grammar. I conſider the Engliſh alphabet only as it is Engliſh; and even in this narrow view I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, becauſe by writing in Engliſh I ſuppoſe my reader already acquainted with the Engliſh language; and becauſe of ſounds in general it may be obſerved, that words are unable to deſcribe them. An account therefore of the primitive and ſimple letters is uſeleſs almoſt alike to thoſe who know their ſound, and thoſe who know it not.

Of VOWELS.

A.

A has three ſounds, the ſlender, open, and broad.

A ſlender is found in moſt words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, ſalvation, generation.

The a ſlender is the proper Engliſh a, called very juſtly by Erpenius in his Arabick Grammar, a Anglicum cum e miſtum, as having a middle ſound between the open a and the e. The French have a ſimilar ſound in the word pais, and in their e maſculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly reſembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glaſs.

A broad reſembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mault; and we ſtill ſay fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon ſound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the ruſtick pronunciation; as maun for man, baund for band.

The ſhort a approaches to the a open, as graſs.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always ſlender, as graze, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or w.

Ai or ay, as in plain, wain, gay, clay, has only the ſound of the long and ſlender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, wane.

Au or aw has the ſound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

Ae is ſometimes found in Latin words not completely naturaliſed or aſſimilated, but is no Engliſh diphthong; and is more properly expreſſed by ſingle e, as Ceſar, Eneas.

E.

E is the letter which occurs most frequently in the Engliſh language.

E is long, as in ſcēne; or ſhort, as in cĕllar, ſĕparate, cĕlebrate, mĕn, thĕn.

It is always ſhort before a double conſonant, or two conſonants, relĕnt, mĕdlar, rĕptile, ſĕrpĕnt, cĕllar, cĕſſation, blĕſſing, ſĕll, ſĕlling, dĕbt.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monoſyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being uſed to modify the foregoing conſonant, as ſince, once, hedge, oblige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as băn, bāne; căn, cāne; pĭn, pīne; tŭn, tūne; rŏb, rōbe; pŏp, pōpe; ſĭr, fīre; cŭr, cūre; tŭb, tūbe.

Almoſt all words which now terminate in conſonants ended anciently in e, as year, yeare, wildneſs, wildneſſe; which e probably had the force of the French e feminine, and conſtituted a ſyllable with its aſſociate conſonant; for, in old editions, words are ſometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a time vocal or ſilent in poetry as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden calls it the ſilent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glŏve, lĭve, gĭve.

It has ſometimes in the end of words a ſound obſcure, and ſcarcely perceptible, as open, ſhapen, ſhotten, thiſtle, participle, metre, lucre.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or w, as new, flew.

Ea ſounds like e long, as mean; or like ee, as dear, clear, near.

Ei is ſounded like e long, as ſeize, perceiving.

Eu ſounds as u long and ſoft.

E, a, u are combined in beauty and its derivatives, but have only the ſound of u.

E may be ſaid to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, ſleeping.

Eo is found in yeomen, where it is ſounded as e ſhort; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a ſound, long, as fīne; and ſhort, as fĭn.

That is eminently obſervable in i, which may be likewiſe remarked in other letters, that the ſhort ſound is not the long ſound contracted, but a ſound wholly different.

The long ſound in monoſyllables is always marked by the e final, as thĭn, thīne.

I is often ſounded before r as a ſhort u; as ſtirt, firſt, ſhirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as field, ſhield, which is ſounded as the double ee; except friend, which is ſounded as frĕnd.

I is joined with eu in lieu, and ew in view; which triphthongs are ſounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as bōne, ōbedient, corrōding; or ſhort, as blŏck, knŏck, ŏblique, lŏll.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The ſhort o has ſometimes the ſound of a cloſe u, as ſon, come.

O coaleſces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach; oa has the ſound of o long.

O is united to e in ſome words derived from Greek, as œconomy; but oe being not an Engliſh diphthong, they are better written as they are ſounded, with only e, economy.

With i, as oil, ſoil, moil, noiſome.

This coalition of letters ſeems to unite the ſounds of the two letters as far as two ſounds can be united without being deſtroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the ſound of the Italian u.

With u or w, as our, power, flower; but in ſome words has only the ſound of o long, as in ſoul, bowl, ſow, grow. Theſe different ſounds are uſed to diſtinguiſh different ſignifications; as bow, an inſtrument for ſhooting; bow, a depreſſion of the head: ſow, the ſhe of a boar; ſow, to ſcatter ſeed: bowl, an orbicular body; bowl, a wooden veſſel.

Ou is ſometimes pronounced like o ſoft, as court; ſometimes like o ſhort, as cough; ſometimes like u cloſe, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which uſe only can teach.

Ou is frequently uſed in the laſt ſyllable of words which in Latin end in or, and are made Engliſh, as honour, labour, favour, from honor, labor, favor.

Some late innovators have ejected the u, without conſidering that the laſt ſyllable gives the ſound neither of or nor ur, but a ſound between them, if not compounded of both; beſides that they are probably derived to us from the French nouns in eur, as honeur, faveur.

U.

U is long in ūſe, confūſion; or ſhort, as ŭs, concŭſſion.

It coaleſces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in theſe combinations the force of the w conſonant, as quaff, queſt, quit, quite, languiſh; ſometimes in ui the i loſes its ſound, as in juice. It is ſometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, gueſt, guiſe, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no ſound.

Ue is ſometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French; as prorogue, ſynagogue, plague, vague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian obſerves of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we have it. It ſupplies the place of i at the end of words, as thy; before an i, as dying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as deſtroy, deſtroyer; betray, betrayed, betrayer; pray, prayer; ſay, ſayer; day, days.

Y being the Saxon vowel ȳ, which was commonly uſed where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

General Rules.

A vowel in the beginning or middle ſyllable, before two conſonants, is commonly ſhort, as ŏppŏrtunity.

In monoſyllables a ſingle vowel before a ſingle conſonant is ſhort, as ſtag, frog.

Of CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried ſound, ſuch as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debt, debtor, ſubtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thumb, climb, comb, womb.

It is uſed before l and r, as black, brown.

C.

C has before e and i the ſound of ſ; as ſincerely, centrick, century, circular, ciſtern, city, ſiccity: before a, o, and u, it ſounds like k, as calm, concavity, copper, incorporate, curioſity, concupiſcence.

C might be omitted in the language without loſs, ſince one of its ſounds might be ſupplied by ſ, and the other by k, but that it preſerves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captive from captivus.

Ch has a ſound which is analyſed into tſh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the ſame ſound which the Italians give to the c ſimple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is ſounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymiſt, ſcheme, choler. Arch is commonly ſounded ark before a vowel, as archangel; and with the Engliſh ſound of ch before a conſonant, as archbiſhop.

Ch, in ſome French words not yet aſſimilated, ſounds like ſh, as machine, chaiſe.

C, according to Engliſh orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write ſtick, block, which were originally ſticke, blocke, in ſuch words. C is now mute.

It is uſed before l and r, as clock, croſs.

Is uniform in its ſound, as death, diligent.

It is uſed before r, as draw, droſs; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, it is numbered by the grammarians among the ſemivowels, yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiouſly ſounded before a liquid, as flaſk, fly, freckle. It has an unvariable ſound, except that of is ſometimes ſpoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two ſounds, one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other ſoft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, ſnug, ſong, frog.

Before e and i the ſound is uncertain.

G before e is ſoft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, geeſe, get, gewgaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as ſinging, ſtronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as finger.

G is mute before n, as gnaſh, ſign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantick, gibbet, gibe, giblets, giles, gill, gilliflower, gin, ginger, gingle, gipſy.

Gh in the beginning of a word has the ſound of the hard g, as ghoſtly; in the middle, and ſometimes at the end, it is quite ſilent, as though, right, ſought, ſpoken tho', rite, ſoute.

It has often at the end the ſound of f, as laugh; whence laughter retains the ſame ſound in the middle; cough, trough, ſough, tough, enough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a conſonant, deeply guttural, which is ſtill continued among the Scotch.

G is uſed before b, l, and r.

H.

H is a note of aſpiration, and ſhows that the following vowel muſt be pronounced with a ſtrong emiſſion of the breath, as hat, horſe.

It ſeldom, perhaps never, begins any but the firſt ſyllable, in which it is always ſounded with a full breath, except in heir, herb, hoſtler, honour, humble, honeſt, humour, and their derivatives.

J.

J conſonant ſounds uniformly like the ſoft g, and is therefore a letter uſeleſs, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jeſter, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the ſound of hard c, and is uſed before e and i, where, according to Engliſh analogy, c would be ſoft, as kept, king, ſkirt, ſkeptick, for ſo it ſhould be written, not ſceptick.

It is uſed before n, as knell, knot, but totally loſes its ſound.

K is never doubled; but c is uſed before it to ſhorten the vowel by a double conſonant, as căckle, păckle.

L.

L has in Engliſh the ſame liquid ſound as in other languages.

The cuſtom is to double the l at the end of monoſyllables, as kill, will, full. Theſe words were originally written kille, wille, fulle; and when the e firſt grew ſilent, and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is ſometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, ſhould, pſalm, talk, ſalmon, falcon.

The Saxon, who delighted in guttural ſounds, ſometimes aſpirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaf, a loaf, or bread; hlaford, a lord; but this pronunciation is now diſuſed.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almoſt mute, as table, ſhuttle.

M.

M has always the ſame ſound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the ſame ſound, as noble, manners.

N is ſometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the ſame ſound, which the Welſh and Germans confound with B.

P is ſometimes mute, as in pſalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is uſed for f in words derived from the Greek, as philoſopher, philanthropy, Philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a ſound which our Saxon anceſtors well expreſſed by cp, cw, as quadrant, queen, equeſtrian, quilt, enquiry, quire, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is ſometimes ſounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, riſque, chequer.

R.

R has the ſame rough ſnarling ſound as in other tongues.

The Saxons uſed often to put b before it, as before l at the beginning of words.

Rh is uſed in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrhine, catarrhous, rheum, rheumatick, rhyme.

Re, at the end of ſome words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, ſepulchre.

S.

S has a hiſſing ſound, as ſibilation, ſiſter.

A ſingle s ſeldom ends any word, except the third perſon of verbs, as loves, grows; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, buſhes, diſtreſſes; the pronouns this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, ſurplus; the cloſe being always either in ſe, as houſe, horſe, or in ſi, as graſs, dreſs, bliſs, leſs, anciently graſſe, dreſſe.

S ſingle, at the end of words, has a groſſer ſound, like that of z, as trees, eyes, except this, thus, us, rebus, ſurplus.

It ſounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before, as intruſion; and like ſ, if it follows a conſonant, as converſion.

It ſounds like z before e mute, as refuſe, and before y final, as roſy; and in thoſe words, boſom, deſire, wiſdom, priſon, priſoner, preſent, préſent, damſel, caſement.

It is the peculiar quality of ſ, that it may be ſounded before all conſonants, except x and z, in which ſ is compriſed, x being only ks, and z a hard or groſs ſ. This ſ is therefore termed by grammarians ſue poteſtatis litera, the reaſon of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneouſly ſuppoſed to be, that in ſome words it might be doubled at pleaſure. Thus we find in ſeveral languages:

Σκίνυμι, ſcatter, ſdegno, ſdrucciolo, ſſavellare, σφίγξ, ſgombrare, ſgranare, ſhake, ſlumber, ſmell, ſtriſe, ſpace, ſplendour, ſpring, ſqueeze, ſhrew, ſtep, ſtrength, ſtramen, ſventura, ſwell.

S is mute in iſle, iſland, demeſne, viſcount.

T.

T has its cuſtomary ſound, as take, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the ſound of ſi, as ſalvation, except an ſ goes before, as queſtion, excepting likewiſe derivatives from y, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two ſounds; the one ſoft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The ſound is ſoft in theſe words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds, that, theſe, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, theſe, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is ſoftened at the end of a word, an e ſilent muſt be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a ſound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f in the Iſlandick alphabet, v is only diſtinguiſhed by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, ſome grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a conſonant; and not rather as it is called a double u or ou, as water may be reſolved into ouater; but letters of the ſame ſound are always reckoned conſonants in other alphabets: and it may be obſerved, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as froſty winter.

Wh has a ſound accounted peculiar to the Engliſh, which the Saxons better expreſſed by hp, hw, as what, whence, whiting; in whore only, and ſometimes in wholeſome, wh is ſounded like a ſimple h.

X.

X begins no Engliſh word; it has the ſound of ks, as axle, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a conſonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either vowel or diphthong, is a conſonant, ye,

ye, young. It is thought by ſome to be in all caſes a vowel. But it may be obſerved of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as roſy youth.

Z.

Z begins no word originally Engliſh; it has the ſound, as its name izzard or ſ hard expreſſes, of an ſ uttered with cloſer compreſſion of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, froze.

In orthography I have ſuppoſed orthoepy, or juſt utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expreſſing certain ſounds by proper characters. I have therefore obſerved in what words any of the letters are mute.

Moſt of the writers of Engliſh grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwiſe than they are written, and ſeem not ſufficiently to have conſidered, that of Engliſh, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one curſory and colloquial, the other regular and ſolemn. The curſory pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, unſkilfulneſs, or affectation. The ſolemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always leſs remote from the orthography, and leſs liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the curſory ſpeech of thoſe with whom they happened to converſe; and concluding that the whole nation combines to vitiate language in one manner, have often eſtabliſhed the jargon of the loweſt of the people as the model of ſpeech.

For pronunciation the beſt general rule is, to conſider thoſe as the moſt elegant ſpeakers who deviate leaſt from the written words.

There have been many ſchemes offered for the emendation and ſettlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earlieſt writers in rude ages, was at firſt very various and uncertain, and is yet ſufficiently irregular. Of theſe reformers ſome have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without conſidering that this is to meaſure by a ſhadow, to take that for a model or ſtandard which is changing while they apply it. Others, leſs abſurdly indeed, but with equal unlikelihood of ſucceſs, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of ſounds, that every ſound may have its own character, and every character a ſingle ſound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a ſynod of grammarians upon principles of ſcience. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books uſeleſs? or what advantage would a new orthography procure equivalent to the confuſion and perplexity of ſuch an alteration?

Some of theſe ſchemes I ſhall however exhibit, which may be uſed according to the diverſities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terrour to innovators.

One of the firſt who propoſed a ſcheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, ſecretary of ſtate to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and much practiſed in grammatical diſquiſitions. Had he written the following lines according to his ſcheme, they would have appeared thus.

At length Eraſmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the prieſthood, and the ſhame,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove thoſe holy Vandals off the ſtage.

At lengð Eraſmus, ðat great inzurd nām,
Ae glori of ðe prēſthūd, and ðe shām,
Stemmd ðe wīld torrent of a barb'rous āj,
And drōv ðōe hōli Vandals ōff ðe stāj.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated maſter of St. Paul's ſchool in London; which I cannot repreſent exactly for want of types, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters now in uſe ſo as to make it underſtood, exhibiting two ſtanzas of Spenſer in the reformed orthography.

Spenſer, book iii. canto 5.

Unthankful wretch, ſaid he, is this the meed,
With which her ſovereign mercy thou doſt quite?
Thy life ſhe ſaved by her gracious deed;
But thou doſt ween with villanous deſpight,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than ſo diſloyally,
Deem of her high deſert, or ſeem ſo light.
Fair death it is to ſhun more ſhame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love diſloyally.
But if to love diſloyalty it be,
Shall I then hate her, that from deathes door
Me brought? ah! far be ſuch reproach from me.
What can I leſs do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot reſtore?
Die, rather die, and dying do her ſerve,
Dying her ſerve, and living her adore.
Thy life ſhe gave, thy life ſhe doth deſerve;
Die, rather die, than ever from her ſervice ſwerve.

Vaþankful wreč, ſaid hj, iz ðis ðe mjd,
Wiþ wiċ her ſoverain merſi ðou duſt qujt?
Dj ljf ſhj ſāvd bj her graſius djd;
But ðou duſt ween wiþ vilanus diſpjt,
To blot her honor, and her hevnlj ljht.
Dj, raðer dj, ðan ſo diſlojalj,
Djm of her hiþ dezert, or ſjm ſo ljt.
Fair deþ it iz tu ſun mor ſām; ðan dj.
Dj, raðer dj, ðan ever luv diſlojalj.

But if to lub diſloialtj it bj,
Sal I ðen hāt her ðat from d-ðez dūrz
Mj broubt? ah! far bj ſuch reproch from mj.
Wat kan I lis du ðen her lub ðerfor,
Sib I her du reward kanot reſtor?
Dj, raðer dj, and djiġ du her ſerb,
Djiġ her ſerb, and liviġ her adur.
Dj ljf ſhi gāv, ðj ljf ſhj dub dizerb;
Dj, raðer di, ðen ever from her ſervis ſwirb.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an underſtanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He ſeems to have been more ſanguine than his predeceſſors, for he printed his book according to his own ſcheme; which the following ſpecimen will make eaſily underſtood.

But whenſoever you have occaſion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to ſtand upon your guard, than to truſt to their gentleneſs. For the ſafeguard of your face, which they have moſt mind unto, provide a purſehood, made of coarſe boultering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more ſafety is to be lined againſt the eminent parts with woollen cloth. Firſt cut a piece about an inch and an half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being ſowed in his place, join unto it two ſhort pieces of the ſame breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the checks, and then ſet an other piece about the breadth of a ſhilling againſt the top of the noſe. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may ſerve though it be in the heat of the day.

Bet penſoever you hav' occaſion to trubble ðeir patienc', or to coom among ðem being trubled, it is better to ſtand upon your gard, ðan to truſt to ðeir gentleneſs. For ðe ſaf'gard of your fac', pich ðey hav' moſt mind' unto, provid' a purſehood, mad' of coarſe boultering, to bee drawn and knit about your collar, pich for mor' ſaf'ty is to bee lined againſt ð' eminent parts wit woollen clooth. Firſt cut a piec' about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by ðe temples and for'head, from one ear to ðe oðer; pich being ſowed in his plac', join unto it two ſhort pieces of the ſam breadth under ðe eys, for the bals of ðe cheeks, and then ſet an oðer piec' about ðe breadth of a ſhilling againſt the top of ðe noſe. At oðer tim's, ſhen ðey ar' not angered, a little piec' half a quarter broad, to cover ðe eys and parts about them, may ſerve ðowg it be in the heat of ðe day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in ſuch editions of the works of Milton as were publiſhed by himſelf. Of theſe reformers every man had his own ſcheme; but they agreed in one general deſign of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by ejecting ſuch as they thought ſuperfluous. Some of them would have written theſe lines thus:

——All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier dais.

Biſhop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philoſophical language, propoſed, without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

Our Fádher hwitch art in héven, hallowed bi dhyi nám, dhyi cingdým cým, dhy will bi dýn in erth as it is in héven, &c.

We have ſince had no general reformers; but ſome ingenious men have endeavoured to deſerve well of their country, by writing honor and labor for honour and labour, red for read in the preter-tenſe, ſais for ſays, repete for repeat, explane for explain, or declame for declaim. Of theſe it may be ſaid, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both becauſe they have innovated little, and becauſe few have followed them.

ETYMOLOGY.

ETYMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the ſenſe of the ſame word is diverſified; as horſe, horſes; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The Engliſh have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite ſignification, and means one, with ſome reference to more; as, This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a ſword, that is, ſome ſword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of thoſe that are men than one of thoſe that are boys. An army might enter without reſiſtance, that is, any army.

In the ſenſes in which we uſe a or an in the ſingular, we ſpeak in the plural without an article; as, theſe are good books.

I have made an the original article, becauſe it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new uſe, as the German ein, and the French

French un; the n being cut off before a conſonant in the ſpeed of utterance.

Grammarians of the laſt age direct, that an ſhould be uſed before h; whence it appears that the Engliſh anciently aſpirated leſs. An is ſtill uſed before the ſilent h, as an herb, an honeſt man: but otherwiſe a; as,

A horſe, a horſe, my kingdom for a horſe.
Shakeſpeare.

THE has a particular and definite ſignification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the uſe of man; that is, for thoſe beings that are cattle, and his uſe that is man.

The is uſed in both numbers.

I am as free as Nature firſt made man,
Ere the baſe laws of ſervitude began,
When wild in woods the noble ſavage ran. Dryd.

Many words are uſed without articles; as,

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Ariſtarchus, Jeruſalem, Athens, Rome, London. GOD is uſed as a proper name.

2. Abſtract names, as blakneſs, witchcraft, virtue, vice, beauty, uglineſs, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindneſs.

3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water; This is not braſs, but ſteel.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVES.

The relations of Engliſh nouns to words going before or following are not expreſſed by caſes, or changes of termination, but as in moſt of the other European languag s by prepoſitions, unleſs we may be ſaid to have a genitive caſe.

	Singular.
Nom.	Magiſter,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Gen.	Magiſtri,	of a Maſter, of the Maſter, or Maſters, the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtro,	to a Maſter, to the Maſter.
Acc.	Magiſtrum,	a Maſter, the Maſter.
Voc.	Magiſter,	Maſter, O Maſter.
Abl.	Magiſtro,	from a Maſter, from the Maſter.
	Plural.
Nom.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Gen.	Magiſtrorum,	of Maſters, of the Maſters.
Dat.	Magiſtris,	to Maſters, to the Maſters.
Acc.	Magiſtros,	Maſters, the Maſters.
Voc.	Magiſtri,	Maſters, O Maſters.
Abl.	Magiſtris,	from Maſters, from the Maſters.

Our nouns are therefore only declined thus:

Maſter,	Gen.	Maſters.	Plur.	Maſters.
Scholar,	Gen.	Scholars.	Plur.	Scholars.

These genitives are always written with a mark of eliſion, maſter's, ſcholar's, according to an opinion long received, that the 's is a contraction of his, as the ſoldier's valour, for the ſoldier his valour: but this cannot be the true original, becauſe 's is put to female nouns, Woman's beauty; the Virgin's delicacy; Haughty Juno's unrelenting hate: and collective nouns, as Women's paſſions; the rabble's inſolence; the multitude's folly; in all theſe caſes it is apparent that his cannot be underſtood. We ſay likewiſe, the foundation's ſtrength, the diamond's luſtre, the winter's ſeverity; but in theſe caſes his may be underſtood, he and his having formerly been applied to neuters in the place now ſupplied by it and its.

The learned, the ſagacious Wallis, to whom every Engliſh grammarian owes a tribute of reverence, calls this modification of the noun an adjective poſſeſſive; I think with no more propriety than he might have applied the ſame to the genitive in equitum decus, Trojæ eris, or any other Latin genitive.

This termination of the noun ſeems to conſtitute a real genitive indicating poſſeſſion. It is derived to us from thoſe who declined ꝑmiδ, a ſmith; Gen. ꝑmiδeꝛ, of a ſmith; Plur. ꝑmiδeꝛ, or ꝑmiδaꝛ, ſmiths; and ſo in two other of their ſeven declenſions.

It is a further confirmation of this opinion, that in the old poets both the genitive and plural were longer by a ſyllable than the original word; knitis, for knight's, in Chaucer; leavis, for leaves, in Spenſer.

When a word ends in s, the genitive may be the ſame with the nominative, as Venus temple.

The plural is formed by adding s, as teble, tables; fly, flies; ſiſter, ſiſters; wood, woods; or es where s could not otherwiſe be ſounded, as after ch, s, ſh, x, z; after c ſounded like s, and g like j; the mute e is vocal before s, as lance, lances; outrage, outrages.

The formation of the plural and genitive ſingular is the ſame.

A few words yet make the plural in n, as men, women, oxen, ſwine, and more anciently eyen and ſhoon. This formation is that which generally prevails in the Teutonick dialects.

Words that end in f commonly form their plural by ves, as loaf, loaves; calf, calves.

Except a few, muff, muffs; chief, chiefs. So beef, roof, proof, relief, miſchief, puff, cuff, dwarf, handkerchief, grief.

Irregular plurals are teeth from tooth, lice from louſe, mice from mouſe, geeſe from gooſe, feet from foot, dice from die, pence from penny, brethren from brother, children from child.

Plurals ending in s have no genitives; but we ſay, Womens excellencies, and Weigh the mens wits againſt the ladies hairs. Pope.

Dr. Wallis thinks the Lords' houſe may be ſaid for the houſe of Lords; but ſuch phraſes are not now in uſe; and ſurely an Engliſh ear rebels againſt them.

Of ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives in the Engliſh language are wholly indeclinable; having neither caſe, gender, nor number, and being added to ſubſtantives in all relations without any change; as, a good woman, good women, of a good woman; a good man, good men, of good men.

The Compariſon of Adjectives.

The comparative degree of adjectives is formed by adding er, the ſuperlative by adding eſt, to the poſitive; as, fair, fair*er*, fair*eſt*; lovely, lovel*ier*, lovel*ieſt*; ſweet, ſweet*er*, ſweet*eſt*; low, low*er*, low*eſt*; high, high*er*, high*eſt*.

Some words are irregularly compared; as good, better, beſt; bad, worſe, worſt; little, leſs, leaſt; near, nearer, next; much, more, moſt; many (or moe), more (for moer), moſt (for moeſt); late, later, lateſt or laſt.

Some comparatives form a ſuperlative by adding moſt, as nether, nethermoſt; outer, outmoſt; under, undermoſt; up, upper, uppermoſt; fore, former, foremoſt.

Moſt is ſometimes added to a ſubſtantive, as topmoſt, ſouthmoſt.

Many adjectives do not admit of compariſon by terminations, and are only compared by more and moſt, as benevolent, more benevolent, moſt benevolent.

All adjectives may be compared by more and moſt, even when they have comparatives and ſuperlatives regularly formed; as fair; fairer, or more fair; faireſt, or moſt fair.

In adjectives that admit a regular compariſon, the comparative more is often uſed than the ſuperlative more, as more fair is oftener written for fairer, than moſt fair for faireſt.

The compariſon of adjectives is very uncertain; and being much regulated by commodiouſneſs of utterance, or agreeableneſs of ſound, is not eaſily reduced to rules.

Monoſyllables are commonly compared.

Polyſyllables, or words of more than two ſyllables, are ſeldom compared otherwiſe than by more and moſt, as deplorable, more deplorable, moſt deplorable.

Diſſyllables are ſeldom compared if they terminate in ſome, as fulſome, toilſome; in ful, as careful, ſpleenful, dreadful; in ing, as trifling, charming; in ous, as perous; in leſs, as careleſs, harmleſs; in ed, as wretched; in id, as candid; in al, as mortal; in ent, as recent, fervent; in ain, as certain; in ive, as miſſive; in dy, as woody; in fy, as puffy; in ky, as rocky, except lucky; in my, as roomy; in ny, as ſkinny; in py, as ropy, except happy; in ry, as hoary.

Some comparatives and ſuperlatives are yet found in good writers formed without regard to the foregoing rules; but in a language ſubjected ſo little and ſo lately to grammar, ſuch anomalies muſt frequently occur.

So ſhady is compared by Milton.

She in ſhadieſt covert hid,
Tun'd her nocturnal note. Milton.

And virtuous:

What ſhe wills to ſay or do,
Seems wiſeſt, virtuouſeſt, diſcreeteſt, beſt. Milton.

So trifling, by Ray, who is indeed of no great authority.

It is not ſo decorous, in reſpect of God, that he ſhould immediately do all the meaneſt and trifingeſt things himſelf, without making uſe of any inferior or ſubordinate miniſter. Ray on the Creation.

Famous, by Milton.

I ſhall be named among the famouſeſt
Of women, ſung at ſolemn feſtivals. Milton.

Inventive, by Aſcham.

Thoſe have the inventiveſt heads for all purpoſes, and roundeſt tongues in all matters. Aſcham.

Mortal, by Bacon.

The mortaleſt poiſons practiſed by the Weſt-Indians, have ſome mixture of the blood, fat, or fleſh of man. Bacon.

Natural, by Wotton.

I ſhall now deliver a few of the propereſt and natura'leſt conſiderations that belong to this piece. Wotton.

Wretched, by Johnſon.

The wretcheder are the contemners of all helps; ſuch as preſuming on their own naturals, deride diligence, and mock at terms when they underſtand not things. Ben Johnſon.

Powerful, by Milton.

We have ſuſtain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heav'n's great King hath powerfulleſt to ſend
Againſt us from about his throne. Milton.

The termination in iſh may be accounted in ſome ſort a degree of compariſon, by which the ſignification is diminiſhed below the poſitive, as black, blackiſh, or tending to blackneſs; ſalt, ſaltiſh, or having a little taſte of ſalt: they therefore admit no compariſon. This termination is ſeldom added but to words expreſſing ſenſible qualities, nor often to words of above one ſyllable, and is ſcarcely uſed in the ſolemn or ſublime ſtyle.

Of PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the Engliſh language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the ſame.

The pronouns perſonal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accuſ. and other oblique caſes.	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

You is commonly uſed in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the ſecond perſon plural is uſed for the ſecond perſon ſingular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	Applied to maſculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	Applied to neuters or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For it the practice of ancient writers was to uſe he, and for its, his.

The poſſeſſive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without caſes or change of termination.

The poſſeſſive of the firſt perſon is my, mine, our, ours; of the ſecond, thy, thine, you, yours; of the third, from he, his, from ſhe, her, and hers, and in the plural their, theirs, for both ſexes.

Our, yours, hers, theirs, are uſed when the ſubſtantive preceding is ſeparated by a verb, as Theſe are our books. Theſe books are ours. Your children excel ours in ſtature, but ours ſurpaſs yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithſtanding their ſeeming plural termination, are applied equally to ſingular and plural ſubſtantives, as This book is ours. Theſe books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly uſed before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which though now diſuſed in proſe, might be ſtill properly continued in poetry: they are uſed as ours and yours, when they are referred to a ſubſtantive preceding.

Their and theirs are the poſſeſſives likewiſe of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whoſoever, whatſoever.

Whoſe is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whoſe mortal taſte
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Whether is only uſed in the nominative and accuſative caſes; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as, Whether of theſe is left I know not. Whether ſhall I chooſe? It is now almoſt obſolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whoſoever, whatſoever, being compounded of who or what, and ſoever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all caſes,	This	Theſe
	That	Thoſe
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not uſed but when it is referred to a ſubſtantive preceding, as I have ſent other horſes. I have not ſent the ſame horſes, but others.

Another, being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal uſe. Hereof, herein, hereby, hereafter, herewith, thereof, therein, thereby, thereupon, therewith, whereof, wherein, whereby, whereupon, wherewith, which ſignify, of this, in this, &c. of that, in that, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in uſe. The reſt ſeem to be paſſing by degrees into neglect, though proper, uſeful, and analogous. They are referred both to ſingular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words uſed only in conjunction with pronouns, own and ſelf.

Own is added to poſſeſſives, both ſingular and plural, as my own hand, our own houſe. It is emphatical, and implies a ſilent contrariety or oppoſition; as, I live in my own houſe, that is, not in a hired houſe. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to poſſeſſives, as myſelf, yourſelves; and ſometimes to perſonal pronouns, as himſelf, itſelf, themſelves. It then, like own, expreſſes emphaſis and oppoſition, as I did this myſelf, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as, We hurt ourſelves by vain rage.

Himſelf, itſelf, themſelves, is ſuppoſed by Wallis to be put by corruption, for his ſelf, it' ſelf, their ſelves; ſo that ſelf is always a ſubſtantive. This ſeems juſtly obſerved, for we ſay, He came himſelf; Himſelf ſhall do this; where himſelf cannot be an accuſative.

Of the VERB.

Engliſh verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languiſh. The neuters are formed like the actives.

Moſt verbs ſignifying action, may likewiſe ſignify condition or habit, and become neuters, as I love, I am in love; I ſtrike, I am now ſtriking.

Verbs have only two tenſes inflected in their terminations, the preſent, and ſimple preterite; the other tenſes are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, ſhall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The paſſive voice is formed by joining the participle preterite to the ſubſtantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Preſent Tenſe.

Sing. I have, thou haſt, he hath or has;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hath, but now more frequently uſed both in verſe and proſe.

Simple Preterite.

Sing. I had, thou hadſt, he had;
Plur. We had, ye had, they had.

Compound Preterite.

Sing. I have had, thou haſt had, he has had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Preterpluperfect.

Preterpluperfect.

Sing. I had had, thou hadſt had, he had had;
Plur. We had had, ye had had, they had had.

Future.

Sing: I ſhall have, thou ſhalt have, he ſhall have.
Plur. We ſhall have, ye ſhall have, they ſhall have.

Second Future.

Sing. I will have, thou wilt have, he will have;
Plur. We will have, ye will have, they will have.

By reading theſe future tenſes may be obſerved the variations of ſhall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have or have thou, let him have;
Plur. Let us have, have or have ye, let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Preſent.

Sing. I have, thou have, he have;
Plur. We have, ye have, they have.

Preterite ſimple as in the Indicative.

Preterite compound.

Sing. I have had, they have had, he have had;
Plur. We have had, ye have had, they have had.

Future.

Sing. I ſhall have, as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I ſhall have had, thou ſhalt have had, he ſhall have had;
Plur. We ſhall have had, ye ſhall have had, they ſhall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of ſpeaking is expreſſed by may, can, in the preſent; and might, could, or ſhould, in the preterite, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Preſent.

Sing. I may have, thou mayſt have, he may have;
Plur. We may have, ye may have, they may have.

Preterite.

Sing. I might have, thou mightſt have, he might have;
Plur. We might have, ye might have, they might have.

Preſent.

Sing. I can have, thou canſt have, he can have;
Plur. We can have, ye can have, they can have.

Preterite.

Sing. I could have, thou couldſt have, he could have;
Plur. We could have, ye could have, they could have.

In like manner ſhould is united to the verb.

There is likewiſe a double Preterite.

Sing. I ſhould have had, thou ſhouldſt have had, he ſhould have had;
Plur. We ſhould have had, ye ſhould have had, they ſhould have had.

In like manner we uſe, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Preſent. To have. Preterite. To have had.
Participle preſent. Having. Participle preter. Had.

Verb Active. To Love.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I love, thou loveſt, he loveth or loves;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.

Preterite ſimple.

Sing. I loved, thou lovedſt, he loved;
Plur. We loved, ye loved, they loved.

Preterperfect compared. I have loved, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had loved, &c.
Future. I ſhall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love or love thou, let him love;
Plur. Let us love, love or love ye, let them love.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I love, thou love, he love;
Plur. We love, ye love, they love.
Preterite ſimple, as in the Indicative.
Preterite compound. I have loved, &c.
Future. I ſhall love, &c.
Second Future. I ſhall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Preſent. I may or can love, &c.
Preterite. I might, could, or ſhould love, &c.
Double Pret. I might, could, or ſhould have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To love. Preterite. To have loved.
Participle preſent. Loving. Participle paſt. Loved.

The paſſive is formed by the addition of the participle preterite, to the different tenſes of the verb to be, which muſt therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I am, thou art, he is;
Plur. We are or be, ye are or be, they are or be.

The plural be is now little in uſe.

Preterite.

Sing. I was, thou waſt or wert, he was;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.

Wert is properly of the conjunctive mood, and ought not to be uſed in the indicative.

Preterite compound. I have been, &c.
Preterpluperfect. I had been, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I be, thou beeſt, he be;
Plur. We be, ye be, they be.

Preterite.

Sing. I were, thou wert, he were;
Plur. We were, ye were, they were.
Preterite compound. I have been, &c:
Future. I ſhall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or ſhould be; could, would, or ſhould have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To be. Preterite. To have been.
Participle pref. Being. Participle preter. Having been.

Paſſive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I ſhall have been loved, &c.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or ſhould be loved, &c. I might, could, or ſhould have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Preſent. To be loved. Preterite. To have been loved.
Participle. Loved.

There is another form of Engliſh verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Preſent.

Sing. I do, thou doſt, he doth;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

Preterite.

Sing. I did, thou didſt, he did;
Plur. We did, ye did, they did.
Preterite, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future. I ſhall or will do, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Do thou, let him do;
Plur. Let us do, do ye, let them do.

Conjunctive. Preſent.

Sing. I do, thou do, he do;
Plur. We do, ye do, they do.

The reſt are as in the indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.
Participle pref. Doing. Participle preter. Done.

Do is sometimes used superfluously, as, I do love, I did love; simply for I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vitious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as,

I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakespeare.

It is frequently joined with a negative; as, I like her, but I do not love her; I wished him success, but did not help him.

The Imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as, Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons; as, Do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet grieve? Did she not die?

Do is thus used only in the simple tenses.

There is another manner of conjugating neuters verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as,

I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé, French.
I was walked out, exieram; Je m' etois promené.

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, dolco. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit procella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as, We were walking, ἐτυγχάνομεν περιπατοῦντες, I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification; as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The book is a printing, The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of versification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers after if, though, ere, before, whether, except, unless, whatsoever; whomsoever; and words of wishing; as, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

Of Irregular Verbs.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Johnson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs and the verbs derived from them very frequent; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr. Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterite, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other place for irregularity.

The first irregularity, is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as, lov'd for loved; after c, ch, sh, f, k, x, and after the consonants s, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, snatch't, fish't, wak't, dwel't, smel't; for plac'd snatch'd, fish'd, wak'd, dwel'd, smel'd; or placed, snatched, fished, waked, dwelled, smelled.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterite in t, even in solemn language; as crept, felt, dwelt; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t; as, vext: this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus, kept, slept, wept, crept, swept; from the verbs, to keep, to sleep, to weep, to creep, to sweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coalesce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced: as, read, led, spread, feed, shred, bid, hid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, rid; from the verbs, to read, to lead, to spread, to shed, to shread, to bid, to hide, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to ride. And thus, cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, beat, sweat, sit, quit, smit, writ, bit, bit, met, shot; from the verbs, to cast, to hurt, to cost, to burst, to eat, to beat, to sweat, to sit, to quit, to smite, to write, to bite, to hit, to meet, to shoot. And in like manner, lent, sent, rent, girt; from the verbs, to lend, to send, to rend, to gird.

The participle preterite or passive is often formed in en, instead of ed; as been, taken, given, slain, known, from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, bidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, bid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to bide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, shewn, hewn, mown, loaden, laden, as well as sow'd, shew'd, hew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to sow, to shew, to hew, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterite, as write, wrote, written, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book is written, is better than The book is wrote, though wrote may be used in poetry.

There are other anomalies in the preterite.

1. Win, spin, begin, swim, strike, stick, sing, sting, fling, ring, wring, spring, swing, drink, sink, shrink, stink, come, run, find, bind, grind, wind, both in the preterite imperfect and participle passive, give won, spun, begun, swum, struck, stuck, sung, stung, flung, rung, wrung, sprung, swung, drunk, sunk, shrunk, hung, come, run, found, bound, ground, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterite by a, as began, rang, sang, sprang, drank, came, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participle passive likewise take en, as stricken, strucken, drunken, bounden.

2. Fight, teach, reach, seek, beseech, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fought, taught, raught, sought, besought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as teached, reached, beseeched, catched, worked.

3. Take, shake, forsake, wake, awake, stand, break, speak, bear, shear, swear, tear, weave, cleave, strive, thrive, drive, shine, rise, arise, smite, write, bide, abide, ride, choose, chuse, tread, get, beget, forget, seethe, make in both preterite and participle took, forsook, woke, awoke, stood, broke, spoke, bore, shore, swore, tore, wore, wove, clove, strove, throve, drove, shone, rose, arose, smote, wrote, bode, abode, rode, chose, trode, got, begot, forgot, sod. But we say likewise, thrive, rise, smit, writ, abid, rid. In the preterite some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, bare, share, sware, tare, ware, clave, gat, begat, forgat, and perhaps some others, but more rarely. In the participle passive are many of them formed by en, as taken, shaken, forsaken, broken, spoken, born, shorn, sworn, torn, worn, woven, cloven, thriven, driven, risen, smitten, ridden, chosen, trodden, gotten, begotten, forgotten, sodden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as waked, awaked, sheared, weaved, cleaved, abided, seethed.

4. Give, bid, sit, make in the preterite gave, bade, sate; in the participle passive, given, bidden, sitten; but in both bid.

5. Draw, know, grow, throw, blow, crow like a cock, fly, slay, see, ly, make their preterite drew, knew, grew, threw, blew, crew, flew, slew, saw, lay; their participles passive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, flown, slain, seen, lien, lain. Yet from flee is made fled; from go, went, from the old wend, and the participle gone.

Of Derivation.

That the Engliſh language may be more eaſily underſtood, it is neceſſary to enquire how its derivative words are deduced from their primitives, and how the primitives are borrowed from other languages. In this enquiry I ſhall ſometimes copy Dr. Wallis, and ſometimes endeavour to ſupply his defects, and rectify his errours.

Nouns are derived from verbs.

The thing implied in the verb as done or produced, is commonly either the preſent of the verb; as, to love, love; to fright, a fright; to fight, a fight; or the preterite of the verb, as, to ſtrike, I ſtrick or ſtrook, a ſtroke.

The action is the ſame with the participle preſent, as loving, frighting, fighting, ſtriking.

The agent, or perſon acting, is denoted by the ſyllable er added to the verb, as lover, frighter, ſtriker.

Subſtantives, adjectives, and ſometimes other parts of ſpeech, are changed into verbs: in which caſe the vowel is often lengthened, or the conſonant ſoftened; as, a houſe, to houſe; braſs, to braze; glaſs, to glaze; graſs, to graze; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fiſh, to fiſh; oyl, to oyl; further, to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes the termination en is added, eſpecially to adjectives; as, haſte, to haſten; length, to lengthen; ſtrength, to ſtrengthen; ſhort, to ſhorten; faſt, to faſten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; ſoft, to ſoften.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as, a louſe, louſy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; luſt, luſty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy; a heart, hearty; a hand, handy.

From ſubſtantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as, joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; uſe, uſeful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

Sometimes, in almoſt the ſame ſenſe, but with ſome kind of diminution thereof, the termination ſome is added, denoting ſomething, or in ſome degree; as, delight, delightſome; game, gameſome; irk, irkſome; burthen, burthenſome; trouble, troubleſome; light, lightſome; hand, handſome; alone, loneſome; toil, toilſome.

On the contrary, the termination leſs added to ſubſtantives, makes adjectives ſignifying want; as, worthleſs, witleſs, heartleſs, joyleſs, careleſs, helpleſs. Thus comfort, comfortleſs; ſap, ſapleſs.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the particle un prefixed to many adjectives, or in before words derived from the Latin; as, pleaſant, unpleaſant; wiſe, unwiſe; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfruitful, unuſeful, and many more.

The original Engliſh privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latin, or its deſcendants, words already ſignifying privation, as inefficacious, impious, indiſcreet, the inſeparable particles un and in have fallen into confuſion, from which it is not eaſy to diſentangle them.

Un is prefixed to all words originally Engliſh, as untrue, untruth, untaught, unhandſome.

Un is prefixed to all participles made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unaſſiſting, unaided, undelighted, unendeared.

Un ought never to be prefixed to a participle preſent, to mark a forbearance of action, as unſighing; but a privation of habit, as unpitying.

Un is prefixed to moſt ſubſtantives which have an Engliſh termination, as unfertileneſs, unperfectneſs, which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or im, as infertility, imperfection; uncivil, incivility; unactive, inactivity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is uſual to retain the particle prefixed, as indecency, inelegant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unpolite, ungallant.

The prepoſitive particles dis and mis, derived from the des and mes of the French, ſignify almoſt the ſame as un; yet dis rather imports contrariety than privation, ſince it anſwers to the Latin prepoſition de. Mis inſinuates ſome error, and for the moſt part may be rendered by the Latin words male or perperam. To like, to diſlike; honour, diſhonour; to honour, to grace, to diſhonour, to diſgrace; to deign, to diſdeign; chance, hap, miſchance, miſhap; to take, to miſtake; deed, miſdeed; to uſe, to miſuſe; to employ, to miſemploy; to apply, to miſapply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain the ſame ſignification, as diſtinguiſh, diſtinguo; detract, detraho; defame, defamo; detain, detineo.

The termination ly added to ſubſtantives, and ſometimes to adjectives, forms adjectives that import ſome kind of ſimilitude or agreement, being formed by contraction of lick or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The ſame termination ly added to adjectives, forms adverbs of like ſignification; as, beautiful, beautifully; ſweet, ſweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with ſome degree of ſweetneſs.

The termination iſh added to adjectives, imports diminution; and added to ſubſtantives, imports ſimilitude or tendency to a character; as, green, greeniſh; white, whitiſh; ſoft, ſoftiſh; a thief, thieviſh; a wolf, wolviſh; a child, childiſh.

We have forms of diminutives in ſubſtantives, though not frequent; as, a hill, a hillock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, pickrel; this is a French termination: a gooſe, a goſling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chicken; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence the patronimick Hawkins, Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

Yet ſtill there is another form of diminution among the Engliſh, by leſſening the ſound itſelf, eſpecially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that ſometimes not ſo much by the change of the letters, as of their pronunciation; as, ſup, ſip, ſoop, ſop, ſippet, where, beſides the extenuation of the vowel, there is added the French termination et: top, tip; ſpit, ſpout; babe, baby, booby, βῦναις; great pronounced long, eſpecially if with a ſtronger ſound, grea-t; little pronounced long, lee-tle; ting, tang, tong, imports a ſucceſſion of ſmaller and then greater ſounds; and ſo in jingle, jangle, tingle, tangle, and many other made words,

Much however of this is arbitrary and fanciful, depending wholly on oral utterance, and therefore ſcarcely worthy the notice of Wallis.

Of concrete adjectives are made abſtract ſubſtantives, by adding the termination neſs, and a few in hood or head, noting character or qualities; as, white, whiteneſs; hard, hardneſs; great, greatneſs; ſkilful, ſkilfulneſs, unſkilfulneſs; godhead, manhood, maidenhead, widowhood, knighthood, prieſthood, likelihood, falſehood.

There are other abſtracts, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a ſmall change being ſometimes made; as, long, length; ſtrong, ſtrength; broad, wide, breadth, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearth; ſlow, ſlowth; merry, mirth; heal, health; well, weal, wealth; dry, drought; young, youth; and ſo moon, month.

Like theſe are ſome words derived from verbs; dy, death; till, tilth; grow, growth; mow, later mowth, after mowth; commonly ſpoken and written later math, after math; ſteal, ſtealth; bear, birth; rue, ruth; and probably earth from to ear or plow; fly, flight; weigh, weight; fray, fright; to draw, draught.

Theſe ſhould rather be written flighth, frighth, only that cuſtom prevails, leſt h ſhould be twice repeated.

The ſame form retain faith, ſpight, wreathe, wrath, broth, froth, breath, ſooth, worth, light, wight, and the like, whoſe primitives are either entirely obſolete, or ſeldom occur. Perhaps they are derived from fey or foy, ſpry, wry, wreak, brew, mew, fry, brey, jay, work.

Some ending in ſhip imply an office, employment, or condition; as, kingſhip, wardſhip, guardianſhip, partnerſhip, ſtewardſhip, headſhip, lordſhip.

Thus worſhip, that is, worthſhip; whence worſhipful, to worſhip.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do eſpecially denote dominion, at leaſt ſtate or condition; as, kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, chriſtendom, freedom, wiſdom, whoredom, biſhoprick, bailywick.

Ment and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the ſame import with us as among them; ſcarcely ever occuring, except in words derived from the French, as, commandment, uſage.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

There are in Engliſh often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation; as, to beat, a lat, latten, a battle, a beetle, a battle-door, to batter, batter, a kind of glutinous compoſition for food. All theſe are of ſimilar ſignification, and perhaps derived from the Latin latus. Thus take, touch, tickle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from the Latin tango, tetigi, tactum.

From two are formed twain, twice, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twiſt, twirl, twig, twitch, twinge, between, betwixt, twilight, twibil.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more ſubtlety than ſolidity, and ſuch as perhaps might in every language be enlarged without end.

Sn uſually implies the noſe, and what relates to it: From the Latin naſus are derived the French nez and the Engliſh noſe; and neſſe, a promontory, as projecting like a noſe. But as if from the conſonants ns taken from naſus, and tranſpoſed, that they may the better correſpond, ſn denotes naſus; and thence are derived many words that relate to the noſe, as ſnout, ſneeze, ſnore, ſnort, ſnear, ſnicker, ſnot, ſnivel, ſnite, ſnuff, ſnuffle, ſnaffle, ſnarle, ſnudge.

There is another ſn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin ſinuo, as ſnake, ſneak, ſnail, ſnare; ſo likewiſe ſnap and ſnatch, ſnib, ſnub.

Bl implies a blaſt; as, blow, blaſt, to blaſt, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blaſt one's reputation; bleat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bleak, blay, bleach, bluſter, blart, bliſter, blab, bladder, blob, bliſter, bladder-bl't, bladder cheek't, bloted, blote-herrings, blaſt, blaze, to blow, that is, bliſom, bloom; and perhaps blood and bluſh.

In the native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the letters and the thing ſignified; and therefore the ſounds of letters ſmaller, ſharper, louder, cloſer, ſofter, ſtronger, clearer, more obſcure, and more ſtridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things ſignified.

Thus words that begin with ſtr intimate the force and effect of the thing ſignified, as if probably derived from στρωννυμι, or ſtrenuus; as, ſtrong, ſtrength, ſtrew, ſtrike, ſtreake, ſtroke, ſtripe, ſtrive, ſtrife, ſtruggle, ſtrout, ſtrat, ſtretch, ſtrait, ſtrict, ſtreight, that is, narrow, diſtrain, ſtreſs, diſtreſs, ſtring, ſtrap, ſtream, ſtreamer, ſtrand, ſtrip, ſtray, ſtruggle, ſtrange, ſtride, ſtraddle.

St in like manner implies ſtrength, but in a leſs degree, ſo much only as is ſufficient to preſerve what has been already communicated, rather than acquire any new degree; as if it were derived from the Latin ſto: for example, ſtand, ſtay, that is, to remain, or to ſtop; ſtaff, ſtay, that is, to oppoſe; ſtop, to ſtuff, ſtiffe, to stay, that is, to ſtop; a stay, that is, an obſtacle; stick, stut, stutter, stammer, stagger, stickle, stick, stake, a ſharp pale, and any thing depoſited at play; stock, stem, sting, to sting, ſtink, stitch, stud, stanchion, stub, stubble, to stub up, stamp, whence stumble, stalk, to stalk, step, to stamp with the feet, whence to stamp, that is, to make an impreſſion and a ſtamp; stow, to stow, to bestow, steward or stoward, stead, steady, steadfast, stable, a stable, a stall, to stall, stool, stall, still, stall, stallage, stall, stage, still, adj. and still adv. stale, stout, sturdy, steed, stoat, stallion, stiff, stark-dead, to starve with hunger or cold; stone, steel, stern, stanch, to stanch blood, to stare, steep, steeple, stair, standard, a ſtated meaſure, stately. In all theſe, and perhaps ſome others, ſt denotes ſomething firm and fixed.

Thr implies a more violent degree of motion, as throw, thruſt, throng, throb, through, threat, threaten, thrall, throws.

Wr imply ſome ſort of obliquity or diſtortion, as wry, to wreathe, wreſt, wreſtle, wring, wrong, wrinch, wrench, wrangle, wrinkle, wrath, wreak, wreck, wretch, wriſt, wrap.

Sw imply a ſilent agitation, or a ſofter kind of lateral motion; as ſway, ſwag, to ſway, ſwagger, ſwerve, ſweat, ſweep, ſwill, ſwim, ſwing, ſwift, ſweet, ſwitch, ſwinge.

Nor is there much difference of ſm in ſmoothe, ſmug, ſmile, ſmirk, ſmite, which ſignifies the ſame as to ſtrike, but is a ſofter word; ſmall, ſmell, ſmack, ſmother, ſmart, a ſmart blow properly ſignifies ſuch a kind of ſtroke as with an originally ſilent motion implied in ſm, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar ſuddenly ended, as is ſhewn by t.

Cl denote a kind of adheſion or tenacity, as in cleave, clay, cling, climb, clamber, clammy, claſp, to claſp, to clip, to clinch, cloak, clog, cloſe, to cloſe, a clod, a clot, as a clot of blood, clouted cream, a clutter, a cluster.

Sp implies a kind of diſſipation or expanſion, eſpecially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from ſpargo or ſeparo: for example, ſpread, ſpring, ſprig, ſprout, ſprinkle, ſplit, ſplinter, ſpill, ſpit, ſputter, ſpatter.

Sl denotes a kind of ſilent fall, or a leſs obſervable motion; as in ſlime, ſlide, ſlip, ſlipper, ſly, ſleight, ſlit, ſlow, ſlack, ſlight, ſling, ſlap.

And ſo likewiſe aſh, in craſh, raſh, gaſh, flaſh, claſh, laſh, ſlaſh, plaſh, traſh, indicates ſomething acting more nimbly and ſharply. But uſh, in cruſh, ruſh, guſh, ſluſh, bluſh, bruſh, buſh, puſh, implies ſomething as acting more obtuſely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a ſwift and ſudden motion, not inſtantaneous, but gradual, by the continued ſound ſh.

Thus in ſling, ſling, ding, ſwing, cling, ſing, wring, ſting, the tingling of the termination ng, and the ſharpneſs of the vowel i, imply the continuation of a very ſlender motion or tremor, at length indeed vaniſhing, but not ſuddenly interrupted. But in tink, wink, ſink, clink, think, think, that end in a mute conſonant, there is alſo indicated a ſudden ending.

If there be an l, as in jingle, tingle, tinkle, mingle, ſprinkle, twinkle, there is implied a frequency, or iteration of ſmall acts. And the ſame frequency of acts, but leſs ſubtile by reaſon of the clearer vowel a, is indicated in jangle, tangle, ſpangle, mangle, wrangle, brangle, dangle; as alſo in mumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, ſtumble, rumble, crumble, ſumble. But at the ſame time the cloſe u implies ſomething obſcure or obtunded; and a congeries of conſonants mbl, denotes a confuſed kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, ſcamble, ſcramble, wamble, waddle; but in theſe there is ſomething acute.

In nimble, the acuteneſs of the vowel denotes celerity. In ſparkle, ſp denotes diſſipation, ar an acute crackling, k a ſudden interruption, l a frequent iteration; and in like manner in ſprinkle, unleſs in may imply the ſubtility of the diſſipated guttules. Thick and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuſe conſonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner, in ſqueek, ſqueak, ſqueal, ſquall, braul, wraul, yaul, ſpaul, ſcreek, ſcreek, ſhril, ſharp, ſhrivel, wrinkle, crack, craſh, claſh, gnaſh, plaſh, cruſh, buſh, biſſe, ſiſſe, whiſt, ſoft, jarr, hurl, curl, whirl, buz, buſſe, ſpindle, dwindle, twine, twiſt, and in many more, we may obſerve the agreement of ſuch ſort of ſounds with the things ſignified: and this ſo frequently happens, that ſcarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monoſyllable word, of which kind are almoſt all ours, emphatically expreſſes what in other languages can ſcarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or ſometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greateſt part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, reſemble.

Some verbs, which ſeem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the preſent tenſe, and ſome from the ſupines.

From the preſent are formed ſpend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; deſpiſe, deſpicio; approve, approbo; conceive, concipio.

From the ſupines, ſupplicate, ſupplico; demonſtrate, demonſtro; diſpoſe, diſpono; expatiate, expatior; ſuppreſs, ſupprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent, than that Wallis goes too far in queſt of originals. Many of theſe which ſeem ſelected as immediate deſcendents from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expoſe, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as, garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, cryer, plaider; though indeed, even of theſe, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from ſome common original; as, wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, veni; way, via; wall, vallum; wallow, volvo; wool, vellus; will, volo; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; waſp, veſpa; day, dies; draw, traho; tame, domo, δαμάω; yoke, jugum, ζυγος; over, upper, ſuper, ὑπερ; am, ſum, ειμι; break, frango; fly, volo; blow, flo. I make no doubt but the Teutonick is more ancient than the Latin: and it is no leſs certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, eſpecially the Æolick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oſcan and others, which have long become obſolete, received not a few from the Teutonick. It is certain, that the Engliſh, German, and other Teutonick languages, retained ſome derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as path, pfad, ax, achs, mit, foad, pfurd, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, ſear, grave, graff, to grave, to ſcrape, whole, heal, from πατος, αξινη, μιξις, περαω, μεγαλος, μιγνυω, μην, ξυρεω, γραφω, ὁλος, ὁλοω. Since they received theſe immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the ſame fountain, though they be likewiſe found among the Latins.

Our anceſtors were ſtudious to form borrowed words, however long, into monoſyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the firſt ſyllable, eſpecially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewiſe conſonants of a weaker ſound, retaining the ſtronger, which ſeem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the ſame organ, in order that the ſound might become the ſofter; but eſpecially tranſpoſing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example, in expendo, ſpend; exemplum, ſample; excipio, ſcape; extraneus, ſtrange; extractum, ſtretch'd; excrucio, to ſcrew; exſcorio, to ſcour; excorio, to ſcourge; excortico, to ſcratch; and others beginning with ex: as alſo, emendo, to mend; epiſcopus, biſhop; in Daniſh Biſp; epiſtola, piſtle; hoſpitale, ſpittle; Hiſpania, Spain; hiſtoria, ſtory.

Many of theſe etymologies are doubtful, and ſome evidently miſtaken.

The following are ſomewhat harder, Alexander, Sander; Eliſabetha, Betty; apis, bee; aper, bar; p paſſing into b, as in biſhop; and by cutting cutting off a from the beginning, which is reſtored in the middle; but for the old lar or lare, we now ſay lear; as for larg, long; for barn, bairn; for ſtorn, ſtorne; aprugna, brawn, p being changed into b, and a tranſpoſed, as in aper, and g changed into w, as in pignus, pawn; lege, law; αλωπηξ, fox, cutting off the beginning, and changing p into f, as in pelis, a fell; pullus, a foal; pater, father; paver, fear; polio, file; pleo, impleo, fill, full; piſces, fiſh; and tranſposing o into the middle, which was taken from the beginning; apex, a fire; peak, fike; zophorus, freeze; nudum, ſtun; defendo, fend; depilator, ſpeiler; alculto, eſcuter, Fr. ſcout; exſcalpo, ſcrape, reſtoring l inſtead of r, and hence ſcrap, ſcrabble, ſcrawl; exſculpo, ſcalp; exterritus, ſtart; extonitus, attonitus, ſtonn'd; ilomachus, maw; offendo, fret, obſtipo, ſtop; audere, dare; cavere, ware, whence a-ware, be-ware, wary, warn, warning; for the Latin v conſonant formerly ſounded like our w, and the modern ſound of the v conſonant was formerly that of the letter f, that is, the Æolick digamma, which had the ſound of φ, and the modern ſound of the letter f was that of the Greek φ or ph; ulcus, ulcere, ulcer, ſore, and hence ſorry, ſorrow, ſorrowful; ingenium, engine, gin; ſcalenus, leaning, unleſs you would rather derive it from κλινω, whence inclino; infundibulum, funnel; gagates, jett; projectum, to jet forth, a jetty; cucullus, a cowl.

There are tyncopes ſomewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame; as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, fœmina, nomine. Thus pagina, page; κωθιον, pot; κανθος, cup; cantharus, can; tentorium, tent; precor, pray; præda, prey; ſpecio, ſpeculor, ſpy; plico, ply; implico, imply; replico, reply; complico, comply; ſedes epiſcopalis, ſee.

A vowel is alſo cut off in the middle, that the number of the ſyllables may be leſſened; as, amita, aunt; ſpiritus, ſpright; debitum, debt; dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; ſeparo, to ſpare; ſtabilis, ſtable; ſtabulum, ſtable; pallacium, palace, place; rabula, rail, ravel, wrawl, brawl, rable, brable; quæſitio, queſt.

As alſo a conſonant, or at leaſt one of a ſofter ſound, or even a whole ſyllable; rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; ſecurus, ſure; regula, rule; tegula, tile; ſubtilis, ſubtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; ſubitaneus, ſuddain, ſoon; ſuperare, to ſoar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as, magnus, main; dignor, deign; tango, pain; tinctum, taint; pingo, paint; prædari, reach.

The contractions may ſeem harder, where many of them meet, as κυριακος, kyrk, church; preſbyter, prieſt; ſacriſtanus, ſexton; frango, fregi, break, breach; fagus, φαγος, beech, f changed into b, and g into ch, which are letters near a-kin; frigeſco, freeze; frigeſco, fregh, ſc into ſh, as above in biſhop, fiſh, ſo in ſcapha, ſkiff, ſkip, and refrigeſco, refreſh; but vireſco, freſh; phlebotomus, fleam; bovina, beef; vitulina, veal; ſcutifer, ſquire; pœnitentia, penance; ſanctuarium, ſanctuary, ſentry; quæſitio, chaſe; perquiſitio, purchaſe; anguilla, eel; inſula, iſle, ile, iſland, iland; inſuletta, iſlet, ilet; eyght and more contractedly ey, whence Owſney, Ruley, Ely; examinare, to ſcan, namely, by rejecting from the beginning and end e and o, according to the uſual manner, the remainder xamin, which the Saxons, who did not uſe x, writ cſamen, or ſcamen is contracted into ſcan; as from dominus, don; nomine, noun; abomino, ban; and indeed agmen examen they turned into ſciame; for which we ſay ſwarme, by inſerting r to denote the murmuring; theſaurus, ſtore; ſedile, ſtool; υγρος, wet; ſudo, ſweat; gaudium, gay; jocus, joy; ſuccus, juice; catena, chain; caliga, calga, chauſe, chauſſe, Fr. boſe; extinguo, ſtanch, ſquench, quench, ſtint; foras, forth; ſpecies, ſpice; reeno, read; adjuvo, aid; αιων, ævum, ay, age, ever; floccus, lock; excerpo, ſcrape, ſcrabble, ſcrawl; extravagus, ſtray, ſtraggle; collectum, clot, clutch; colligo, coil; recolligo, recoil; ſevero, ſwear; ſtridulus, ſhrill; procurator, proxy; pulſo, to puſh; calamus, a quill; impetere, to impeach; augeo, auxi, wax; and vaneſco, vanui, waine; ſyllabare, to ſpell; puteus, pit; granum, corn; comprimo, cramp, crump, crumple, crinkle.

Some may ſeem harſher, yet may not be rejected, for it at leaſt appears, that ſome of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whoſe etymology is acknowledged by every body; as, Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Sanny; Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Eliſabeth, Betty, Beſs; Margareta, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malkin, Mawkin, Mawkes; Matthæus, Mattha, Matthew; Martha, Matt, Pat; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Guillaume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Weeks.

Thus cariophyllus, flos; gerofilo, Ital. giriflee, giloſer, Fr. gilliflower, which the vulgar call julyflower, as if derived from the month July; petroſelinum, parſly; portulaca, purſlain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddeny; perſicum, peach; eruca, eruke, which they corrupt to ear-wig, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimmal or gimbal-ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques choſes, kickſhaws. Since the origin of theſe, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, eſpecially as they ſo much affected monoſyllables; and, to make them ſound the ſofter, took this liberty of maiming, taking away, changing, tranſpoſing, and ſoftening them.

But while we derive theſe from the Latin, I do not mean to ſay, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Daniſh, Dutch, and Teutonick languages, and other dialects, and ſome taken more lately from the French or Italians, or Spaniards.

The ſame word, according to its different ſignifications, often has a different origin; as, to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, bairn, comes from pario; and a bear, at leaſt if it be of Latin original, from fera. Thus perch, a fiſh, from perca; but perch, a meaſure, from pertica, and likewiſe to perch. To ſpell is from ſyllaba; but ſpell, an inchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are ſo fixed in lands, that none can paſs them againſt the maſter's will, from expello; and ſpell, a meſſenger, from epiſtola; whence goſpel, good-ſpel, or god-ſpell. Thus freeſe, or freeze, from frigeſco; but freeze, an architectonic word, from zophorus; but freeſe, for cloth, from Friſia, or perhaps from friga, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monoſyllables compounded of two or more words, at leaſt ſerving inſtead of compounds, and comprifing the ſignification of more words than one; as, from ſtrip and roll comes ſtroll; from ſtand and daunt, ſtaunt; from ſt of the verb ſtay or ſtand and out, is made ſtout; from ſtout and hardy, ſturdy; from ſp of ſpit or ſpew, and out, comes ſpout; from the ſame ſp, with the termination in, is ſpin; and adding out, ſpin out; and from the ſame ſp, with tt, is ſpit, which only differs from ſpout in that it is ſmaller, and with leſs noiſe and force; but ſputter is, becauſe of the obſcure u, ſomething between ſpit and ſpout; and by reaſon of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noiſe, but obſcurely confuſed: whereas ſputter, on account of the ſharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more diſtinct noiſe, in which it chiefly differs from ſputter. From the ſame ſp, and the terminat on ark, comes ſpark, ſignifying a ſingle emiſſion of fire with a noiſe; namely, ſp the emiſſion, ar the more acute noiſe, and k, the mute conſonant, intimates its being ſuddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative ſparkle. The ſame ſp, by adding r, that is ſpr, implies a more lively impetus of diffuſing or expanding itſelf; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes ſpring; its vigour ſpr imports, its ſharpneſs the termination in, and laſtly in acute and tremulous, ends in the mute conſonant g, denotes the ſudden ending of any motion, that it is meant in its primary ſignification, of a ſingle, not a complicated exiſtion. Hence we call ſpring whatever has an elaſtick force; as alſo a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to ſpring, to germinate; and ſpring, one of the four ſeaſons. From the ſame ſpr and out, is formed ſprout, and with the termination g, ſprig; of which the following, for the moſt part, is the difference: ſprout, of a groſſer ſound, imports a fatter or groſſer bud; ſprig, of a ſlenderer ſound, denotes a ſmaller ſhoot. In like manner, from ſtr of the verb ſtrive, and out, comes ſtrout and ſtrut. From the ſame ſtr, and the termination uggle, is made ſtruggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noiſe, by reaſon of the obſcure ſound of the vowel u. In like manner, from throw and roll is made trull; and almoſt in the ſame ſenſe is trundle, from throw or thruſt, and rundle. Thus graff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trot, and drudge.

In theſe obſervations it is eaſy to diſcover great ſagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the deſire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often ſo made, that by the ſame licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no diſtinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and thoſe which being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the Engliſh language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harſhneſs and violence, words apparently Teutonick; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That ſome of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The eſtabliſhed practice of grammarians requires that I ſhould here treat of the Syntax; but our language has ſo little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its conſtruction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally omitted it; and Johnſon, whoſe deſire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a ſyntax indiſpenſably neceſſary, has publiſhed ſuch petty obſervations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and perſon; as, Thou flieſt from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two ſubſtantives the noun poſſeſſive is the genitive; as, His father's glory; The ſun's heat.

Verbs tranſitive require an obliqne caſe; as, He loves me; You fear him.

All prepoſitions require an oblique caſe: He gave this to me; He took this from me; He ſays this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for thoſe that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Proſody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buomattei; that of the French by Deſmarais; and that of the Engliſh by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Johnſon though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to inſert them.

Proſody compriſes orthoepy, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of verſification.

PRONUN-

A GRAMMAR OF THE

PRONUNCIATION is juſt, when every letter has its proper ſound, and when every ſyllable has its proper accent, or, which in Engliſh verſification is the ſame, its proper quantity.

The ſounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not eaſily to be given, being ſubject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I ſhall here propoſe.

1. Of diſſyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former ſyllable is commonly accented, as, 'chíldiſh, kíngdom, áctreſt, áctred, tóilſome, lóver, ſcóffer, fáirer, fóremoſt, zéalous, fúlneſs, gódly, méekly, ártiſt.

2. Diſſyllables formed by prefixing a ſyllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as, to begét, to beſeém, to beſtów.

3. Of diſſyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former ſyllable; as, to deſcánt, a déſcant; to cemént, a cément; to contráct, a cóntract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs ſeldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter ſyllable; as, delight, perfume.

4. All diſſyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, favour; in ow, as willow, wállow, except allów; in le, as báttle, bíble; in iſh, as bániſh; in ck, as cámbrick, cáſſock; in ter, as to báttter; in age, as coúrage; in en, as fáſten; in et, as quíet, accent the former ſyllable.

5. Diſſyllable nouns in er, as cánker, bútter, have the accent on the former ſyllable.

6. Diſſyllable verbs terminating in a conſonant and e final, as compríſe, eſcápe; or having a diphthong in the laſt ſyllable, as appéaſe, revéal; or ending in two conſonants, as atténd; have the accent on the latter ſyllable.

7. Diſſyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter ſyllable, have commonly their accent on the latter ſyllable, as applaúſe; except words in ain, cértain, moúntain.

8. Triſſyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a ſyllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as lóvelineſs, ténderneſs, contémner, wágonner, phyſical, beſpátter, comménting, comménding, aſſúrance.

9. Triſſyllables ending in ous, as grácious, árduous; in al, as cápital; in ion, as méntion, accent the firſt.

10. Triſſyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the firſt ſyllable, as coúntenance, cóntinence, ármament, imminent, élegant, própagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the laſt, as connívence, acquáintance; or the middle ſyllable hath a vowel before two conſonants, as promúlgate.

11. Triſſyllables ending in y, as éntity, ſpécify, líberty, víctory, ſúbſidy, commonly accent the firſt ſyllable.

12. Triſſyllables in re or le accent the firſt ſyllable, as légible, théatre, except diſcíple, and ſome words which have a poſition, as exámple, epiſtle.

13. Triſſyllables in ude commonly accent the firſt ſyllable, as plénitude.

14. Triſſyllables ending in ator or atour, as créatour, or having in the middle ſyllable a diphthong, as endeávour; or a vowel before two conſonants, as doméſtick, accent the middle ſyllable.

15. Triſſyllables that have their accent on the laſt ſyllable are commonly French, as acquiéſce, repartée, magazíne, or words formed by prefixing one or two ſyllables to an acute ſyllable, as immatúre, overchárge.

16. Polyſyllables, or words of more than three ſyllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as árrogating, cóntinency, incóntinently, commendable, communicableneſs.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as ſalvátion, perturbátion, concóction; words in atour or ator on the penult, as dedicátor.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the firſt ſyllable, as ámicable, unleſs the ſecond ſyllable have a vowel before two conſonants, as combúſtible.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxórious, voluptuous.

20. Words ending in ly have their accent on the antepenult, as puſillanimity, activity.

Theſe rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but propoſed as uſeful. Almoſt every rule of every language has its exceptions: and in Engliſh, as in other tongues, much muſt be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have eſcaped my obſervation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of ſyllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verſes are either iambick, as alóft, creáte; or trochaick, as hóly, lófty.

Our iambick meaſure compriſes verſes

Of four ſyllables,

Moſt good, moſt fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's loſt;
For all the coſt
Words can beſtow,
So poorly ſhow
Upon your praiſe,
That all the ways
Senſe hath, come ſhort. Drayton.

With raviſh'd ears
The monarch hears. Dryden.

Of ſix,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not ſing an ode?
Shall that holy fire,
In us that ſtrongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmoſt peak
A while we do remain,
Amongſt the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to ſleet and rain,
No ſport our hours ſhall break,
To exerciſe our vein.

Who though bright Phœbus' beams
Refreſh the ſouthern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's ſtreams
Be many wonders found;

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in ſilver ſwathes,
And what of all moſt dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble chear,
T' aſſwage breem winter's ſcathes.

In places far or near,
Or famous, or obſcure,
Where wholeſom is the air,
Or where the moſt impure,
All times, and every where,
The muſe is ſtill in ure. Drayton.

Of eight, which is the uſual meaſure for ſhort poems,

And may at laſt my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and moſſy cell,
Where I may ſit, and nightly ſpell
Of ev'ry ſtar the ſky doth ſhew,
And ev'ry herb that ſips the dew. Milton.

Of ten, which is the common meaſure of heroick and tragick poetry.

Full in the midſt of this created ſpace,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and ſkies, there ſtands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating ſound.
The palace of loud Fame, her ſeat of pow'r,
Plac'd on the ſummit of a lofty tow'r;
A thouſand winding entries long and wide
Receive of freſh reports a flowing tide.

A thouſand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the buſy trade.
'Tis built of braſs, the better to diffuſe
The ſpreading ſounds, and multiply the news;
Where echo's in repeated echo's play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor ſilence is within, nor voice expreſs,
But a deaf noiſe of ſounds that never ceaſe;
Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow rore
Of tides, receding from th' inſulted ſhore;
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to diſtance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crouds, or iſſuing forth, or entring in:
A thorough-fare of news; where ſome deviſe
Things never heard, ſome mingle truth with lies:
The troubled air with empty ſounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat. Dryden.

In all theſe meaſures the accents are to be placed on even ſyllables; and every line conſidered by itſelf is more harmonious, as this rule is more ſtrictly obſerved.

Our trochaick meaſures are

Of three ſyllables,

Here we may
Think and pray,
Before death
Stops our breath:
Other joys
Are but toys.

Of five,

In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy.

Of ſeven,

Faireſt piece of welform'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth.

In theſe meaſures the accent is to be placed on the odd ſyllables.

Theſe are the meaſures which are now in uſe, and above the reſt theſe of ſeven, eight, and ten ſyllables. Our ancient poets wrote verſes ſometimes of twelve ſyllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian ſhires their heads that bear ſo high,
And farth'ſt ſurvey their ſoils with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchleſs crowds,
The neareſt that are ſaid to kiſs the wand'ring clouds,
Eſpecial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That ſhe of all the reſt neglected was ſo long;
Alledging for herſelf, when through the Saxons pride,
The godlike race of Brute to Severn's ſetting ſide
Were cruelly inforc'd, her mountains did relieve
Thoſe whom devouring war elſe every where did grieve.
And when all Wales beſide (by fortune or by might)
Unto her ancient foe reſign'd her ancient right,
A conſtant maiden ſtill ſhe only did remain,
The laſt her genuine laws which ſtoutly did retain.
And as each one is prais'd for peculiar things;
So only ſhe is rich, in mountains, meres, and ſprings,
And holds herſelf as great in her ſuperfluous waſte,
As others by their towns, and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of ſuch a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or elſe would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is diſtract.

The verſe of twelve lines, called an Alexandrine, is now only uſed to diverſify heroick lines.

Waller was ſmooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verſe, the full-reſounding line,
The long majeſtick march, and energy divine.

The pauſe in the Alexandrine muſt be at the ſixth ſyllable.

The verſe of fourteen ſyllables is now broken into a ſoft lyrick meaſure of verſes, conſiſting alternately of eight ſyllables and ſix.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter ſpace.
When all ſhall praiſe, and ev'ry lay
Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day
Shall I lament to ſee.

We have another meaſure very quick and lively, and therefore much uſed in ſongs, which may be called the anapeſtick, in which the accent reſts upon every third ſyllable.

May I góvern my páſſions with ábſolute ſwáy,
And grow wiſer and bétter as life wears awáy.

In this meaſure a ſyllable is often retrenched from the firſt foot, as

Diógenes fúrly and proúd:
I think not of I'ris, nor I'ris of mé.

Theſe meaſures are varied by many combinations, and ſometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick meaſure.

'Tis heav'n itſelf that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.

So in that of eight ſyllables,

They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded.

In that of ſeven,

For reſiſtance I could fear none,
But with twenty ſhips had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Haſt atchiev'd with ſix alone.

In that of ſix,

'Twas when the ſeas were roaring,
With hollow blaſts of wind,
A damſel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.

In the anapeſtick,

When terrible tempeſts aſſail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But ſkilful induſtry ſteers right.

To theſe meaſures, and their laws, may be reduced every ſpecies of Engliſh verſe.

Our verſification admits of few licences, except a ſynalœpha, or eliſion of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t'accept; and a ſynæreſis, by which two ſhort vowe's coaleſce into one ſyllable, as queſtion, ſpecial; or a word is contracted by the expulſion of a ſhort vowel before a liquid, as av'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples, by which the Engliſh language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a maſter to thoſe that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for ſuch as are not yet initiated in the ſchools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at laſt ineffectual.

The END of the GRAMMAR.

A DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A — ABA

A, The first letter of the European alphabets, has, in the English language, three different sounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and slender.

The broad sound, resembling that of the German a, is found in many of our monosyllables, as all, wall, malt, salt; in which a is pronounced as au in cause, or aw in law. Many of these words were anciently written with au, as fault, vault; which happens to be still retained in fault. This was probably the ancient sound of the Saxons, since it is almost uniformly preserved in the rustick pronunciation, and the northern dialects, as maun for man, haund for hand.

A open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obscurely in fancy, fast, &c.

A slender or close, is the peculiar a of the English language, resembling the sound of the French e masculine, or diphthong ai in païs, or perhaps a middle sound between them, or between the a and e; to this the Arabic a is said nearly to approach. Of this sound we have examples in the words place, face, waste, and all those that terminate in ation, as, relation, nation, generation.

A is short, as, glass, grass; or long, as, glaze, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an e final, plane, or by an i added, as, plain.

A, an article set before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming, that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way; that is, any man. This article has no plural signification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

A is sometimes a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is considered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting some action not yet finished; as, I am a walking. It also seems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local surnames; as, Thomas a Becket. In other cases, it seems to signify to, like the French à.

> A hunting Chloë went. Prior.
> They go a begging to a bankrupt's door. Dryd.
> May pure contents for ever pitch their tents
> Upon these downs, these meads, these rocks, these mountains,
> And peace still slumber by these purling fountains!
> Which we may every year
> Find when we come a fishing here. Wotton.
> Now the men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled; the magazines of munition are viewed; the officers of remains called to account. Wotton.
> Another falls a ringing a Pescennius Niger, and judiciously distinguishes the sound of it to be modern. Addison on medals.

A has a peculiar signification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we say, The landlord hath a hundred a year; The ship's crew gained a thousand pounds a man.

> The river Inn, that had been hitherto shut up among mountains, passes generally through a wide open country, during all its course through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Addison on Italy.

A is used in burlesque poetry to lengthen out a syllable, without adding to the sense.

> For cloves and nutmegs to the line-a,
> And even for oranges to China. Dryden.

A is sometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for he.

A, in composition, seems to have sometimes the power of the French a in these phrases, a droit, a gauche, &c. and sometimes to be contracted from at; as, aside, aslope, afoot, asleep, athirst, aware.

> If this, which he avouches, does appear,
> There is no flying hence, nor tarrying here.
> I gin to be a weary of the sun;
> And wish the state of the world were now undone.
> Shakespeare's Macbeth.
> And now a breeze from shore began to blow,
> The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
> Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
> Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales.
> Dryden's Ceyx and Alcyone.

A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arouse, awake; the same with rise, rouse, wake.

A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. bachelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. master of arts, artium magister; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, at the beginning of the names of places, generally shews that they have some relation to an abbey.

ABA'CKE. adv. Backwards. Obsolete.

> But when they came where thou thy skill didst show,
> They drew abacke, as half with shame confound,
> Shepherds to see them in their art outgo. Spens. Past.

ABA'CTOR. n. s. [Lat. abactor, a driver away.] Those who drive away or steal cattle in herds, or great numbers at once, in distinction from those that steal only a sheep or two. Blount.

A'BACUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A counting-table, anciently used in calculations.
2. In architecture, it is the uppermost member of a column, which serves as a sort of crowning both to the capital and column. Dict.

ABA'FT. adv. [of abaftan, Sax. behind.] From the fore-part of the ship, towards the stern. Dict.

ABAI'SANCE. n. s. [from the French abaisser, to depress, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obeisance is considered by Skinner as a corruption of abaisance, but is now universally used.

To ABA'LIENATE. v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.] To make that another's which was our own before. Calv. Lex. Jur.

A term of the civil law, not much used in common speech.

ABALIENA'TION. n. s. [abalienatio, Lat.] A giving up one's right to another person; or a making over an estate, goods, or chattels by sale, or due course of law. Dict.

To ABA'ND. v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in use. See ABANDON.] To forsake.

> Those foreigners which came from far
> Grew great, and got large portions of land,
> That in the realm, ere long, they stronger are
> Than they which sought at first their helping hand,
> And Vortiger enforced the kingdom to aband.
> Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10.

To ABA'NDON. v. a. [abandonner, Fr. Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandonare, which signifies to forsake his colours; bandum [vexillum] deserere. Pasquier thinks it it a coalition of a ban dinner, to give up to a proscription; in which sense we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, signifies a curse; and to abandon, if considered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris devovere.]

1. To give up, resign, or quit; often followed by the particle to.

'The passive gods behold the Greeks defile
Their temples, and abandon to the spoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conspire
To save a sinking town, involv'd in fire. Dryd. Æneid.

2. To desert.

The princes using the passions of fearing evil, and desiring to escape, only to serve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's self, leapt to a rib of the ship. Sidney, b. ii.

Then being alone,
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakesp. As you like it.

What fate a wretched fugitive attends,
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends. Dryd. Æn. 2.

3. To forsake, generally with a tendency to an ill sense.

When he in presence came, to Guyon first
He boldly spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forstalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. stanz. 39.

But to the parting goddess thus she pray'd;
Propitious still be present to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once favour'd maid. Dryd. Fab.

To ABANDON OVER. v. a. [a form of writing not usual, perhaps not exact.] To give up to, to resign.

Look on me as a man abandon'd o'er
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but disturb the quiet of my death. Dryd. Sp. Friar.

ABANDONED. particip. adj.

1. Given up.

If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow,
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Who is he so abandoned to sottish credulity, as to think, upon that principle, that a clod of earth in a sack, may ever, by eternal shaking, receive the fabric of man's body? Bentley's Sermons.

Must he, whose altars on the Phrygian shore,
With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,
Be doom'd the worst of human ills to prove,
Unbless'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?
Pope's Odyssey, b. i. l. 80.

2. Forsaken, deserted.

3. Corrupted in the highest degree. In this sense, it is a contraction of a longer form, abandoned [given up] to wickedness.

ABA'NDONING. [A verbal noun from abandon.] Desertion, forsaking.

He hoped his past meritorious actions might outweigh his present, abandoning the thought of future action. Clarend. b. viii.

ABA'NDONMENT. n. s. [abandonnement, Fr.]

1. The act of abandoning.
2. The state of being abandoned. Dict.

ABANNI'TION. n. s. [abannitio, Lat.] A banishment for one or two years, among the ancients, for manslaughter. Dict.

A'BARCY. n. s. Insatiableness. Dict.

To ABA'RE. v. a. [abapian, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or disclose. Dict.

ABARTICULA'TION. n. s. [from ab, from, and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt construction of the bones, by which they move strongly and easily; or that species of articulation that has manifest motion.

To ABA'SE. v. a. [abaisser, Fr. from the Lat. basis, or bassus, a barbarous word, signifying low, base.] To cast down, to depress, to bring low, almost always in a figurative and personal sense.

Happy shepherd, with thanks to the gods, still think to be thankful, that to thy advancement their wisdoms have thee abased. Sidney, b. i.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And, not regarding diff'rence of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryd. Fables.

Behold every one that is proud, and abase him. Job, xl. 11.

If the mind be curbed and humbled too much in children; if their spirits be abased and broken much by too strict an hand over them; they lose all their vigour and industry, and are in a worse state than the former. Locke on Education, § 46.

ABA'SED. adj. [with heralds] is a term used of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downwards towards the point of the shield; or when the wings are shut; the natural way of bearing them being spread with the top pointing to the chief of the angle. Bailey. Chambers.

ABA'SEMENT. n. s. The state of being brought low; the act of bringing low; depression.

There is an abasement because of glory; and there is that lifteth up his head from a low estate. Ecclesiasticus, xx. 11.

To ABA'SH. v. a. [See BASHFUL.] To put into confusion; to make ashamed. It generally implies a sudden impression of shame.

They heard, and were abash'd, and up they sprung
Upon the wing. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i. l. 331.

This heard, th' imperious queen sat mute with fear;
Nor further durst incense the gloomy thunderer.
Silence was in the court at this rebuke:
Nor could the gods, abash'd, sustain their sovereign's look.
Dryden's Fables.

The passive admits the particle at, sometimes of, before the causal noun.

In no wise speak against the truth, but be abashed of the error of thy ignorance. Ecclesiasticus, iv. 25.

I said unto her, from whence is this kid? Is it not stolen? Render it to the owners, for it is not lawful to eat any thing that is stolen. But she replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages: however, I did not believe her, but bad her render it to the owners: and I was abashed at her. Tob. ii. 13, 14.

The little Cupids hov'ring round,
(As pictures prove) with garlands crown'd,
Abash'd at what they saw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd. Swift's Miscellanies.

To ABA'TE. v. a. [from the French abbatre, to beat down.]

1. To lessen, to diminish.

Who can tell whether the divine wisdom, to abate the glory of those kings, did not reserve this work to be done by a queen, that it might appear to be his own immediate work? Sir John Davies on Ireland.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Here we see the hopes of great benefit and light from expositors and commentators are in a great part abated; and those who have most need of your help, can receive but little from them, and can have very little assurance of reaching the Apostle's sense, by what they find in them. Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

2. To deject, or depress the mind.

This iron world (the fame he weeping says)
Brings down the stoutest hearts to lowest state:
For misery doth bravest minds abate. Spens. Hubberd's Tale.

——— Have they power still
To banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives to some nation
That won you without blows? Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Time that changes all, yet changes us in vain,
The body, not the mind; nor can controul
Th' immortal vigour, or abate the soul. Dryden's Æneid.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in selling, sometimes to beat down the price in buying.

To ABA'TE. v. n. To grow less; as, his passion abates; the storm abates. It is used sometimes with the particle of before the thing lessened.

Our physicians have observed, that, in process of time, some diseases have abated of their virulence, and have, in a manner, worn out their malignity, so as to be no longer mortal. Dryden's Hind and Panth.

To ABA'TE. [In common law.]

It is in law used both actively and neuterly; as, to abate a castle, to beat it down. To abate a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A stranger abateth, that is, entereth upon a house or land void by the death of him that last possessed it, before the heir take his possession, and so keepeth him out. Wherefore, as he that putteth out him in possession, is said to disseise: so he that steppeth in between the former possessor and his heir, is said to abate. In the neuter signification thus; The writ of the demandment shall abate, that is, shall be disabled, frustrated, or overthrown. The appeal abateth by covin, that is, that the accusation is defeated by deceit. Cowel.

To ABA'TE. [In horsemanship.] A horse is said to abate or take down his curvets, when working upon curvets, he puts his two hind-legs to the ground both at once, and observes the same exactness in all the times. Dict.

ABA'TEMENT. n. s. [abatement, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or lessening.

The law of works then, in short, is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remission or abatement; so that, by that law, a man cannot be just, or justified, without an exact performance of every tittle. Locke.

2. The state of being abated.

Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil strongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The most noxious part of oil exhales in roasting to the abatement of near one quarter of its weight. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.

Xenophon tells us, that the city contained about ten thousand kind houſe, and allowing one man to every houſe, who could have any ſhare in the government, (the reſt, conſiſting of women, children and ſervants) and making other obvious abatements, their tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might have been a majority even of the people collective. Swift on the Contefts in Athens and Rome.

4. The cauſe of abating; extenuation.

As our advantages towards practiſing and promoting piety and virtue were greater than thoſe of other men; ſo will our excuſe be leſs, if we neglect to make uſe of them. We cannot plead, in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepoſſeſſion of ill habits, and the biaſs of a wrong education. Atterbury's Sermons.

5. ABA'TEMENT. [In law.]

The act of the abator; as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affection or paſſion of the thing abated; as, abatement of the writ. Cowel.

ABA'TEMENT [with heralds] is an accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abaſed, by reaſon of ſome ſtain or diſhonourable quality of the bearer. Dict.

ABA'TER. n. ſ. The agent or cauſe by which an abatement is produced.

Abaters of acrimony or ſharpneſs: expreſſed oils of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of ſuch; as of almonds, piſtachoes, and other nuts. Arbuthnot on diet.

ABA'TOR. n. ſ. [a law-term.] One who intrudes into houſes or land, that is void by the death of the former poſſeſſour, as yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir. Dict.

A'BATUDE. n. ſ. [old records.] Any thing diminiſhed. Bailey.

A'BATURE. n. ſ. [a hunting term.] Thoſe ſprigs of graſs which are thrown down by a ſtag in his paſſing by. Dict.

ABB. n. ſ. The yarn on a weaver's warp; a term among clothiers. Chambers.

ABBA. n. ſ. [Heb. אב] A Syriac word, which ſignifies father.

A'BBACY. n. ſ. [abbatia, Lat.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See ABBEY.

According to Felinus, an abbacy is the dignity itſelf, ſince an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a ſecular perſon, who has the care of ſouls, is ſometimes, in the canon law, alſo ſtiled an abbot.

Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

A'BBESS. n. ſ. [abbatiſſa, Lat. from whence the Saxon abuburye, then probably abbateſs, and by contraction abbeſſe in Fr. and abbeſs, Eng.] The ſuperiour or governeſs of a nunnery or monaſtery of women.

They fled
Into this abbey, whither we purſued them;
And here the abbeſs ſhuts the gate on us,
And will not ſuffer us to fetch him out.

Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

I have a ſiſter, abbeſs in Terceras,
Who loſt her lover on her bridal-day. Dryd. D. Sebaſt.

Conſtantia's heart was ſo elevated with the diſcourſe of Father Francis, that the very next day ſhe entered upon her vow. As ſoon as the ſolemnities of her reception were over, we retired, as it is uſual, with the abbeſs into her own apartment.

Addiſon's Spect. N° 164.

A'BBEY, or ABBY. n. ſ. [abbatia, Lat. from whence probably firſt ABBACY; which ſee.] A monaſtery of religious perſons, whether men or women; diſtinguiſhed from religious houſes of other denominations by larger privileges. See ABBOT.

With eaſy roads he came to Leiceſter;
Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.

Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

A'BBEY-LUBBER. n. ſ. [See LUBBER.] A ſlothful loiterer in a religious houſe, under pretence of retirement and auſterity.

This is no Father Dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber; this is but a diminutive ſucking friar. Dryd. Sp. Fr.

A'BBOT. n. ſ. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אב father, which ſenſe was implied; ſo that the abbots were called patres, and abbeſſes matres monaſterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis officium jure, Paterne, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowſhip of canons. Of theſe, ſome in England were mitred, ſome not: thoſe that were mitred, were exempted from the juriſdiction of the dioceſan, having in themſelves epiſcopal authority within their precincts, and being alſo lords of parliament. The other ſort were ſubject to the dioceſan in all ſpiritual government. Cowel.

See ABBEY.

A'BBY. See ABBEY.

A'BBOTSHIP. n. ſ. The ſtate or privilege of an abbot. Dict.

To ABBRE'VIATE. v. a. [abbreviare, Lat.]

1. To ſhorten by contraction of parts without loſs of the main ſubſtance.

It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off. Bacon, Eſſay 26.

The only invention of late years, which hath any way contributed towards politeneſs in diſcourſe, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many ſyllables into one, by lopping off the reſt. Swift's Introduction to Genteel Converſation.

2. To ſhorten, to cut ſhort.

Againſt this opinion we may very well ſet the length of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and in half this ſpace contracted into hundreds and threeſcores.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 6.

ABBREVIA'TION. n. ſ.

1. The act of abbreviating.
2. The means uſed to abbreviate, as characters ſignifying whole words.

Such is the propriety and energy of expreſſion in them all, that they never can be changed, but to diſadvantage, except in the circumſtance of uſing abbreviations.

Swift's Introduction to Genteel Converſation.

ABBREVIA'TOR. n. ſ. [abbreviateur, Fr.] One who abbreviates, or abridges.

ABBRE'VIATURE. n. ſ. [abbreviatura, Lat.]

1. A mark uſed for the ſake of ſhortening.
2. A compendium or abridgement.

He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own ſuffering; who prays for him, that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who ſooner ſhews mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to ſubdue the fleſh to the ſpirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a chriſtian.

Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

ABBREUVOIR. [in French, a watering-place. This word is derived by Menage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from abibare for adbibere; but more probably it comes from the ſame root with brew. See BREW.] It ſignifies, among maſons, the joint or juncture of two ſtones, or the interſtice between two ſtones to be filled up with mortar. Dict.

A, B, C.

1. Is taken for the alphabet; as, he has not learned his a, b, c.
2. Sometimes for the little book by which the elements of reading are taught.

To A'BDICATE. v. a. [abdico, Lat.] To give up right; to reſign; to lay down an office.

Old Saturn, here, with upcaſt eyes,
Beheld his abdicated ſkies. Addiſon.

ABDICA'TION. n. ſ. [abdicatio, Lat.] The act of abdicating; reſignation; quitting an office by one's own proper act before the uſual or ſtated expiration.

Neither doth it appear how a prince's abdication can make any other ſort of vacancy in the throne, than would be cauſed by his death; ſince he cannot abdicate for his children, otherwiſe than by his own conſent in form to a bill from the two houſes. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

A'BDICATIVE. adj. That which cauſes or implies an abdication. Dict.

A'BDITIVE. adj. [from abdo, to hide.] That which has the power or quality of hiding. Dict.

ABDO'MEN. n. ſ. [Lat. from abdo, to hide.] A cavity commonly called the lower venter or belly: It contains the ſtomach, guts, liver, ſpleen, bladder, and is within lined with a membrane called the peritonæum. The lower part is called the hypogaſtrium; the foremoſt part is divided into the epigaſtrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; 'tis bounded above by the cartilago enſiformis and the diaphragm, ſideways by the ſhort or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebræ of the loins, the bones of the coxendix, that of the pubes and os ſacrum. It is covered with ſeveral muſcles, from whoſe alternate relaxations and contractions in reſpiration, digeſtion is forwarded, and the due motion of all the parts therein contained promoted, both for ſecretion and expulſion. Quincy.

The abdomen conſiſts moreover of parts containing and contained. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ABDO'MINAL. } adj. Relating to the abdomen.
ABDO'MINOUS. }

To ABDU'CE. v. a. [abduco, Lat.] To draw to a different part; to withdraw one part from another. A word chiefly uſed in phyſick or ſcience.

And if we abduce the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate; for, in that poſition, the axis of the cones remain in the ſame plain, as is demonſtrated in the optics delivered by Galen. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 20.

ABDU'CENT. adj. Muſcles abducent, are thoſe which ſerve to open or pull back divers parts of the body; their oppoſites being called adducent. Dict.

ABDU'CTION. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. The act of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.
2. A particular form of argument.

ABDUCTOR. n. ſ. [Latin.] The name given by anatomiſts to the muſcles, which ſerve to draw back the ſeveral members.

In purſuance of this theory, he ſuppoſed the conſtrictors of the eyelids muſt be ſtrengthened in the ſupercilious; the abductors in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the ſame ſteady and grave motion of the eye.

Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

Abeceda'rian. n. ſ. [from the names of a, b, c, the three firſt letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or firſt rudiments of literature.

This word is uſed by Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienſes, where mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates, that, in ſome part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

A'becedary. adj. [See Abecedarian.]

1. Belonging to the alphabet.
2. Inſcribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the ſympathy of two needles touched with the loadſtone, and placed in the center of two abecedary circles, or rings of letters, deſcribed round about them, one friend keeping one, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

Abe'd adv. [from a, for at. See (A) and Bed.] In bed.

It was a ſhame for them to mar their complexions, yea and conditions too, with long lying abed: and that, when ſhe was of their age, ſhe trowed, ſhe would have made a handkerchief by that time o' day. Sidney, b. ii.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel
All night devoutly watch'd, and brib'd the ſaints
With prayers for her deliverance. Dryd. Span. Friar.

Abe'rrance. n. ſ. [from aberro, Lat. to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an errour; a miſtake; a falſe opinion.

Could a man be compoſed to ſuch an advantage of conſtitution, that it ſhould not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this ſecond nature would alter the craſis of his underſtanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrances, as now.

Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 16.

Abe'rrancy. The ſame with Aberrance.

They do not only ſwarm with errors, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he deſerts his reaſon, or complies with their aberrancies.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Abe'rrant. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating, wandering from the right or known way. Dict.

Aberra'tion. n. ſ. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common track.

And if it be a miſtake, it is only ſo; there is no hereſy in ſuch an harmleſs aberration; at the worſt, with the ingenuous, the probability of it will render it a lapſe of eaſy pardon.

Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 11.

Abe'rring. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Lat.] Wandering, going aſtray.

Though there were a fatality in this year, yet divers were, and others might be, out in their account, aberring ſeveral ways from the true and juſt compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another.

Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 12.

Of the verb aberr I have found no example.

To Aberu'ncate. v. a. [averunco, Lat.] To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly. Dict.

To Abe't. v. a. [from betan, Sax. ſignifying to enkindle or animate.] To puſh forward another, to ſupport him in his deſigns by connivance, encouragement, or help. It is generally taken, at leaſt by modern writers, in an ill ſenſe; as may be ſeen in Abetter.

To abet ſignifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or ſet on. Cowel.

Then ſhall I ſoon, quoth he, return again,
Abet that virgin's cauſe diſconſolate,
And ſhortly back return unto this place,
To walk this way in pilgrim's poor eſtate. Fairy Q. b. i.

A widow who by ſolemn vows,
Contracted to me, for my ſpouſe,
Combin'd with him to break her word,
And has abetted all.——— Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

Men lay ſo great weight upon their being of right opinions, and their eagerneſs of abetting them, that they account that the unum neceſſarium. Decay of Piety.

In the reign of king Charles the firſt, though that prince was married to a daughter of France, and was perſonally beloved and eſteemed in the French court; it is well known that they abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furniſhed ſupplies to the weaker ſide, leſt there ſhould be an end put to theſe fatal diviſions. Addiſon's Freeholder, N° 28.

Abe'tment. n. ſ. The act of abetting. Dict.

Abe'tter, or Abe'ttor. n. ſ. He that abets; the ſupporter or encourager of another.

You ſhall be ſtill plain Torriſmond with me,
Th' abettor, partner, (if you like the name)
The huſband of a tyrant, but no king;
Till you deſerve that title by your juſtice.

Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

Whilſt this ſin of calumny has two ſuch potent abetters, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and deſigning, they will be traducing. Govern. of the Tongue.

Theſe and the like conſiderations, though they may have no influence on the headſtrong unruly multitude, ought to ſink into the minds of thoſe who are their abettors, and who, if they eſcape the puniſhment here due to them, muſt very well know, that theſe ſeveral miſchiefs will be one day laid to their charge. Addiſon's Freeholder, N° 50.

Abey'ance. n. ſ. [from the French aboyer, allatrare, to bark at.] This word, in Littleton, cap. Diſcontinuance, is thus uſed. The right of fee-ſimple lieth in abeyance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment, and conſideration of the law. The frank tenement of the glebe of the parſonage, is in no man during the time that the parſonage is void, but is in abeyance. Cowel.

Abgrega'tion n. ſ. [abgregatio, Lat.] A ſeparation from the flock. Dict.

To Abho'r. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to deteſt to extremity; to loath.

Whilſt I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who having ſeen me in my worſer ſtate,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd ſociety. Shakeſpear's K. Lear.

To whom thus Michael: juſtly thou abhorr'ſt
That ſon, who on the quiet ſtate of men
Such trouble brought, affecting to ſubdue
Rational liberty. Milt. Parad. Loſt, b. xii. l. 79.

The ſelf-ſame thing they will abhor
One way, and long another for. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delighting to fling ſcandals upon the clergy in general; which, beſides the diſgrace to the reformation, and to religion itſelf, caſt an ignominy upon the kingdom that it doth not deſerve.

Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

Abho'rrence n. ſ. [from abhor.]

1. The act of abhorring, deteſtation.

It draws upon him the juſt and univerſal hatred and abhorrence of all men here; and, finally, ſubjects him to the wrath of God, and eternal damnation hereafter. South's Serm.

2. The diſpoſition to abhor; hatred.

He knew well that even a juſt and neceſſary offence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off ſomewhat from the abhorrence of it, and inſenſibly diſpoſe them to farther hoſtilities. Decay of Piety.

Abho'rrency. n. ſ. The ſame with Abhorrence.

The firſt tendency to any injuſtice that appears, muſt be ſuppreſſed with a ſhow of wonder and abhorrency in the parents and governours. Locke on Education, § 110.

Abho'rrent. adj. [from abhor.]

1. Struck with abhorrence.

——— For if the worlds
In worlds inclos'd would on his ſenſes burſt,
He would abhorrent turn. Thomſon's Summer, l. 310.

2. Contrary to, foreign, inconſiſtent with. It is uſed with the particles from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be an hypotheſis, well worthy a rational belief; and yet is it ſo abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as ſoon believe Anaxagoras, that ſnow is black, as him that ſhould affirm it is not white; and if any ſhould in effect aſſert, that the fire is not formally hot, it would be thought that the heat of his brain had fitted him for Anticyra, and that his head were ſo to madneſs. Glanville's Scepſis Scient. c. 12.

Why then theſe foreign thoughts of ſtate employments,
Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?
Poor droning truants of unpractis'd cells,
Bred in the fellowſhip of beardleſs boys,
What wonder is it if you know not men?

Dryden's Don Sebaſtian.

Abho'rrer. n. ſ. [from abhor.] The perſon that abhors; a hater, deteſter.

The repreſentatives of the lower clergy were railed at, for diſputing the power of the biſhops, by the known abhorrers of epiſcopacy, and abuſed for doing nothing in the convocations, by theſe very men who wanted to bind up their hands.

Swift's Examiner, N° 21.

Abho'rring. The object of abhorrence. This ſeems not to be the proper uſe of the participial noun.

And they ſhall go forth, and look upon the carcaſes of the men that have tranſgreſſed againſt me: for their worm ſhall not die, neither ſhall their fire be quenched, and they ſhall be an abhorring unto all fleſh. Iſaiah, lxvi. 44.

To Abi'de. v. n. I abode or abid. [from bibian, or aubibian, Sax.]

1. To dwell in a place, not remove.

Thy ſervant became ſurety for the lad unto my father, ſaying, if I bring him not unto thee, then I ſhall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy ſervant abide inſtead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren. Gen. xliv. 32, 33.

2. To dwell.

The Marquis Dorſet, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

Shakeſp. Richard III.

3. To remain, not ceaſe or fail.

They that truſt in the Lord ſhall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever. Pſalm cxxv. 1.

4. To continue in the ſame ſtate.

The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it ſhall abide ſatisfied. Prov. xix. 23.

Thoſe who apply themſelves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, incorruptible and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the higheſt heavens, from whence he beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth. Stillingfl. Defence of Diſc. on Rom. Idolat.

There can be no ſtudy without time; and the mind muſt abide and dwell upon things, or be always a ſtranger to the inſide of them. South.

5. It is uſed with the particle with before a perſon, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I ſhould give her to another man: abide with me. Gen. xxix. 19.

For thy ſervant vowed a vow, while I abode at Geſhur in Syria, ſaying, if the Lord ſhall bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem, then I will ſerve the Lord. 2 Sam. xv. 8.

6. It is uſed with by before a thing; as, to abide by his teſtimony; to abide by his own ſkill; that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion, to maintain it; to abide by a man, is alſo, to defend or ſupport him. But theſe forms are ſomething low.

Of the participle abid, I have found only the example in Woodward.

To ABIDE. v. a.

1. To bear or ſupport, without being conquered or deſtroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlaſting King: at his wrath the earth ſhall tremble, and the nations ſhall not be able to abide his indignation. Jer. x. 10.

It muſt be allowed a fair preſumption in favour of the truth of my doctrines, that they have abid a very rigorous teſt now for above thirty years, ſtand yet firm; and the longer and more ſtrictly they are look'd into, the more they are confirmed to this very day. Woodward, Letter i.

2. To bear or ſuffer.

That chief (rejoin'd the God) his race derives
From Ithaca, and wond'rous woes ſurvives;
Laertes' ſon: girt with circumfluous tides
He ſtill calamitous conſtraint abides. Pope's Odyſſ. b. iv. l. 750.

3. To bear without averſion; in which ſenſe it is commonly uſed with a negative.

Thou can'ſt not abide Tiridates; this is but love of thyſelf. Sidney, b. ii.

Thy vile race,
Though thou didſt learn, had that in't, which good natures
Could not abide to be with; therefore waſt thou
Deſervedly confin'd into this rock. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

4. To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await; uſed of things prepared for perſons, as well as of perſons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in ſumptuous bed,
Where many ſkilful leeches him abide,
To ſalve his hurts. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5. ſtanz. 17.

While lions war, and battle for their dens,
Poor harmleſs lambs abide their enmity. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

Bonds and afflictions abide me. Acts xx. 23.

5. To bear or ſupport the conſequences of a thing.

Ah me! they little know.
How dearly I abide that boaſt ſo vain. Milton's Par. Loſt.

ABI'DER. n. ſ. [from abide] The perſon that abides or dwells in a place; perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in uſe.

ABI'DING. n. ſ. [from abide.] Continuance; duration.

We are ſtrangers before thee and ſojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a ſhadow, and there is none abiding. 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

The air in that region is ſo violently removed, and carried about with ſuch ſwiftneſs, as nothing in that place can conſiſt or have abiding. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

A'BJECT. adj. [abjectus, Lat. thrown away as of no value.]

1. Mean, or worthleſs, ſpoken of perſons.

That rebellion
Came like itſelf in baſe and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth goaded with rage,
And countenanc'd by boys and beggary. Shakeſp. Hen. IV.

Honeſt men, who tell their ſovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they ſhall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with ſuch baſe and abject flatterers; and are therefore always in danger of being the laſt in the royal favour. Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

2. Contemptible, or of no value; uſed of things.

I was at firſt, as other beaſts that graze
The troden herb, of abject thoughts and low.
Milt. Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix. l. 571.

3. Without hope or regard; uſed of condition.

The rarer thy example ſtands,
By how much from the top of wond'rous glory,
Strongeſt of mortal men,
To loweſt pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes.

We ſee man and woman in the higheſt innocence and perfection, and in the moſt abject ſtate of guilt and infirmity.
Addiſon, Spectator, N°. 273.

4. Deſtitute, mean and deſpicable; uſed of actions.

To what baſe ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd thro' ſacred luſt of praiſe?
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

The rapine is ſo abject and profane,
They not from trifles, nor from gods refrain.
Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 8.

A'BJECT. n. ſ. A man without hope; a man whoſe miſeries are irretrievable.

But in mine adverſity they rejoiced, and gathered themſelves together: yea, the abjects gathered themſelves together againſt me, and I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceaſed not. Pſalm xxxv. 15.

To ABJE'CT. v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely uſed.

ABJE'CTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from abject.] The ſtate of an abject.

He would love at no leſs rate than death; and, from the ſupereminent height of glory, ſtooped and abaſed himſelf to the ſufferance of the extremeſt of indignities, and ſunk himſelf to the bottom of abjectedneſs, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

ABJE'CTION. n. ſ. [from abject.] Meanneſs of mind; want of ſpirit; ſervility; baſeneſs.

That this ſhould be termed baſeneſs, abjection of mind, or ſervility, is it credible? Hooker, b. v § 47.

Now the juſt medium of this caſe lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Eſtrange.

A'BJECTLY adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner, meanly, baſely, ſervilely, contemptibly.

A'BJECTNESS. n. ſ. [from abject.] The ſame with abjection; ſervility, meanneſs.

Servility and abjectneſs of humour is implicitely involved in the charge of lying; the condeſcending to that, being a mark of a diſingenuous ſpirit. Government of the Tongue, § 8.

By humility I mean not the abjectneſs of a baſe mind: but a prudent care not to over-value ourſelves upon any account.
Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 7.

ABI'LITY. n. ſ. [habilité, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon ſkill, or riches, or ſtrength, or any other quality.

Of ſinging thou haſt got the reputation,
Good Thyrſis, mine I yield to thy ability;
My heart doth ſeek another eſtimation. Sidney, b. i.

If aught in my ability may ſerve
To heighten what thou ſuffer'ſt, and appeaſe
Thy mind with what amends is in my pow'r.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes, l. 744.

They gave after their ability unto the treaſure of the work. Ezra ii. 69.

If any man miniſter, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jeſus Chriſt. 1 Pet. iv. 11.

2. Capacity.

Children in whom there was no blemiſh, but well-favoured, and ſkilful in all wiſdom, and cunning in knowledge, and underſtanding ſcience, and ſuch as had ability in them to ſtand in the king's palace. Dan. i. 4.

3. When it has the plural number, abilities, it frequently ſignifies the faculties or powers of the mind, and ſometimes the force of underſtanding given by nature, as diſtinguiſhed from acquired qualifications.

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he aſſures us of the aſſiſtance of his holy ſpirit. Rogers's Sermons.

Whether it may be thought neceſſary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call pariſhes, there ſhould be one man, at leaſt, of abilities to read and write?
Swift's Arguments againſt aboliſhing Chriſtianity.

ABINTE'STATE. adj. [of ab, from, and inteſtatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

To A'BJUGATE. v. a. [abjugo, Lat.] To unyoke, to uncouple. Dict.

To ABJU'RE. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To caſt off upon oath, to ſwear not to do ſomething.

Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the ſociety of man. Shakeſp. Midſum. Night's Dream.

No man, therefore, that hath not abjured his reaſon, and ſworn allegiance to a preconceived fantaſtical hypotheſis, can undertake the defence of ſuch a ſuppoſition.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. To retract, or recant, or abnegate, a poſition upon oath.

ABJURA'TION. n. ſ. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring. The oath taken for that end.

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the uſual trial of law, but confeſſing his fault to the juſtices, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forſake the realm for ever, which was called abjuration.

There are ſome abjurations ſtill in force among us here in England; as, by the ſtatute of the 25th of king Charles II. all perſons that are admitted into any office, civil or military, must take the test; which is an abjuration of some doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewise another oath of abjuration, which laymen and clergymen are both obliged to take; and that is, to abjure the Pretender. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To ABLA'CTATE. v. a. [ablacto, Lat.] To wean from the breast.

ABLACTA'TION. n. f. One of the methods of grafting; and, according to the signification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cyon by degrees from its mother stock, not cutting it off wholly from the stock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

ABLAQUEA'TION. n. f. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The act or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring; prepare also soil, and use it where you have occasion: Dig borders. Uncover as yet roots of trees, where ablaquеation is requisite. Evelyn's Kalendar.

The tenure in chief ought to be kept alive and nourished; the which, as it is the very root that doth maintain this silver stem, that by many rich and fruitful branches spreadeth itself into the chancery, exchequer, and court of wards: so if it be suffered to starve, by want of ablaqueation, and other good husbandry, not only this yearly fruit will much decrease from time to time, but also the whole body and boughs of that precious tree itself, will fall into danger of decay and dying. Bacon.

ABLA'TION. n. f. [ablatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

A'BLATIVE. n. a. [ablativus, Lat.]

1. That which takes away.
2. The sixth case of the Latin nouns; the case which, among other significations, includes the person from whom something is taken away. A term of grammar.

A'BLE. adj. [habile, Fr. habilis, Lat. skilful, ready.]

1. Having strong faculties, or great strength or knowledge, riches, or any other power of mind, body, or fortune.

He was not afraid of an able man, as Lewis the Eleventh was. But, contrariwise, he was served by the ablest men that were to be found; without which his affairs could not have prospered as they did. Bacon's Henry VII.

Such other gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another: the weight of an hair will turn the scales. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. ii.

2. Having power sufficient; enabled.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South's Serm.

Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee. Deut. xvi. 17.

3. Before a verb, with the participle to, it signifies generally having the power; before a noun with for, it means qualified.

Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy? Prov. xxvii. 4.

There have been some inventions also, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

To A'BLE. v. a. To make able; to enable, which is the word commonly used. See ENABLE.

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:
Arm it with rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.
None does offend, none, I say none; I'll able 'em;
Take that of me, my friend, who have the pow'r
To seal th' accuser's lips. Shakespeare's King Lear.

ABLE-BODIED. adj. Strong of body.

It lies in the power of every fine woman, to secure at least half a dozen able-bodied men to his majesty's service. Addison, Freeholder, N° 4.

To A'BLEGATE. v. a. [ablego, Lat.] To send abroad upon some employment; also to send a person out of the way that one is weary of. Dict.

ABLEGA'TION. n. f. [from ablegate.] A sending abroad, or out of the way. Dict.

A'BLENESS. n. f. [from able.] Ability of body or mind; vigour, force; faculties.

That nation doth so excel, both for comeliness and ableness, that from neighbour countries they ordinarily come, some to strive, some to learn, some to behold. Sidney, b. ii.

A'BLEPSY. n. f. [Ἀβλεψία, Gr.] Want of sight, natural blindness; also unadvisedness. Dict.

ABLIGURI'TION. n. f. [abliguritio, Lat.] A prodigal spending on meat and drink. Dict.

To A'BLIGATE. v. a. [abligo, Lat.] To bind or tye up from. D.

To A'BLOCATE. v. a. [abloco, Lat.] To let out to hire.

Perhaps properly by him who has hired it from another. Calvin's Lexicon Juridicum.

ABLOCA'TION. n. f. [from ablocate.] A letting out to hire.

To ABLU'DE. v. n. [abludo, Lat.] To be unlike. Dict.

A'BLUENT. adj. [abluens, Lat. from abluo, to wash away.]

1. That which washes clean.
2. That which has the power of cleansing. Dict.

ABLU'TION. n. f. [ablutio, Lat.]

1. The act of cleansing, or washing clean.

There is a natural analogy between the ablution of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred chalice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Wash'd by the briny wave, the pious train
Are cleans'd, and cast th' ablutions in the main. Pope's Iliad.

2. The rinsing of chymical preparations in water, to dissolve and wash away any acrimonious particles.
3. The cup given, without consecration, to the laity in the popish churches.

To A'BNEGATE. v. a. [from abnego, Lat.] To deny.

ABNEGA'TION. n. f. [abnegatio, Lat. denial, from abnego, to deny.] Denial, renunciation.

The abnegation or renouncing of all his own holds and interests, and trusts of all that man is most apt to depend upon, that he may the more expeditely follow Christ. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

ABNODA'TION. n. f. [abnodatio, Lat.] The act of cutting away knots from trees; a term of gardening. Dict.

ABNO'RMOUS. adj. [abnormis, Lat. out of rule.] Irregular, mishapen. Dict.

ABO'ARD. adv. [a sea term, but adopted into common language; derived immediately from the French à bord, as aller à bord, envoyer à bord. Bord is itself a word of very doubtful original, and perhaps, in its different acceptions, deducible from different roots. Bord, in the ancient Saxon, signified a house; in which sense, to go aboard, is to take up residence in a ship.] In a ship.

Which, when far off, Cymocles heard and saw,
He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep ford. Fairy Queen.

I made this answer, that he might land them, if it pleased him, or otherwise keep them aboard. Sir W. Raleigh's Essays.

When morning rose, I sent my mates to bring Supplies of water from a neighb'ring spring;
Whilst I the motions of the winds explor'd;
Then summon'd in my crew, and went aboard.
Addison's Ovid's Metamorphoses, b. iii.

ABO'DE. n. f. [from abide.]

1. Habitation, dwelling place of residence.

But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in and thy rage against me. 2 Kings, xix. 27.

Others may use the ocean as their road,
Only the English make it their abode;
Whose ready sails with every wind can fly,
And make a cov'nant with th' unconstant sky. Waller.

2. Stay, continuance in a place.

Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;
Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Making a short abode in Sicily the second time, landing in Italy, and making the war, may be reasonably judged the business but of ten months. Dryden's Dedicat. to Æneid.

The woodcocks early visit, and abode
Of long continuance in our temp'rate clime,
Foretel a liberal harvest. Phillips.

3. To make abode; to dwell, to reside, to inhabit.

Deep in a cave the Sibyl makes abode;
Thence full of fate returns, and of the god. Dryd. Æn. 6.

To ABO'DE. v. a. [See BODE.] To foretoken or foreshow; to be a prognostic, to be ominous. It is taken, with its derivatives, in the sense either of good or ill.

Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy, that this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach of it. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

ABO'DEMENT. n. f. [from to abode.] A secret anticipation of something future; an impression upon the mind of some event to come; prognostication; omen.

I like not this.
For many men that stumble at the threshold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.—
—Tush! man, abodements must not now affright us.
Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

My lord bishop, being somewhat troubled, took the freedom to ask him, Whether he had never any secret abodement in his mind? No, replied the duke: but I think some adventure may kill me as well as another man. Wotton.

To ABO'LISH. v. a. [from aboleo, Lat. to blot out.]

1. To annul.

For us to abolish what he hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker, b. iii. § 10.

On the parliament's part it was proposed, that all the bishops, deans, and chapters, might be immediately taken away, and abolished. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. To put an end to; to destroy.

The long continued wars, between the English and the Scots, had then raised invincible jealousies and hate, which long continued peace hath since abolished. Sir John Hayward.

That

A B O

That ſhall Pericles well requite, I wot,
And, with thy blood, abeliſh ſo reproachful blot.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 4. ſtanz. 45.

More deſtroy'd than they,
We ſhould be quite abeliſh'd, and expire.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 92.

Or wilt thou thyſelf
Abeliſh thy creation, and unmake
For him, what for thy glory thou haſt made? Id. b. iii. l. 163.

Fermented ſpirits contract, harden, and conſolidate many fibres together, abeliſhing many canals; eſpecially where the fibres are the tendereſt, as in the brain. Arbuth. on Aliments.

Nor could Vulcanian flame
The ſtench abeliſh, or the ſavour tame. Dryd. Virg. Geo. iii.

ABE'LISHABLE. adj. [from abeliſh.] That which may be abeliſhed.

ABE'LISHER. n. ſ. [from abeliſh.] He that abeliſhes.

ABE'LISHMENT. n. ſ. [from abeliſh.] The act of abeliſhing.

The plain and direct way againſt us herein, had been only to prove, that all ſuch ceremonies, as they require to be abeliſhed, are retained by us with the hurt of the church, or with leſs benefit than the abeliſhment of them would bring. Hooker, b. iv.

He ſhould therefore think the abeliſhment of that order among us, would prove a mighty ſcandal and corruption to our faith, and manifeſtly dangerous to our monarchy.
Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

ABOLI'TION. n. ſ. [from abeliſh.] The act of abeliſhing. This is now more frequently uſed than abeliſhment.

From the total abolition of the popular power, may be dated the ruin of Rome: for had the reducing hereof to its ancient condition, propoſed by Agrippa, been accepted inſtead of Mæcenas's model, that ſtate might have continued unto this day.
Grew's Coſmologia Sacra, b. iii. c. 4.

An apoplexy is a ſudden abolition of all the ſenſes, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the ſtoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal ſpirits through the nerves deſtined for thoſe motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ABO'MINABLENESS. n. ſ. [from abominable.] The quality of being abominable; hatefulneſs, odiouſneſs.

Till we have proved, in its proper place, the eternal and eſſential difference between virtue and vice, we muſt forbear to urge atheiſts with the corruption and abominableneſs of their principles. Bentley's Sermons.

ABO'MINABLE. adj. [abominabilis, Lat.]

1. Hateful, deteſtable.

Return'd
Succeſsful beyond hope, to lead thee forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit
Abominable, accurs'd, the houſe of woe. Par. Loſt, b. x.

It is not to be queſtioned, but the queen and miniſtry might eaſily redreſs this abominable grievance, by enlarging the number of juſtices of the peace, by endeavouring to chooſe men of virtuous principles. Swift's Project for the Advancement of Religion.

2. Unclean.

The ſoul that ſhall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanneſs of man, or any unclean beaſt, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the fleſh of the ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which pertain unto the Lord, even that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people. Leviticus, vii. 21.

3. In low and ludicrous language, it is a word of looſe and indeterminate cenſure.

They ſay you are a melancholy fellow.—I am ſo; I do love it better than laughing.—Thoſe that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows, and betray themſelves to every modern cenſure, worſe than drunkards. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

ABO'MINABLY. adv. [from abominable.] A word of low or familiar language, ſignifying exceſſively, extremely, exceedingly; in the ill ſenſe.

Since I have been your wife, I have obſerved great abuſes and diſorders in your family; your ſervants are mutinous and quarrelſome, and cheat you moſt abominably.
Arbuthnot's Hiſtory of John Bull.

To ABO'MINATE. v. a. [abominor, Lat.] To abhor, deteſt, hate utterly.

We are not guilty of your injuries,
No way conſent to them; but abhor,
Abominate, and loath this cruelty. Southern's Oroonoko.

He profeſſed both to abominate and deſpiſe all myſtery, refinement, and intrigue, either in a prince or miniſter. He could not tell what I meant by ſecrets of ſtate, where an enemy, or ſome rival nation, were not in the caſe. Swift's Gulliv. Travels.

ABOMINA'TION. n. ſ.

1. Hatred, deteſtation; as, to have in abomination.

To aſſiſt king Charles by Engliſh or Dutch forces, would render him odious to his new ſubjects, who have nothing in ſo great abomination, as thoſe whom they hold for heretics.
Swift's Miſcellanies.

2. The object of hatred.

That ye ſhall ſay, thy ſervant's trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now, both we and alſo our fathers: that ye may dwell in the land of Goſhen; for every ſhepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians. Geneſis, xlvi. 34.

3. Pollution, defilement.

And there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatſoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie.
Rev. xxi. 27.

Each heart in Rome does love and pity you;
Only th' adulterous Antony, moſt large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noſes it againſt us. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

4. The cauſe of pollution.

And the high places that were before Jeruſalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Iſrael had builded for Aſhteroth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemoſh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile. 2 Kings, xxiii. 13.

ABORIGINES. n. ſ. [Lat.] The earlieſt inhabitants of a country; thoſe of whom no original is to be traced; as the Welſh in Britain.

To ABORT. v. n. [aborto, Lat.] To bring forth before the time; to miſcarry. Diet.

ABO'RTION. n. ſ. [abortio, Lat.]

1. The act of bringing forth untimely.

2. The produce of an untimely birth.

His wife miſcarried; but as the abortion proved only a female fœtus, he comforted himſelf, that, had it arrived to perfection, it would not have anſwered his account.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Martinus Scriblerus.

Behold my arm thus blaſted, dry and wither'd,
Shrunk like a foul abortion, and decay'd,
Like ſome untimely product of the ſeaſons,
Robb'd of its properties of ſtrength and office.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

ABO'RTIVE. n. ſ. That which is born before the due time. See ABORTIVE, adj.

No common wind, no cuſtomed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cauſes,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and ſigns,
Abortives, and preſages, tongues of heav'n
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John. Shakeſ. K. John.

Take the fine ſkin of an abortive, and, with ſtarch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet. Peacham on Drawing.

This is certain, that many are, by this means, preſerved, and do ſignal ſervice to their country, who, without ſuch a proviſion, might have periſhed as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought, upon their guilty parents, the like deſtruction. Addiſon, Guardian, N° 106.

ABO'RTIVE. adj. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. That which is brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have 'child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

All th' unaccompliſh'd works of nature's hand,
Abortive, monſtrous, or unkindly mix'd,
Diſſolv'd on earth, fleet hither. Paradiſe Loſt, b. iii. l. 456.

2. Figuratively, that which fails for want of time.

This is the true cauſe, why ſo many politic conceptions, ſo elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the iſſue, miſcarry and prove abortive.
South's Sermons.

Falſe hopes
He cheriſhes, nor will his fruit expect
Th' autumnal ſeaſon, but, in ſummer's pride
When other orchards ſmile, abortive fail. Phillips.

How often haſt thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
When I have feaſted with queen Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee creſt-faln;
Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride. Shakeſp. Hen. VI. p. ii.

3. That which brings forth nothing.

Theſe paſs'd, if any paſs, the void profound
Of uneſſential night receives him next,
Wide-gaping! and with utter loſs of being
Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 451.

ABO'RTIVELY adv. [from abortive.] Born without the due time; immaturely, untimely.

ABO'RTIVENESS. n. ſ. [from abortive.] The ſtate of abortion.

ABO'RTMENT. n. ſ. [from abort.] The thing brought forth out of time; an untimely birth.

I ſhall not then doubt the happy iſſue of my undertakings in this deſign, whereby concealed treaſures, which now ſeem utterly loſt to mankind, ſhall be confined to ſo univerſal a piety, and brought into uſe by the induſtry of converted penitents, whoſe wretched carcaſes the impartial laws have, or ſhall, dedicate, as untimely feaſts, to the worms of the earth, in whoſe womb thoſe deſerted mineral riches muſt ever lie buried as loſt abortments, unleſs thoſe be made the active midwives to deliver them. Bacon's Phyſical Remains.

ABO'VE. prep. [from a, and bupan, Saxon; boven, Dutch.]

1. Higher in place.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom riſe;

Above the brims they force their firy way;
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden, Æneid vii. l. 643.

2. More in quantity or number.

Every one that passeth among them, that are numbered from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the Lord. Exodus, xxx. 14.

3. Higher in rank, power or excellence.

The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens. Psalm cxiii. 4.

The public power of all societies is above every soul contained in the same societies. Hooker, b. i.

There is no riches above a sound body, and no joy above the joy of the heart. Ecclesiasticus, xxx. 16.

To her
Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place
Wherein God set thee above her, made of thee,
And for thee: whose perfection far excell'd
Her's, in all real dignity. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 147.

Latona sees her shine above the rest,
And feeds with secret joy her silent breast. Dryden's Æneid.

4. Superiour to; unattainable by.

It is an old and true distinction, that things may be above our reason, without being contrary to it. Of this kind are the power, the nature, and the universal presence of God, with innumerable other points. Swift.

5. Beyond; more than.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength; insomuch that we despaired even of life. 2 Cor. i. 8.

In this, of having thoughts unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, where there is but the least difference, consists, in a great measure, the exactness of judgment and clearness of reason, which is to be observed in one man above another. Locke.

The inhabitants of Tirol have many particular privileges above those of the other hereditary countries of the emperor. Addison on Italy.

6. Too proud for; too high for. A phrase chiefly used in familiar expression.

Kings and princes, in the earlier ages of the world, laboured in arts and occupations, and were above nothing that tended to promote the conveniences of life, Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

ABO'VE. adv.

1. Over-head.

To men standing below, men standing aloft seem much lessened; to those above, men standing below, seem not so much lessened. Bacon.

When he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the fountains of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth: then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him. Proverbs, viii. 28.

2. In the regions of heaven.

Your praise the birds shall chant in every grove,
And winds shall waft it to the pow'rs above. Pope's Pastorals.

3. Before. [See ABOVE-CITED.]

I said above, that these two machines of the balance, and the dira, were only ornamental, and that the success of the duel had been the same without them. Dryd. Dedicat. Æneid.

FROM ABOVE.

1. From an higher place.

The Trojans from above their foes beheld;
And with arm'd legions all the rampires fill'd. Dryd. Æneid.

2. From heaven.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. James, i. 17.

ABOVE ALL. In the first place; chiefly.

I had also studied Virgil's design, his disposition of it, his manners, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure; but above all, the elegance of his expression, and the harmony of his numbers. Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.

ABOVE-BOARD. In open sight; without artifice or trick. A figurative expression, borrowed from gamesters, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards. It is used only in familiar language.

It is the part also of an honest man to deal above-board, and without tricks. L'Estrange.

Though there have not been wanting such heretofore, as have practised these unworthy arts (for as much as there have been villains in all places, and all ages) yet now-a-days they are owned above-board. South's Sermons.

ABOVE-CITED. Cited before. A figurative expression, taken from the ancient manner of writing books on scrolls; as whatever is cited or mentioned before in the same page, must be above.

Nor would I mention this particular, did it not appear from the authority above-cited, that this was a fact confessed by heathens themselves. Addison on the Christian Religion.

ABOVE-GROUND. An expression used to signify, that a man is alive; not in the grave.

ABOVE-MENTIONED. See ABOVE-CITED.

I do not remember, that Homer any-where falls into the faults above-mentioned, which were indeed the false refinements of latter ages. Addison, Spectator, N° 279.

To ABO'UND. v. n. [abundo, Lat. abonder, French.]

1. To have in great plenty; used sometimes with the particle in, and sometimes the particle with.

The king-becoming graces,
I have no relish of them, but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Corn, wine, and oil, are wanting to this ground,
In which our countries fruitfully abound. Dryd. Indian Emp.

A faithful man shall abound with blessings: but he that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent. Prov. xxviii. 20.

Now that languages are made, and abound with words, standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them. Locke.

2. To be in great plenty.

And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. Matthew, xxiv. 12.

Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,
Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

ABO'UT. prep. [abutan, or abuton, Sax. which seems to signify encircling on the outside.]

1. Round, surrounding, encircling.

Let not mercy and truth forsake thee. Bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thy heart. Proverbs, iii. 3.

At this she loudly shrieks,
'Tis he, 'tis he, she cries, and tears her cheeks,
Her hair, her vest; and, stooping to the sands,
About his neck she cast her trembling hands. Dryd. Fables.

2. Near to.

Speak unto the congregation, saying, get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Exodus.

Thou dost nothing, Sergius,
Thou canst endeavour nothing, nay, not think,
But I both see and hear it; and am with thee,
By and before, about and in thee too. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

3. Concerning, with regard to, relating to.

When Constantine had finished an house for the service of God at Jerusalem, the dedication he judged a matter not unworthy, about the solemn performance whereof, the greatest part of the bishops in christendom should meet together. Hooker, b. v. § 12.

The painter is not to take so much pains about the drapery as about the face, where the principal resemblance lies. Dryd. Pref. to Dufresnoy.

They are most frequently used as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently signify either a speculative knowledge of things, or a practical skill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing spoken of. Tillot. Sermon i.

Theft is always a sin, although the particular species of it, and the denomination of particular acts, doth suppose positive laws about dominion and property. Stillingfleet's Defence of Discourses on Romish Idolatry.

They should always be heard, and fairly and kindly answered, when they ask after any thing they would know, and desire to be informed about. Curiosity should be as carefully cherished in children, as other appetites suppressed. Locke on Education, § 108.

It hath been practised as a method of making men's court, when they are asked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the state of trade and manufacture, to answer, that, in their neighbourhood, all things are in a flourishing condition. Swift's short View of Ireland.

4. Engaged in, employed upon.

Our blessed Lord was pleased to command the representation of his death and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking of bread and effusion of wine; to signify to us the nature and sacredness of the liturgy we are about. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

Labour, for labour's sake, is against nature. The understanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooses always the shortest way to its end, would presently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then set upon some new enquiry. But this, whether laziness or haste, often misleads it. Locke.

They ought, however, to be provided with secretaries, and assisted by our foreign ministers, to tell their story for them in plain English, and to let us know, in our mother-tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about. Addison, Spect. N° 309.

5. Appendant to the person; as, cloaths, &c.

If you have this about you,
As I will give you when we go, you may
Boldly assault the necromancer's hall. Milton's Comus.

It is not strange to me, that persons of the fairer sex should like, in all things about them, that handsomeness for which they find themselves most liked. Boyle on Colours.

6. Relating

6. Relating to the perſon, as a ſervant.

Liking very well the young gentleman, ſuch I took him to be, admitted this Deiphantes about me, who well ſhewed there is no ſervice like his that ſerves becauſe he loves. Sidney, b. ii.

Good maſter, corporal, captain, for my old dame's ſake, ſtand my friend: ſhe hath no body to do any thing about her when I am gone, and ſhe is old and cannot help herſelf.

Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

ABO'UT. adv.

1. Circularly.

The weyward ſiſters, hand in hand,
Poſters of the ſea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

2. In circuit.

My honeſt lads, I'll tell you what I am about.—Two yards and more.—No quips now Piſtol: indeed I am in the waſte two yards about; but I am about no waſte, I am about thriſt.

Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

A tun about was ev'ry pillar there,
A poliſh'd mirrour ſhone not half ſo clear. Dryd. Fables.

3. Nearly.

When the boats were come within about ſixty yards of the pillar, they found themſelves all bound, and could go no farther; yet ſo as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer. Bacon's New Atalantis.

4. Here and there; every way.

Up roſe the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if ſhe might ſpy
Her lovely knight to move his manly pace.

Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 2. ſtanz. 33.

A wolf that was paſt labour, had the wit in his old age, yet to make the beſt of a bad game; he borrows a habit, and ſo about he goes, begging charity, from door to door, under the diſguiſe of a pilgrim. L'Eſtrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about to fly; upon the point, within a ſmall diſtance of.

Theſe dying lovers, and their floating ſons,
Suſpend the fight, and ſilence all our guns:
Beauty and youth, about to periſh, finds
Such noble pity in brave Engliſh minds. Waller.

6. The longeſt way, in oppoſition to the ſhort ſtraight way.

Gold hath theſe natures; greatneſs of weight; cloſeneſs of parts; fixation; pliantneſs, or ſoftneſs; immunity from ruſt; colour, or tincture of yellow: Therefore the ſure way (though moſt about) to make gold, is to know the cauſes of the ſeveral natures before rehearſed. Bacon's Natural Hiſt. N° 328.

Spies of the Volſcians
Held me in chaſe, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; elſe had I, Sir,
Half an hour ſince brought my report. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

7. To bring about; to bring to the point or ſtate deſired; as, he has brought about his purpoſes.

Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much queſtion. Spectator.

3. The matter worn off by the attrition of bodies.

ABRE'AST. adv. [See BREAST.] Side by ſide; in ſuch a poſition that the breaſts may bear againſt the ſame line.

My couſin Suffolk,
My ſoul ſhall thine keep company to heaven:
Tarry, ſweet ſoul, for mine, then fly abreaſt. Shak. Henry V.

For honour travels in a ſtreight ſo narrow,
Where one but goes abreaſt. Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida.

The riders rode abreaſt, and one his ſhield,
His lance of cornel-wood another held;
The third his bow, and glorious to behold!
The coſtly quiver, all of burniſh'd gold. Dryden's Fables.

ABRI'COT. See APRICOT.

To ABRI'DGE. v. a. [abreger, Fr. abbrevio, Lat.]

1. To make ſhorter in words, keeping ſtill the ſame ſubſtance.

All theſe ſayings, being declared by Jaſon of Cyrene in five books, we will eſſay to abridge in one volume. 2 Macc. ii. 23.

2. To contract, to diminiſh, to cut ſhort.

The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide; and he, that has a power to act or not to act, according as ſuch determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power wherein liberty conſiſts. Locke.

3. To deprive of; in which ſenſe it is followed by the particle from or of, preceding the thing taken away.

I have diſabled mine eſtate,
By ſhewing ſomething a more ſwelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridg'd
From ſuch a noble rate. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

They were formerly, by the common law, diſcharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them ſince by ſeveral ſtatutes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ABRI'DGED OF. part. Deprived of, debarred from, cut ſhort.

1. He that abridges; a ſhortener.
2. A writer of compendiums or abridgments.

ABRI'DGMENT. n. ſ. [abregement, Fr.]

1. The contraction of a larger work into a ſmall compaſs.

Surely this commandment containeth the law and the prophets; and, in this one word, is the abridgment of all volumes of ſcripture. Hooker, b. ii. § 5.

Myſelf have play'd
The int'rim, by remembring you 'tis paſt;
Then brook abridgment, and your eyes advance
After your thought, ſtraight back again to France? Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

Idolatry is certainly the firſt-born of folly, the great and leading paradox; nay, the very abridgment and ſum total of all abſurdities. South's Sermons.

2. A diminution in general.

All trying, by a love of littleneſs,
To make abridgments, and to draw to leſs,
Even that nothing which at firſt we were. Donne.

3. Reſtraint, or abridgment of liberty.

The conſtant deſire of happineſs, and the conſtraint it puts upon us, no body, I think, accounts an abridgment of liberty, or at leaſt an abridgment of liberty, to be complained of. Locke.

ABRO'ACH. adv. [See To BROACH.]

1. In a poſture to run out; to yield the liquor contained; properly ſpoken of veſſels.

The Templer ſpruce, while ev'ry ſpout's abroach,
Stays 'till 'tis fair, yet ſeems to call a coach. Swift's Miſ.

The jarrs of gen'rous wine (Aceſtes' gift,
When his Trinacrian ſhores the navy left)
He ſet abroach, and for the feaſt prepar'd,
In equal portions with the ven'ſon ſhar'd.

Dryden's Virgil's Æneid, vol. ii.

2. In a figurative ſenſe: in a ſtate to be diffuſed or advanced; in a ſtate of ſuch beginning as promiſes a progreſs.

That man, that ſits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the ſunſhine of his favour,
Would he abuſe the count'nance of the king,
Alack! what miſchiefs might be ſet abroach,
In ſhadow of ſuch greatneſs? Shakeſpeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

ABRO'AD. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See BROAD.]

1. Without confinement; widely; at large.

Intermit no watch
Againſt a wakeful foe, while I abroad,
Thro' all the coaſts of dark deſtruction, ſeek
Deliverance. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 463.

Again, the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On ſecret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;
Now haunts the cliff, now traverſes the lawn,
And flies the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.

2. Out of the houſe.

Welcome, ſir,
This cell's my court; here have I few attendants,
And ſubjects none abroad. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Lady——walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it; at leaſt in the time I ſtaid; though ſhe ſeemed to be fainting, and had convulſive motions ſeveral times in her head. Pope's Letters.

3. In another country.

They thought it better to be ſomewhat hardly yoked at home, than for ever abroad, and diſcredited. Hooker. Pref.

Whoſoever offers at verbal tranſlation, ſhall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who loſt his own language abroad, and brought home no other inſtead of it. Sir J. Denham.

What

What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land? Dryd. Span. Friar.
He who ſojourns in a foreign country, refers what he ſees and hears abroad, to the ſtate of things at home. Atterb. Serm.

4. In all directions, this way and that.
Full in the midſt of this infernal road,
An elm diſplays her duſky arms abroad. Dryd. Virgil. Æn. vi.

5. Without, not within.
Bodies politic, being ſubject, as much as natural, to diſſolution, by divers means, there are undoubtedly more ſtates overthrown through diſeaſes bred within themſelves, than through violence from abroad. Hooker, Dedication.

To A'BROGATE v. a. [abrogo, Lat.] To take away from a law its force, to repeal, to annul.
Such laws, as have been made upon ſpecial occaſions, which occaſions ceaſing, laws of that kind do abrogate themſelves. Hooker, b. iv. § 14.

The negative precepts of men may ceaſe by many inſtruments, by contrary cuſtoms, by public diſtaſte, by long omiſſion: but the negative precepts of God never can ceaſe, but when they are expreſly abrogated by the ſame authority. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

ABROGA'TION. n. ſ. [abrogatio, Lat.] The act of abrogating; the repeal of a law.
The commiſſioners from the confederate Roman catholics, demanded the abrogation and repeal of all thoſe laws, which were in force againſt the exerciſe of the Roman religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people gazing on thy face
With envious looks, ſtill laughing at thy ſhame.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

ABRUPT. adj. [abruptus, Lat.] Broken off.

1. Broken, craggy.
Reſiſtleſs, roaring, dreadful down it comes
From the rude mountain, and the moſſy wild,
Tumbling through rocks abrupt. Thomſon's Winter.

2. Divided, without any thing intervening.
Or ſpread his airy flight,
Upborn with indefatigable wings,
Over the vaſt abrupt, ere he arrive
The happy iſle. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 409.

3. Sudden, without the cuſtomary or proper preparatives.
My lady craves
To know the cauſe of your abrupt departure.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.
The abrupt and unkind breaking off the two firſt parliaments, was wholly imputed to the duke of Buckingham. Clar.
Abrupt, with eagle-ſpeed ſhe cut the ſky;
Inſtant inviſible to mortal eye.
Then firſt he recogniz'd th' ethereal gueſt. Pope's Odyſſ. b. i.

4. Unconnected.
The abrupt ſtile, which hath many breaches, and doth not ſeem to end but fall. Ben. Johnſon's Diſcov.

ABRU'PTED. adj. [abruptus, Lat. a word little in uſe.] Broken off ſuddenly.
The effects of whoſe activity are not precipitouſly abrupted, but gradually proceed to their ceſſations. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. 10.

ABRU'PTION. n. ſ. [abruptio, Lat.] Breaking off, violent and ſudden ſeparation.
Thoſe which are incloſed in ſtone, marble, or ſuch other ſolid matter, being difficultly ſeparable from it, becauſe of its adheſion to all ſides of them, have commonly ſome of that matter ſtill adhering to them, or at leaſt marks of its abruption from them, on all their ſides. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

ABRU'PTLY. adv. [See ABRUPT.] Haſtily, without the due forms of preparation.
The ſweetneſs of virtue's diſpoſition, jealous even over itſelf, ſuffered her not to enter abruptly into queſtions of Muſidorus. Sidney, b. ii.
Now miſſing from their joy ſo lately found,
So lately found and ſo abruptly gone. Par. Regain. b. ii.
They both of them punctually obſerved the time thus agreed upon, and that in whatever company or buſineſs they were engaged, they left it abruptly, as ſoon as the clock warned them to retire. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 241.

ABRU'PTNESS. n. ſ. [from abrupt.]
1. An abrupt manner, haſte, ſuddenneſs, untimely vehemence.
2. The ſtate of an abrupt thing; unconnectedneſs, roughneſs, craggineſs.
The cryſtallized bodies found in the perpendicular intervals, are eaſily known from thoſe that are lodged in the ſtrata. The former have always their root, as the jewellers call it, which is only the abruptneſs, at the end of the body whereby it adhered to the ſtone, or ſides of the intervals; which abruptneſs is cauſed by its being broke off from the ſaid ſtone. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory, p. 4.

AB'SCESS. n. ſ. [abſceſſus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body; a tumour filled with matter; a term of chirurgery.

If the patient is not relieved, nor dies in eight days, the inflammation ends in a ſuppuration and an abſceſs in the lungs, and ſometimes in ſome other part of the body. Arbuth. of Diet.
Lindanus conjectured it might be ſome hidden abſceſs in the meſentery, which, breaking ſome few days after, was diſcovered to be an apoſtem of the meſentery. Harvey on Conſumptions.

To ABSCI'ND. v. a. To cut off, either in a natural or figurative ſenſe.

ABSCISSA. [Lat.] Part of the diameter of a conic ſection, intercepted between the vertex and a ſemi-ordinate.

ABSCI'SSION. n. ſ. [abſciſſio, Lat.]
1. The act of cutting off.
Fabricius ab Aquapendente renders the abſciſſion of them difficult enough, and not without danger. Wiſeman's Surgery.
2. The ſtate of being cut off.
By ceſſation of oracles, with Montacutius, we may underſtand this interciſion, not abſciſſion, or conſummate deſolation. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

To ABSCO'ND. v. n. [abſcondo, Lat.] To hide one's ſelf; to retire from the public view: generally uſed of perſons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

A'BSENCE. n. ſ. [See ABSENT.]
1. The ſtate of being abſent, oppoſed to preſence.
Sir, 'tis fit
You have ſtrong party to defend yourſelf
By calmneſs, or by abſence: all's in danger. Shakeſp. Coriol.
His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
For what advice can eaſe a lover's pain?
Abſence, the beſt expedient they could find,
Might ſave the fortune, if not cure the mind. Dryd. Fab.

2. Want of appearance, in the legal ſenſe.
Abſence is of a fourfold kind or ſpecies. The firſt is a neceſſary abſence, as in baniſhed perſons; this is entirely neceſſary. A ſecond, neceſſary and voluntary; as, upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the ſervice of the church. The third kind the civilians call a probable abſence; as, that of ſtudents on the ſcore of ſtudy. And the fourth, an abſence entirely voluntary; as, on the account of trade, merchandiſe, and the like. Some add a fifth kind of abſence, which is committed cum dolo & culpâ, by a man's non-appearance on a citation; as, in a contumacious perſon, who, in hatred to his contumacy, is, by the law, in ſome reſpects, reputed as a perſon preſent. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.
You have given no diſſertation upon the abſence of lovers, nor laid down any methods how they ſhould ſupport themſelves under thoſe ſeparations. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 241.

3. Inattention, heedleſſneſs, neglect of the preſent object.
I continued my walk, reflecting on the little abſences and diſtractions of mankind. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 77.

4. It is uſed with the particle from.
His abſence from his mother oft he'll mourn,
And, with his eyes, look wiſhes to return. Dryd. Juv.

A'BSENT. adj. [abſens, Lat.]
1. Not preſent; uſed with the particle from.
In ſpring the fields, in autumn hills I love;
At morn the plains, at noon the ſhady grove;
But Delia always: abſent from her ſight,
Nor plains at morn, nor groves at noon delight. Pope's Paſt.
Where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and leſs have given him the revolt;
And none ſerve with him but conſtrained things,
Whoſe hearts are abſent too. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.
Whether they were abſent or preſent, they were vexed alike. Wiſd. xi. 11.

2. Abſent in mind; inattentive; regardleſs of the preſent object.
I diſtinguiſh a man that is abſent, becauſe he thinks of ſomething elſe, from him that is abſent, becauſe he thinks of nothing. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 77.

To ABSE'NT. v. a. To withdraw, to forbear to come into preſence.
If thou didſt ever hold me in thy heart,
Abſent thee from felicity a while,
And in this harſh world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my tale. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.
But if thou think'ſt trial unſought may find
Us both ſecurer, than thus warn'd thou ſeem'ſt,
Go—for thy ſtay, not free, abſents thee more.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix. l. 372.
Tho' I am forc'd, thus to abſent myſelf
From all I love, I ſhall contrive ſome means,
Some friendly intervals, to viſit thee.
Southern's Spartan Dame.
The Arengo, however, is ſtill called together in caſes of extraordinary importance; and if, after due ſummons any member abſents himſelf, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny Engliſh. Addiſon's Rem. on Italy.

ABSENTA'NEOUS. adj. Relating to abſence; abſent. Dict.

ABSENTE'E. n. ſ. He that is abſent from his ſtation, or employment, or country. A word uſed commonly with regard to Iriſhmen living out of their country.
Then

Then was the firſt ſtatute made againſt abſentees, commanding all ſuch as had land in Ireland, to return and reſide thereupon. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A great part of eſtates in Ireland are owned by abſentees, and ſuch as draw over the profits raiſed out of Ireland, refunding nothing. Child's Diſcourſe on Trade.

ABSINTHIATED. part. [from abſinthium, Lat. wormwood.] Imbittered, impregnated with wormwood. Dict.

To ABSO'LVE. v. a. [abſolvo. Lat.]

1. To clear, to acquit of a crime in a judicial ſenſe.

Your great goodneſs, out of holy pity,
Abſolv'd him with an axe. Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

Our victors, bleſt in peace, forget their wars,
Enjoy paſt dangers, and abſolve the ſtars. Tickell.

As he hopes, and gives out, by the influence of his wealth, to be here abſolved; in condemning this man, you have an opportunity of belying that general ſcandal, of redeeming the credit loſt by former judgments. Swift's Miſcellanies.

2. To ſet free from an engagement or promiſe.

Compell'd by threats to take that bloody oath,
And the act ill, I am abſolv'd by both. Waller's Maid's Trag.

This command, which muſt neceſſarily comprehend the perſons of our natural fathers, muſt mean a duty we owe them, diſtinct from our obedience to the magiſtrate, and from which the moſt abſolute power of princes cannot abſolve us. Locke.

3. To pronounce a ſin remitted, in the eccleſiaſtical ſenſe.

But all is calm in this eternal ſleep;
Here grief forgets to groan, and love to weep;
Ev'n ſuperſtition loſes ev'ry fear;
For God, not man, abſolves our frailties here.
Pope's Eloiſa to Abelard.

4. To finiſh, to complete.

If that which is ſo ſuppoſed infinitely diſtant from what is now current, is diſtant from us by a finite interval, and not infinitely, then that one circulation which preceded it muſt neceſſarily be like ours, and conſequently abſolved in the ſpace of twenty-four hours. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

What cauſe
Mov'd the creator, in his holy reſt
Through all eternity, ſo late to build
In chaos; and the work begun, how ſoon
Abſolv'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. vii. l. 94.

A'BSOLUTE. adj. [abſolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied as well to perſons as things.

Becauſe the things that proceed from him are perfect, without any manner of defect or maim; it cannot be, but that the words of his mouth are abſolute, and lack nothing which they ſhould have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend. Hooker, b. ii. § 6.

2. Unconditional; as, an abſolute promiſe.

Although it runs in forms abſolute, yet it is indeed conditional, as depending upon the qualification of the perſon to whom it is pronounced. South's Sermons.

3. Not relative; as, abſolute ſpace.

I ſee ſtill the diſtinctions of ſovereign and inferior, of abſolute and relative worſhip, will bear any man out in the worſhip of any creature with reſpect to God, as well at leaſt as it doth in the worſhip of images. Stillingfl. Def. of Diſc. on Rom. Idol.

An abſolute mode is that which belongs to its ſubject, without reſpect to any other beings whatſoever: but a relative mode is derived from the regard that one being has to others. Watts's Logic.

In this ſenſe we ſpeak of the ablative caſe abſolute in grammar.

4. Not limited; as, abſolute power.

My crown is abſolute, and holds of none;
I cannot in a baſe ſubjection live,
Nor ſuffer you to take, though I would give. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

5. Poſitive, certain, without any heſitation. In this ſenſe it rarely occurs.

Long is it ſince I ſaw him,
But time hath nothing blurr'd thoſe lines of favour,
Which then he wore; the ſnatches in his voice,
And burſt of ſpeaking were as his: I'm abſolute,
'Twas very Cloten. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

What is his ſtrength by land?—
—Great and increaſing: but by ſea
He is an abſolute maſter. Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

A'BSOLUTELY. adv. [from abſolute.]

1. Completely, without reſtriction.

All the contradictions which grow in thoſe minds, that neither abſolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely ſink into the ſea of vanity. Sidney.

What merit they can build upon having joined with a proteſtant army, under a king they acknowledged, to defend their own liberties and properties, is, to me, abſolutely inconceivable; and, I believe, will equally be ſo for ever. Swift's Preſb. Plea.

2. Without relation.

Abſolutely we cannot diſcommend, we cannot abſolutely approve either willingneſs to live, or forwardneſs to die. Hooker, b. v.

Theſe then being the perpetual cauſes of zeal; the greateſt good, or the greateſt evil; either abſolutely ſo in themſelves, or relatively ſo to us; it is therefore good to be zealouſly affected for the one againſt the other. Spratt's Sermons.

No ſenſible quality, as light, and colour, and heat, and ſound, can be ſubſiſtent in the bodies themſelves, abſolutely conſidered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of ſenſe. Theſe qualities are only the effects of our ſenſation, which ariſe from the different motions, upon our nerves, from objects without, according to their various modifications and poſitions. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Without limits or dependance.

The prince long time had courted fortune's love,
But once poſſeſs'd, did abſolutely reign:
Thus, with their Amazons, the heroes ſtrove,
And conquer'd firſt thoſe beauties they would gain.
Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.

And of that nature, for the moſt part, are things abſolutely unto all mens ſalvation neceſſary, either to be held or denied, either to be done or avoided. Hooker's Preface.

5. Peremptorily, poſitively.

Being as I am, why didſt not thou
Command me abſolutely not to go,
Going into ſuch danger, as thou ſaidſt? Parad. Loſt, b. ix.

A'BSOLUTENESS. n. ſ. [from abſolute.]

1. Completeneſs.

2. Freedom from dependance, or limits.

The abſoluteneſs and illimitedneſs of his commiſſion was generally much ſpoken of. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is nothing that can raiſe a man to that generous abſoluteneſs of condition, as neither to cringe, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that which gives him that happineſs within himſelf, for which men depend upon others. South's Serm.

3. Deſpoticiſm.

He kept a ſtrait hand on his nobility, and choſe rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obſequious to him, but had leſs intereſt in the people; which made for his abſoluteneſs, but not for his ſafety. Bacon's Henry VII.

ABSOLU'TION. n. ſ. [abſolutio, Lat.]

1. Acquittal.

Abſolution, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a perſon by ſome final ſentence of law; alſo, a temporary diſcharge of his farther attendance upon a meſne proceſs, through a failure or defect in pleading; as it does likewiſe in the canon law, where, and among divines, it likewiſe ſignifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of ſome ſentence pronounced either in a court of law, or elſe in foro pœnitentiali. Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of abſolution, termed judicial, and another, ſtiled a declaratory or extrajudicial abſolution. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

2. The remiſſion of ſins, or penance, declared by eccleſiaſtical authority.

The abſolution pronounced by a prieſt, whether papiſt or proteſtant, is not a certain infallible ground to give the perſon, ſo abſolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons.

A'BSOLUTORY. adj. [abſolutorius, Lat.] That which abſolves.

Though an abſolutory ſentence ſhould be pronounced in favour of the perſons, upon the account of nearneſs of blood; yet, if adultery ſhall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded againſt as an adulterer. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'BSONANT. adj. [See ABSONOUS.] Contrary to reaſon, wide from the purpoſe.

A'BSONOUS. adj. [abſonus, Lat. ill-ſounding.] Abſurd, contrary to reaſon.

To ſuppoſe an uniter of a middle conſtitution, that ſhould partake of ſome of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties; yea, moſt abſonous to our reaſon. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica, c. 4.

To ABSO'RB. v. a. [abſorbeo, Lat. preter. abſorbed; part. pret. abſorbed, or abſorpt.]

1. To ſwallow up.

Some tokens ſhew
Of fearleſs friendſhip, and their ſinking mates
Suſtain; vain love, tho' laudable, abſorpt
By a fierce eddy, they together found
The vaſt profundity. Phillips.

Moſes imputed the deluge to the diſruption of the abyſs; and St. Peter, to the particular conſtitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be abſorpt in water. Burn. Theory.

2. To ſuck up. See ABSORBENT.

Suppoſing the forementioned conſumption ſhould prove ſo durable, as to abſorb and extenuate the ſaid ſanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts muſt neceſſarily come into danger. Harvey on Conſumptions.

ABSO'RBENT. n. ſ. [abſorbens, Lat.]

A medicine that, by the ſoftneſs or poroſity of its parts, either cauſes the aſperities of pungent humours, or dries away ſuperfluous moiſture in the body. Quincy.

There is a third claſs of ſubſtances, commonly balled abſorbents; as, the various kinds of ſhells, coral, chalk, crabs eyes, &c. which likewiſe raiſe an effervеſcence, and are therefore called called alkalies, though not so properly, for they are not salts.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ABSO'RPT. part. [from absorb.] Swallowed up; used as well, in a figurative sense, of persons, as in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked these five days; who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the present world, its customs and its manners, to be fully possessed and absorpt in the past. Pope's Letters.

ABSO'RPTION. n. s. [from absorb.] The act of swallowing up.

It was below the dignity of those sacred penmen, or the spirit of God that directed them, to shew us the causes of this disruption, or of this absorption; this is left to the enquiries of men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To ABSTA'IN. v. n. [abstineo, Lat.] To forbear, to deny one's self any gratification; with the particle from.

If thou judge it hard and difficult,
Conversing, looking, loving, to abstain
From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet;
And, with desires, to languish without hope.
Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 993.

To be perpetually longing, and impatiently desirous of any thing, so that a man cannot abstain from it, is to lose a man's liberty, and to become a servant of meat and drink, or smoke.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Even then the doubtful billows scarce abstain
From the toss'd vessel on the troubled main. Dryden's Virgil.

ABSTE'MIOUS. adj. [abstemius, Lat.] Temperate, sober, abstinent, refraining from excess or pleasures. It is used of persons; as, an abstemious hermit: and of things; as, an abstemious diet. It is spoken likewise of things that cause temperance.

The instances of longevity are chiefly amongst the abstemious. Abstinence in extremity will prove a mortal disease; but the experiments of it are very rare. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Clytorean streams the love of wine expel,
(Such is the virtue of th' abstemious well)
Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood,
Extinguishes, and balks the drunken god:
Or that Melampus (so have some assur'd)
When the mad Prætides with charms he cur'd,
And pow'rful herbs, both charms and simples cast
Into the sober spring, where still their virtues last. Dryd. Fab.

ABSTE'MIOUSLY. adv. [from abstemious.] Temperately, soberly, without indulgence.

ABSTE'MIOUSNESS. n. s. [See ABSTEMIOUS.] The quality of being abstemious.

ABSTE'NTION. n. s. [from abstineo, Lat.] The act of holding off, or restraining; restraint. Dict.

To ABSTE'RGE. v. a. [abstergo, Lat.] To cleanse by wiping; to wipe.

ABSTE'RGENT. adj. Cleansing; having a cleansing quality.

To ABSTE'RSE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanse, to purify: a word very little in use, and less analogical than absterge.

Nor will we affirm, that iron receiveth, in the stomach of the ostrich, no alteration; but we suspect this effect rather from corrosion than digestion; not any tendence to chilification by the natural heat, but rather some attrition from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the stomach, which may abserse and shave the scorious parts thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. iii.

ABSTE'RSION n. s. [abstersio, Lat.] The act of cleansing. See ABSTERGE.

The seventh cause is abstersion; which is plainly a scouring off, or incision of the more viscous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which scoureth linen cloth speedily from the foulness. Bacon's Natural History, N° 42.

ABSTE'RSIVE. adj. [from absterge.] That has the quality of absterging or cleansing.

It is good, after purging, to use apozemes and broths, not so much opening as those used before purging; but abstersive and mundifying clysters also are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliques of the humours. Bacon's Nat. History.

A table stood of that abstersive tree,
Where Æthiop's swarthy bird did build to nest. Sir J. Denh.

There, many a flow'r abstersive grew,
Thy fav'rite flow'rs of yellow hue. Swift's Miscellanies.

A'BSTINENCE. n. s. [abstinentia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of any thing; with the particle from.

Because the abstinence from a present pleasure, that offers itself, is a pain, nay, oftentimes a very great one: it is no wonder that that operates after the same manner pain does, and lessens, in our thoughts, what is future; and so forces us, as it were blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

2. Fasting, or forbearance of necessary food. It is generally distinguished from temperance, as the greater degree from the less; sometimes as single performances from habits; as, a day of abstinence, and a life of temperance.

Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young:
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shakesp. Love's Lab. Lost.

Religious men, who hither must be sent
As awful guides of heavenly government;

To teach you penance, fasts, and abstinence,
To punish bodies for the soul's offence. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

And the faces of them, which have used abstinence, shall shine above the stars; whereas our faces shall be blacker than darkness. 2 Esdras, vii. 55.

A'BSTINENCY. n. s. The same with ABSTINENCE.

Were our rewards for the abstinencies, or riots, of this present life, under the prejudices of short or finite, the promises and threats of Christ would lose much of their virtue and energy. Hammond's Fundam.

A'BSTINENT. adj. [abstinens, Lat.] That uses abstinence, in opposition to covetous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is used chiefly of persons.

ABSTO'RTED. adj. [abstortus, Lat.] Forced away, wrung from another by violence. Dict.

To ABSTRA'CT. v. a. [abstraho, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another.

Could we abstract from these pernicious effects, and suppose this were innocent, it would be too light to be matter of praise. Decay of Piety.

2. To separate ideas.

Those, who cannot distinguish, compare and abstract, would hardly be able to understand and make use of language, or judge or reason to any tolerable degree. Locke.

3. To reduce to a epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the discourses we hear, or what we design to speak, let us abstract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

A'BSTRACT. adj. [abstractus, Lat. See the verb To ABSTRACT.]

1. Separated from something else, generally used with relation to mental perceptions; as, abstract mathematics, abstract terms, in opposition to concrete.

Mathematics, in its latitude, is usually divided into pure and mixed. And though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that which is mixed, doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. So astronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions, music of sounds; and mechanics, of weights and powers. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Abstract terms signify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the subject in which it is; as, whiteness, roundness, length, breadth, wisdom, mortality, life, death. Watts's Logick.

2. With the particle from.

Another fruit from the considering things in themselves, abstract from our opinions and other mens notions and discourses on them, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method, which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

A'BSTRACT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A smaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You shall there find a man, who is the abstract
Of all faults all men follow. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

If you are false, these epithets are small;
You're then the things, and abstract of them all. Dryd. Aur.

2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts.

When Mnemon came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the sentiments he had remarked; so that he could give a tolerable analysis and abstract of every treatise he had read, just after he had finished it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. The state of being abstracted.

The hearts of great princes, if they be considered, as it were in abstract, without the necessity of states, and circumstances of time, can take no full and proportional pleasure in the exercise of any narrow bounty. Wotton.

ABSTRA'CTED. part. adj. [from abstract.]

1. Separated.

That space the evil one abstracted stood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd
Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined, abstruse.

Abstracted spiritual love, they like
Their souls exhal'd. Donne.

3. Absent of mind, inattentive to present objects; as, an abstracted scholar.

ABSTRA'CTEDLY. adv. With abstraction, simply, separately from all contingent circumstances.

Or whether more abstractedly we look,
Or on the writers, or the written book:
Whence, but from heav'n, could men unskill'd in arts,
In several ages born, in several parts,
Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.
Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRA'CTION. n. s. [abstractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abstracting.

The word abstraction signifies a withdrawing some part of

An idea from other parts of it; by which means, ſuch abſtracted ideas are formed, as neither repreſent any thing corporeal or ſpiritual; that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body. Watts's Logick.

2. The ſtate of being abſtracted.
3. Abſence of mind, inattention.
4. Diſregard of worldly objects.

ABSTRA'CTIVE. adj. [from abſtract.] Having the power or quality of abſtracting.

ABSTRA'CTLY. adv. [from abſtract.] In an abſtract manner, abſolutely, without reference to any thing elſe.

Matter abſtractly and abſolutely conſidered, cannot have born an infinite duration now paſt and expired. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSTRI'CTED. part. adj. [abſtrictus, Lat.] Unbound. Dict.

To ABSTRI'NGE v. a [abſtringo, Lat.] To unbind. Dict.

To ABSTRU'DE. v. a. [abſtrudo, Lat.] To thruſt off, or pull away. Dict.

ABSTRU'SE. adj. [abſtruſus, Lat. thruſt out of ſight.]

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whoſe ſight diſcerns
Abſtruſeſt thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nightly before him, ſaw, without their light,
Rebellion riſing. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v. l. 712.

2. Difficult, remote from conception or apprehenſion. It is oppoſed to obvious and eaſy.

So ſpake our ſire, and, by his count'nance, ſeem'd
Entring on ſtudious thoughts abſtruſe. Parad. Loſt, b. viii.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abſtruſe, and not eaſy to be diſtinguiſhed, eſpecially thoſe of the tongue, which is moved, through the help of many muſcles, ſo eaſily, and habitually, and variouſly, that we are ſcarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

No man could give a rule of the greateſt beauties, and the knowledge of them was ſo abſtruſe, that there was no manner of ſpeaking which could expreſs them. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

ABSTRU'SELY. adv. In an abſtruſe manner; obſcurely, not plainly, or obviouſly.

ABSTRU'SENESS. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.] The quality of being abſtruſe; difficulty, obſcurity.

It is not oftentimes ſo much what the ſcripture ſays, as what ſome men perſuade others it ſays, that makes it ſeem obſcure; and that as to ſome other paſſages that are ſo indeed, ſince it is the abſtruſeneſs of what is taught in them, that makes them almoſt inevitably ſo; it is little leſs ſaucy, upon ſuch a ſcore, to find fault with the ſtyle of the ſcripture, than to do ſo with the author for making us but men. Boyle on the Scripture.

ABSTRU'SITY. n. ſ. [from abſtruſe.]

1. Abſtruſeneſs.
2. That which is abſtruſe. A word ſeldom uſed.

Authors are alſo ſuſpicious, nor greedily to be ſwallowed, who pretend to write of ſecrets, to deliver antipathies, ſympathies, and the occult abſtruſities of things. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To ABSU'ME. v. a. [abſumo, Lat.] To bring to an end by a gradual waſte; to eat up.

That which had been burning an infinite time could never be burnt, no not ſo much as any part of it; for if it had burned part after part, the whole muſt needs be abſumed in a portion of time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSU'RD. adj. [abſurdus, Lat.]

1. Unreaſonable, without judgment, as uſed of men.

Seeming wiſe men may make ſhift to get opinion; but let no man chooſe them for employment; for certainly you had better take for buſineſs a man ſomewhat abſurd, than over formal. Bacon's Eſſay 27.

2. Inconſiſtent, contrary to reaſon, uſed of ſentiments or practices.

The thing itſelf appeared deſirable to him, and accordingly he could not but like and deſire it; but then, it was after a very irrational abſurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means, by which it is to be acquired. South's Sermons.

A man who cannot write with wit on a proper ſubject, is dull and ſtupid; but one who ſhews it in an improper place, is as impertinent and abſurd. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 291.

But grant that thoſe can conquer, theſe can cheat;
'Tis phraſe abſurd to call a villain great:
Who wickedly is wiſe, or madly brave,
Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope's Eſſay on Man.

ABSU'RDITY. n. ſ. [from abſurd.]

1. The quality of being abſurd; want of judgment applied to men; want of propriety applied to things.

How clear ſoever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident than the abſurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

2. That which is abſurd; as, his travels were full of abſurdities. In which ſenſe it has a plural.

That ſatisfaction we receive from the opinion of ſome preeminence in ourſelves, when we ſee the abſurdities of another, or when we reflect on any paſt abſurdities of our own. N° II. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 249.

ABSU'RDLY. adv. [from abſurd.] After an abſurd manner; improperly, unreaſonably.

But man we find the only creature,
Who, led by folly, combats nature;
Who, when ſhe loudly cries, forbear,
With obſtinacy fixes there;
And where his genius leaſt inclines,
Abſurdly bends his whole deſigns. Swift's Miſcellanies.

We may proceed yet further with the atheiſt, and convince him, that not only his principle is abſurd, but his conſequences alſo as abſurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSU'RDNESS. n. ſ. [from abſurd.] The quality of being abſurd; injudiciouſneſs, impropriety. See ABSURDITY; which is more frequently uſed.

ABU'NDANCE. n. ſ. [abondance, Fr.]

1. Plenty; a ſenſe chiefly poetical.

At the whiſper of thy word,
Crown'd abundance ſpreads my board. Craſhaw.

The doubled charge his ſubjects love ſupplies,
Who, in that bounty, to themſelves are kind;
So glad Egyptians ſee their Nilus riſe,
And, in his plenty, their abundance find. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

2. Great numbers.

The river Inn, during its courſe through the Tyrol, is generally ſhut up between a double range of mountains, that are moſt of them covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peaſants are employed in hewing down the largeſt of theſe trees, that, after they are barked and cut into ſhape, are tumbled down. Addiſon on Italy.

3. A great quantity.

Their chief enterprize was the recovery of the Holy land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been ſhed with very ſmall benefit unto the Chriſtian ſtate.
Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

4. Exuberance, more than enough.

For well I wot, moſt mighty ſovereign,
That all this famous antique hiſtory,
Of ſome, th' abundance of an idle brain
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spenſ. Fairy Q. b. ii.

ABU'NDANT. adj. [abundans, Lat.]

1. Plentiful.

Good the more
Communicated, more abundant grows;
The author not impair'd, but honour'd more. Par. Loſt, b. v.

2. Exuberant.

If the veſſels are in a ſtate of too great rigidity, ſo as not to yield, a ſtrong projectile motion occaſions their rupture, and hæmorrhages; eſpecially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Full ſtored. It is followed ſometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but ſome ages before theſe were found out, and was abundant with all things at firſt; and men not very numerous; and therefore were not put ſo much to the uſe of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiouſly.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. It is applied generally to things, ſometimes to perſons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering and abundant in goodneſs and truth. Exod. xxxiv. 6.

ABU'NDANTLY. adv. [from abundant.]

1. In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Geneſis, i. 20.

God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath alſo pour'd;
Inward and outward both, his image fair. Par. Loſt, b. viii.

2. Amply, liberally, more than ſufficiently.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly ſupplied in the imaginations of friendſhip, and the repeated influences of a conſtant converſation. Rogers's Serm.

Heroic poetry has ever been eſteemed the greateſt work of human nature. In that rank has Ariſtotle placed it; and Longinus is ſo full of the like expreſſions, that he abundantly confirms the other's teſtimony. Dryden's State of Innocence, Pref.

To ABU'SE. v. a. [abuſer, Fr.]

In abuſe the verb, ſ has the ſound of z; in the noun, the common ſound.

1. To make an ill uſe of.

They that uſe this world, as not abuſing it; for the faſhion of this world paſſeth away. 1 Cor. vii. 31.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverſeneſs of men, no longer ſuffer his compaſſion to be abuſed. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To deceive, to impoſe upon.

The world hath been much abuſed by the opinion of making gold: the work itſelf I judge to be poſſible; but the means hitherto propounded are, in the practice, full of error.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 126.

He perhaps,
Out of my weakneſs and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with ſuch ſpirits,
Abuſes me to damn me: Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

It

It imports the misrepresentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehensions of men, abusing their minds with false notions; and so, by this artifice, making evil pass for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons.

Nor be with all these tempting words abus'd;
These tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
Pope's Sappho to Phaon.

3. To treat with rudeness, to reproach.

I am no strumpet, but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me. Shakespeare's Othello.

But he mocked them, and laughed at them, and abused them shamefully, and spake proudly. 1 Mac. vii. 34.

Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by these is like a mistress us'd,
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd. Pope's Ess. on Crit.

The next criticism upon the stars seems to be introduced for no other reason, but to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the author every-where endeavours to imitate and abuse. Addison.

ABU'SE. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. The ill use of any thing.

The casting away things profitable for the sustenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use. Parad. Lost, b. iv.

2. A corrupt practice, bad custom.

The nature of things is such, that, if abuses be not remedied, they will certainly encrease. Swift, Advancem. of Relig.

3. Seducement.

Was it not enough for him to have deceived me, and through the deceit abused me, and, after the abuse, forsaken me, but that he must now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge. Sidney, b. ii.

4. Unjust censure, rude reproach, contumely.

I dark in light, expos'd
To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong. Sampf. Agon.

ABU'SER. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. He that make an ill use.
2. He that deceives.

Next thou, th' abuser of thy prince's ear: Denh. Sophy.

3. He that reproaches with rudeness.
4. A ravisher, a violater.

ABU'SIVE. adj. [from abuse.]

1. Practising abuse.

The tongue mov'd gently first, and speech was low,
Till wrangling science taught it noise and show,
And wicked wit arose, thy most abusive foe. Pope's Miscell.

Dame Nature, as the learned show,
Provides each animal its foe;
Hounds hunt the hare, the wily fox
Devours your geese, the wolf your flocks.
Thus envy pleads a natural claim,
To persecute the muse's fame,
On poets in all times abusive,
From Homer down to Pope inclusive. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Containing abuse; as, an abusive lampoon.

Next, Comedy appear'd with great applause,
Till her licentious and abusive tongue
Waken'd the magistrates coercive pow'r. Roscommon.

3. Deceitful; a sense little used, yet not improper.

It is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored in integrum. Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

ABU'SIVELY. adv. [from abuse.]

1. Improperly, by a wrong use.

The oil, abusively called spirit, of roses swims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter; which I remember not to have observed in any other oil drawn in any limbeck. Boyle's Sceptical Chymistry.

2. Reproachfully.

ABU'SIVENESS. n. s. [from abuse.] The quality of being abusive; foulness of language.

Pick out of mirth, like stones out of thy ground,
Profaneness, filthiness, abusiveness.
These are the scum, with which coarse wits abound:
The fine may spare these well, yet not go less. Herbert.

To ABU'T. v. n. obsolete. [aboutir, to touch at the end, Fr.] To end at, to border upon; to meet, or approach to, with the particle upon.

Two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
Perilous the narrow ocean parts asunder. Shakesp. Henry V.

In entring the same, we will first pitch at the Looes, two several corporations, distinguished by the addition of east and west, abutting upon a navigable creek, and joined by a fair bridge of many arches. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

ABUTTAL. n. s. [from abut.] The butting or boundaries of any land. A writing declaring on what lands, highways, or other places, it does abut. Dict.

ABU'TMENT. n. s. [from abut.] That which abuts, or borders upon another.

ABY'SM. n. s. [abysme, old Fr. now written contractedly abime.] A gulf; the same with abyss.

My good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abysm of hell. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

ABY'SS. n. s. [abyssus, Lat. Ἄβυσσος, bottomless, Gr.]

1. A depth without bottom.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss,
And, through the palpable obscure, find out
This uncouth way. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 405.

2. A great depth, a gulph.

The yawning earth disclos'd th' abyss of hell:
The weeping statues did the wars foretell,
And holy sweat from brazen idols fell. Dryd. Virg. Georg. i.

3. In a figurative sense, that in which any thing is lost.

For sepulchres themselves must crumbling fall
In time's abyss, the common grave of all. Dryd. Juv. Sat x.

If, discovering how far we have clear and distinct ideas, we confine our thoughts within the contemplation of those things that are within the reach of our understandings, and launch not out into that abyss of darkness, out of a presumption, that nothing is beyond our comprehension. Locke.

4. The body of waters supposed at the center of the earth.

We are here to consider what is generally understood by the great abyss, in the common explication of the deluge; and 'tis commonly interpreted either to be the sea, or subterraneous waters hid in the bowels of the earth. Burnet's Theor. Earth.

5. In the language of divines, hell.

From what insatiable abyss,
Where flames devour, and serpents hiss,
Promote me to thy seat of bliss. Roscommon.

AC, AK, or AKE.

Being initials in the names of places, as Acton, signify an oak, from the Saxon ac, an oak. Gibson's Camden.

ACACIA. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A drug brought from Egypt, which, being supposed the inspissated juice of a tree, is imitated by the juice of sloes, boiled to the same consistence. Dictionaire de Comm. Savary. Trevoux.
2. A tree commonly so called here, though different from that which produces the true acacia; and therefore termed pseudoacacia, or Virginian acacia.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose flower-cup rises the pointal, wrapped in a fimbriated membrane, which afterwards becomes a pod, opening into two parts, in which are contained several kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

ACADE'MIAL. adj. [from academy.] Relating to an academy, belonging to an academy.

ACADE'MIAN. n. s. [from academy.] A scholar of an academy or university; a member of an university. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienses, mentions a great feast made for the academians.

ACADE'MICK. n. s. [from academy.] A student of an university.

A young academic shall dwell upon a journal that treats of trade in a dictatorial style, and shall be lavish in the praise of the author; while, at the same time, persons well skilled in those different subjects, hear the tattle with contempt. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 5.

ACADE'MICK. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Relating to an university.

While through poetic scenes the genius roves,
Or wanders wild in academic groves. Dunciad, b. iv. l. 481.

ACADE'MICAL. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Belonging to an university.

He drew him first into the fatal circle, from a kind of resolved privateness at his house at Lampsie in South Wales; where, after the academical life, he had taken such a taste of the rural, as I have heard him say, that he could well have bent his mind to a retired course. Wotton.

ACADEMI'CIAN. n. s. [academicien, Fr.] The member of an academy. It is generally used in speaking of the professors in the academies of France.

ACA'DEMIST. n. s. [from academy.] The member of an academy.

It is observed by the Parisian academists, that some amphibious quadrupeds, particularly the sea-calf, or seal, hath his epiglottis extraordinarily large. Ray on the Creation.

A'CADEMY. n. s. [anciently, and properly, with the accent on first syllable, now frequently on the second. Academia, Lat. from Academus of Athens, whose house was turned into a school, from whom the Groves of Academe in Milton.]

1. An assembly or society of men, uniting for the promotion of some art.

Our court shall be a little academy,
Still and contemplative in living arts. Shak. Love's Lab. Lost.

2. The place where sciences are taught.

Amongst the academies, which were composed by the rare genius of those great men, these four are reckoned as the principal; namely, the Athenian school, that of Sicyon, that of Rhodes, and that of Corinth. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. An university.
4. A place of education, in contradistinction to the universities or public schools.

A C C

ACANTHUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the herb bears-foot, remarkable for being the model of the foliage on the Corinthian chapiter.

On either side
Acanthus, and each od'rous bushy shrub,
Fenc'd up the verdant wall. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. iv. l. 696.

ACATALE'CTIC. n. s. [ἀκαταλήκτικος, Gr.] A verse which has the complete number of syllables, without defect or superfluity.

To ACCE'DE. v. n. [accedo, Lat.] To be added to, to come to; generally used in political accounts: as, another power has acceded to the treaty; that is, has become a party.

To ACCE'LERATE. v. a. [accelero, Lat.]

1. To make quick, to hasten, to quicken motion; to give a continual impulse to motion, so as perpetually to encrease.

Take new beer, and put in some quantity of stale beer into it; and see whether it will not accelerate the clarification, by opening the body of the beer, whereby the grosser parts may fall down into lees. Bacon's Natural History, N° 307.

If the rays endeavour to recede from the densest part of the vibration, they may be alternately accelerated and retarded by the vibrations overtaking them. Newton's Optics.

Spices quicken the pulse, and accelerate the motion of the blood, and dissipate the fluids; from whence leanness, pains in the stomach, loathings, and fevers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Lo! from the dread immensity of space
Returning, with accelerated course,
The rushing comet to the sun descends. Thomf. Sum. l. 1600.

2. It is generally applied to matter, and used chiefly in philosophical language; but is sometimes used on other occasions.

In which council the king himself, whose continual vigilancy did suck in sometimes causeless suspicions, which few else knew, inclined to the accelerating a battle. Bacon's Henry VII.

Perhaps it may point out to a student now and then, what may employ the most useful labours of his thoughts, and accelerate diligence in the most momentous enquiries. Watts's Impr.

ACCELERA'TION. n. s. [acceleratio, Lat.]

1. The act of quickening motion.

The law of the acceleration of falling bodies, discovered first by Galileo, is, that the velocities acquired by falling, being as the time in which the body falls, the spaces through which it passes will be as the squares of the velocities, and the velocity and time taken together, as in a quadruplicate ratio of the spaces.

2. The state of the body accelerated, or quickened in its motion.

The degrees of acceleration of motion, the gravitation of the air, the existence or non-existence of empty spaces, either concervate or interspersed, and many the like, have taken up the thoughts and times of men in disputes concerning them. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To ACCE'ND. v. a. [accendo, Lat.] To kindle, to set on fire; a word very rarely used.

Our devotion, if sufficiently accended, would, as theirs, burn up innumerable books of this sort. Decay of Piety.

ACCE'NSION. n. s. [accensio, Lat.] The act of kindling, or the state of being kindled.

The fulminating damp will take fire at a candle, or other flame, and, upon its accension, gives a crack or report, like the discharge of a gun, and makes likewise an explosion so forcible as sometimes to kill the miners, break their limbs, shake the earth, and force coals, stones, and other bodies, even though they be of very great weight and bulk, from the bottom of the pit or mine. Woodward's Natural History, p. iv.

ACCENT. n. s. [accentus, Lat.]

1. The manner of speaking or pronouncing, with regard either to force or elegance.

I know, sir, I am no flatterer; he that beguiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which, for my part, I will not be. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling. Shakespeare's As you like it.

2. In grammar, the marks made upon syllables to regulate their pronunciation.

Accent, as in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tune of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice in some certain syllables to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis; i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Holder's Elem.

3. Poetically, language or words.

How many ages hence
Shall this our lofty scene be acted o'er,
In states unborn, and accents yet unknown. Shak. Jul. Cæsar.

Winds, on your wings to heav'n her accents bear;
Such words as heav'n alone is fit to hear. Dryd. Virg. Past. 3.

4. A modification of the voice, expressive of the passions or sentiments.

The tender accent of a woman's cry
Will pass unheard, will unregarded die;
When the rough seaman's louder shouts prevail,
When fair occasion shews the springing gale. Prior.

To ACCE'NT, v. a. [from accentus, Lat.]

1. To pronounce, to speak words with particular regard to the grammatical marks or rules.

Having got somebody to mark the last syllable but one, where it is long, in words above two syllables (which is enough to regulate her pronunciation, and accenting the words) let her read daily in the gospels, and avoid understanding them in Latin, if she can. Locke on Education, § 177.

2. In poetry, to pronounce or utter in general.

O my unhappy lines! you that before
Have serv'd my youth to vent some wanton cries,
And, now congeal'd with grief, can scarce implore
Strength to accent, Here my Albertus lies! Watson.

3. To write or note the accents.

To ACCE'NTUATE. v. a. [accentuer, Fr.] To place the proper accents over the vowels.

ACCENTUA'TION. n. s. [from accentuate.]

1. The act of placing the accent in pronunciation.
2. Marking the accent in writing.

To ACCE'PT, v. a. [accipio, Lat. accepter, Fr.]

1. To take with pleasure; to receive kindly; to admit with approbation. It is distinguished from receive, as specific from general; noting a particular manner of receiving.

Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar for nought. I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. Malachi, i. 10.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but, in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Acts, x. 34, 35.

You have been graciously pleased to accept this tender of my duty. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.

Charm by accepting, by submitting sway,
Yet have your humour most when you obey. Pope.

2. It is used in a kind of juridical sense; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty.

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made. Dryden's Fables.

3. In the language of the bible, to accept persons, is to act with personal and partial regard.

He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons. Job, xiii. 10.

4. It is sometimes used with the particle of.

I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept of me. Genesis, xxxii. 20.

ACCEPTABI'LITY. n. s. The quality of being acceptable. See ACCEPTABLE.

He hath given us his natural blood to be shed, for the remission of our sins, and for the obtaining the grace and acceptability of repentance. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

ACCE'PTABLE. adj. [acceptable, Fr from the Latin.] It is pronounced by some with the accent on the first syllable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the second.

1. That which is likely to be accepted; grateful; pleasing. It is used with the particle to before the person accepting.

This woman, whom thou mad'st to be my help,
And gav'st me as thy perfect gift, so good,
So fit, so acceptable, so divine,
That from her hand I could expect no ill. Parad. Lost, b. ii.

I do not see any other method left for men of that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift's Proj. &c.

After he had made a peace so acceptable to the church, and so honourable to himself, he spent the remainder of his life at Ripaille, and died with an extraordinary reputation of sanctity. Addison on Italy.

ACCE'PTABLENESS. n. s. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableness of that conjunction. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 2.

ACCE'PTABLY. adv. [from acceptable.] In an acceptable manner; so as to please; with the particle to. For the accent, see ACCEPTABLE.

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory; for he that prayeth upon God's account, cares not what he suffers, so he be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he prays, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

If you can teach them to love and respect other people, they will, as your age requires it, find ways to express it acceptably to every one. Locke on Education, § 145.

ACCE'PTANCE. n. s. [acceptance, Fr.]

1. Reception with approbation.

By that acceptance of his sovereignty, they also accepted of his laws; why then should any other laws be now used amongst them? Spenser's State of Ireland.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some men cannot be fools with so good acceptance as others. South's Sermons.

Thus I imbolden'd spake, and freedom us'd
Permissive, and acceptance found. Par. Lost, b. viii. l. 435.

2. The meaning of a word as it is received or understood; acceptation.

That pleasure is man's chiefest good, because indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleasure, is an assertion most most certainly true, though, under the common acceptance of it, not only false but odious: for, according to this, pleasure and sensuality pass for terms equivalent; and therefore he, who takes it in this sense, alters the subject of the discourse. South.

ACCE'PTANCE. [in law.] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver binds himself, for ever, to allow a former fact done by another, whether it be in itself good or not. Cowel.

ACCEPTA'TION. n. s. [from accept.]

1. Reception, whether good or bad. This large sense seems now wholly out of use.

Yet, poor soul! knows he no other, but that I do suspect, neglect, yea, and detest him: for, every day, he finds one way or other to set forth himself unto me; but all are rewarded with like coldness of acceptation. Sidney, b. ii.

What is new finds better acceptation, than what is good or great. Denham's Sophy.

2. Good reception, acceptance.

Cain, envious of the acceptation of his brother's prayer and sacrifice, slew him; making himself the first manslayer, and his brother the first martyr. Raleigh's History of the World, b. i.

3. The state of being acceptable, regard.

Some things, although not so required of necessity, that, to leave them undone, excludeth from salvation, are, notwithstanding, of so great dignity and acceptation with God, that most ample reward in heaven is laid up for them. Hooker, b. ii.

They have those enjoyments only as the consequences of the state of esteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governours. Locke on Education, § 53.

5. Acceptance in the juridical sense. This sense occurs rarely.

As, in order to the passing away a thing by gift, there is required a surrender of all right on his part that gives; so there is required also an acceptation on his part to whom it is given. South's Sermons.

5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

Thereupon the earl of Lauderdale made a discourse upon the several questions, and what acceptation these words and expressions had. Clarendon, b. viii.

All matter is either fluid or solid, in a large acceptation of the words, that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentl. Serm.

An ACCE'PTER. n. s. [from accept.] The person that accepts.

ACCEPTILA'TION, n. s. [acceptilatio, Lat.] A term of the civil law, importing the remission of a debt by an acquittance from the creditor, testifying the receipt of money which has never been paid.

ACCE'PTION. n. s. [acception, Fr. from acceptio, Lat.] The received sense of a word; the meaning.

That this hath been esteemed the due and proper acception of this word, I shall testify by one evidence, which gave me the first hint of this notion. Hammond on Fundamentals.

ACCE'SS. n. s. [In some of its senses, it seems derived from accessus, in others, from accessio, Lat. acces, Fr.]

1. The way by which any thing may be approached.

There remained very advantageous accesses for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very slender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life, and no assurance that repentance would be admitted for sin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

And here th' access a gloomy grove defends;
And here th' unnavigable lake extends,
O'er whose unhappy waters, void of light,
No bird presumes to steer his airy flight. Dryd. Æneid vi.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are deny'd access unto his person,
Ev'n by those men that most have done us wrong.
Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

They go commission'd to require a peace,
And carry presents to procure access. Dryden, Æneid vii.

He grants what they besought;
Instructed, that to God is no access
Without Mediator, whose high office now
Moses in figure bears. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

3. Encrease, enlargement, addition.

The gold was accumulated, and store treasure, for the most part; but the silver is still growing. Besides, infinite is the access of territory and empire by the same enterprize. Bacon's Holy War.

Although to opinion, there be many gods, may seem an access in religion, and such as cannot at all consist with atheism, yet doth it deductively, and upon inference, include the same; for unity is the inseparable and essential attribute of Deity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 10.

Nor think superfluous their aid;
I, from the influence of thy looks, receive
Access in every virtue; in thy sight
More wise, more watchful, stronger. Paradise Lost.

The reputation
Of virtuous actions past, if not kept up
With an access, and fresh supply, of new ones,
Is lost and soon forgotten. Denham's Sophy.

4. It is sometimes used, after the French, to signify the returns of fits of a distemper; but this sense seems yet scarcely received into our language.

For as relapses make diseases
More desperate than their first accesses. Hudibras.

A'CCESSARINESS. n. s. [from accessary.] The state of being accessary.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative accessariness to the mischiefs. Decay of Piety.

A'CCESSARY. adj. [A corruption, as it seems, of the word accessory, which see; but now more commonly used than the proper word.]

That which, without being the chief agent in a crime, contributes to it. But it had formerly a good and general sense.

As for those things that are accessary hereunto, those things that so belong to the way of salvation. Hooker.

He had taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehension or imagination, that it would ever make him accessary to rebellion. Clarendon, b. viii.

ACCE'SSIBLE. adj. [accessibilis, Lat. accessible, Fr.] That which may be approached; that which we may reach or arrive at.

It is applied both to persons and things, with the particle to.

In conversation, the tempers of men are open and accessible, their attention is awake, and their minds disposed to receive the strongest impressions; and what is spoken is generally more affecting, and more apposite to particular occasions. Rogers.

As an island, we are accessible on every side, and exposed to perpetual invasions; against which it is impossible to fortify ourselves sufficiently, without a power at sea. Addison's Freeholder.

Those things, which were indeed inexplicable, have been rackt and tortured to discover themselves, while the plainer and more accessible truths, as if despicable while easy, are clouded and obscured. Decay of Piety.

Some lie more open to our senses and daily observation; others are more occult and hidden, and though accessible, in some measure, to our senses, yet not without great search and scrutiny, or some happy accident. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCE'SSION. n. s. [accessio, Lat. accession, Fr.]

1. Encrease by something added, enlargement, augmentation.

There would not have been found the difference here set down betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force should have been according to the theory, but that the included inch of air received some little accession during the trial. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wisest among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people; and therefore, knowing what an accession thereof would accrue to them, by such an addition of property, used all means to prevent it. Swift on the Contests in Athens and Rome.

Charity, indeed, and works of munificence, are the proper discharge of such over-proportioned accessions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them. Rogers's Sermons.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's self to; as, accession to a confederacy.

Beside, what wise objections he prepares
Against my late accession to the wars?
Does not the fool perceive his argument
Is with more force against Achilles bent? Dryden's Fables.

3. The act of arriving at; as, the king's accession to the throne.

A'CCESSORILY. adv. [from accessory.] In the manner of an accessory.

A'CCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, so as to encrease it; additional.

In this kind there is not the least action, but it doth somewhat make to the accessory augmentation of our bliss. Hooker.

A'CCESSORY. n. s. [accessorius, Lat. accessoire, Fr. This word, which had anciently a general signification, is now almost confined to forms of law.]

1. Applied to persons.

A man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be accessory to the offence of another, after two sorts, by the common law, or by statute: and, by the common law, two ways also; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviseth another to commit a felony, and is not present at the execution thereof; for his presence makes him also a principal: wherefore there cannot be an accessory before the fact in manslaughter; because manslaughter is sudden and not prepensed. Accessory after the fact, is, when one receiveth him, whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Accessory, by statute, is he that abets, counsels, or hides any man committing, or having committed an offence made felony by statute. Cowel.

By the common law, the accessories cannot be proceeded against till the principal has received his trial. Spenser's State of Irel.

But pause, my soul! and study, ere thou fall
On accidental joys, th' essential.
Still before accessories to abide
A trial, must the principal be try'd. Donne.

Now were all transform'd
Alike, to serpents all, as accessories
To his bold riot. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x. l. 520.

A C C

2. Applied to things.

An accidency is ſaid to be that which does accede unto ſome principal fact or thing in law; and, as ſuch, genera ly ſpeaking, follows the reaſon and nature of its principal.

Aylffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

A'CCIDENCE. n. ſ. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Lat.] The little book containing the firſt rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of ſpeech.

I do confeſs I do want eloquence,
And never yet did learn mine accidence. Taylor the Water-poet.

A'CCIDENT. n. ſ. [accidens, Lat.]

1. The property or quality of any being, which may be ſeparated from it, at leaſt in thought.

If ſhe were but the body's accident,
And her ſole being did in it ſubſiſt,
As white in ſnow, ſhe might herſelf abſent,
And in the body's ſubſtance not be miſs'd. Sir John Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is ſuch a mode as is not neceſſary to the being of a thing; for the ſubject may be without it, and yet remain of the ſame nature that it was before; or it is that mode which may be ſeparated or aboliſhed from its ſubject. Watts's Logick.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing elſe but the informing of ourſelves, what compoſures of letters are, by conſent and inſtitution, to ſignify ſuch certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents. Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. That which happens unforeſeen; caſualty, chance.

General laws are like general rules in phyſick, according whereunto, as no wiſe man will deſire himſelf to be cured, if there be joined with his diſeaſe ſome ſpecial accident, in regard whereof, that whereby others in the ſame infirmity, but without the like accident, recover health, would be, to him, either hurtful, or, at the leaſt, unprofitable. Hooker, b. v. § 9.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common mud and paſture with the land of Eden. Raleigh's Hiſt. World.

Thus we rejoic'd, but ſoon our joy is turn'd
To perplexity, and new amaze;
For whither is he gone? What accident
Hath rapt him from us? Paradiſe Regained, b. i.

And trivial accidents ſhall be forborn,
That others may have time to take their turn. Dryd. Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an inſtrument of it (as the logicians ſpeak) by accident. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ACCIDE'NTAL. n. ſ. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property noneſſential.

Conceive, as much as you can, of the eſſentials of any ſubject, before you conſider its accidentals. Watts's Logick.

ACCIDE'NTAL. adj. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident, noneſſential; uſed with the particle to, before that in which the accident inheres.

A diſtinction is to be made between what pleaſes naturally in itſelf, and what pleaſes upon the account of machines, actors, dances, and circumſtances, which are merely accidental to the tragedy. Rymer's Tragedies of the laſt Age.

This is accidental to a ſtate of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it. Tillotſon.

2. Caſual, fortuitous, happening by chance.

Thy ſin's not accidental, but a trade. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for Meaſ.

So ſhall you hear
Of accidental judgments, caſual ſlaughters;
Of deaths put on by cunning, and forc'd cauſe. Shakeſ. Ham.

Look upon things of the moſt accidental and mutable nature; accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance; yet God's preſcience of them is as certain in him, as the memory of them is, or can be, in us. South's Sermons.

3. In the following paſſage it ſeems to ſignify adventitious.

Ay, ſuch a miniſter as wind to fire,
That adds an accidental fierceneſs to
Its natural fury. Denham's Sophy.

ACCIDE'NTALLY. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner; noneſſentially.

Other needful points of publick matters, no leſs concerning the good of the commonwealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

I conclude choler accidentally better, and acrimonious, but not in itſelf. Harvey on Conſumptions.

2. Caſually, fortuitouſly.

Although virtuous men do ſometimes accidentally make their way to preferment, yet the world is ſo corrupted, that no man can reaſonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ACCIDE'NTALNESS. n. ſ. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental. Dict.

ACCIPIENT. n. ſ. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver, perhaps ſometimes uſed for recipient. Dict.

To ACCI'TE. v. a. [accito, Lat.] To call, to ſummons; a word not in uſe now.

Our coronation done, we will accite
No prince, no peer, ſhall have juſt cauſe to ſay,
Heav'n ſhorten Harry's happy life one day. Shakeſ. Henry IV. N III.

ACCLA'IM. n. ſ. [acclamo, Lat. from which probably firſt the verb acclaim, now loſt, and then the noun.] A ſhout of praiſe, acclamation.

Back from purſuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclaim,
Thee only extoll'd. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. iii. l. 337.

The herald ends; the vaulted firmament
With loud acclaims, and vaſt applauſe, is rent. Dryd. Fables.

ACCLAMA'TION. n. ſ. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applauſe; ſuch as thoſe with which a victorious army ſalutes the general.

It hath been the cuſtom of chriſtian men, in token of the greater reverence, to ſtand, to utter certain words of acclamation, and, at the name of Jeſus, to bow. Hooker, b. v. § 29.

Gladly then he mix'd
Among thoſe friendly pow'rs, who him receiv'd
With joy, and acclamations loud, that one,
That, of ſo many myriads fall'n, yet one
Return'd, not loſt. Milt. Parad. Loſt, b. vi. l. 23.

Such an enchantment is there in words, and ſo fine a thing does it ſeem to ſome, to be ruined plauſibly, and to be uſhered to their deſtruction with panegyric and acclamation. South.

ACCLI'VITY. n. ſ. [from acclivus, Lat.] The ſteepneſs or ſlope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the aſcent of an hill is the acclivity, the deſcent is the declivity. Quincy.

At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,
With soothing words renew'd, him thus accosts. Milton.

I first accosted him: I su'd, I sought,
And, with a loving force, to Pheneus brought. Dryden.

ACCO'STABLE. adj. [from accost.] Easy of access; familiar.

They were both indubitable, strong, and high-minded men, yet of sweet and accostable nature, almost equally delighting in the press and affluence of dependents and suitors. Wotton.

ACCOUNT. n. f. [from the old French accompt, from computus, Lat. originally written accompt, which see; but, by gradually softening the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expences; a register of facts relating to money.

At many times I brought in my accounts,
Laid them before you; you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honesty. Shakespeare.

When my young master has once got the skill of keeping accounts (which is a business of reason more than arithmetic) perhaps it will not be amiss, that his father from thenceforth require him to do it in all his concernments. Locke.

2. The state or result of a computation; as, the account stands thus between us.

Behold this have I found, saith the Preacher, counting one by one, to find out the account. Ecclesiasticus.

3. Such a state of persons or things, as may make them more or less worthy of being considered in the reckoning. Value, or estimation.

For the care that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolks, was in least account with them: but the greatest and principal fear was for the holy temple. 2 Maccab. xv. 18.

That good affection, which things of smaller account have once set on work, is by so much the more easily raised higher. Hooker, b. v. §. 3.

I should make more account of their judgment, who are men of sense, and yet have never touched a pencil, than of the opinion given by the greatest part of painters. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

We would establish our souls in such a solid and substantial virtue, as will turn to account in that great day, when it must stand the test of infinite wisdom and justice. Addison.

4. Distinction, dignity, rank

There is such a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing Eumæus, and speaking of him in the second person: it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and distinction. Pope's Odyssey.

5. A reckoning verified by finding the value of a thing equal to what was accounted.

Considering the usual motives of human actions, which are pleasure, profit, and ambition, I cannot yet comprehend how those persons find their account in any of the three.
Swift's Answer to Pamphlet.

6. A reckoning referred to, or sum charged upon any particular person; and thence, figuratively, regard, consideration, sake.

If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on my account. Philemon, i. 8.

In matters where his judgment led him to oppose men on a public account, he would do it vigorously and heartily. Atterbury.

The assertion is our Saviour's, though uttered by him in the person of Abraham, the father of the faithful; who, on the account of that character, is very fitly introduced. Idem.

These tribunes, a year or two after their institution, kindled great dissensions between the nobles and the commons, on the account of Coriolanus, a nobleman, whom the latter had impeached. Swift.

Nothing can recommend itself to our love, on any other account, but either as it promotes our present, or is a means to assure to us a future happiness. Rogers.

Sempronius gives no thanks on this account. Addison.

7. A narrative, relation; in this use it may seem to be derived from conte, Fr. a tale, a narration

8. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magistrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants; and when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents. Matt. xix. 23, 24.

9. The relation and reasons of a transaction given to a person in authority.

Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afraid! What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God, who sees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and punishments, and power enough to call to account the proudest offender.

10. Explanation; assignment of causes.

It is easy to give account, how it came to pass, that though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them so contrarily. Locke.

It being in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right, being consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal, made that power so too, and impossible to be inherited. Locke.

11. An opinion concerning things previously established.

These were designed to join with the forces at sea, there being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats to transport the land-forces, under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

A prodigal young fellow, that had sold his clothes, upon the sight of a swallow, made account that summer was at hand, and away went his shirt too. L'Estrange.

12. The reasons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the same reason to believe the history of our Saviour, as that of any other person to which they themselves were not actually eye-witnesses, they were bound, by all the rules of historical faith, and of right reason, to give credit to this history,
Addison on the Christian Religion.

13. In law.

Account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action brought against a man, that, by means of office or business undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as, a baliff toward his master, a guardian to his ward. Cowell.

To ACCO'UNT. v. n. [See ACCOUNT.]

1. To esteem, to think, to hold in opinion.

That also was accounted a land of giants. Deut.

Who all this while were at their wanton rest,
Accourting each her friend with lavish feast. Fairy Queen.

To ACCOUTRE. v. a. [accoûtrer, Fr.] To dress, to equip.

Is it for this they study? to grow pale,
And miss the pleasures of a glorious meal?
For this, in rags accoutred are they seen,
And made the may-game of the public spleen? Dryden.

ACCO'UTREMENT. n. s. [accoûtrement, Fr.] Dress, equipage, furniture relating to the person; trappings, ornaments.

I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

I have seen the pope officiate at St. Peter's, where, for two hours together, he was busied in putting on or off his different accoutrements, according to the different parts he was to act in them. Addison.

How gay with all th' accoutrements of war,
The Britons come, with gold well-fraught they come. Phil.

Christianity is lost among them, in the trappings and accoutrements of it; with which, instead of adorning religion, they have strangely disguised it, and quite stifled it in the croud of external rites and ceremonies. Tillotson.

ACCRE'TION. n. s. [accretio, Lat.] The act of growing to another, so as to encrease it.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bacon.

The changes seem to be effected by the exhaling of the moisture, which may leave the tinging corpuscles more dense, and something augmented by the accretion of the oily and earthy parts of that moisture. Newton's Optics.

Infants support abstinence worst, from the quantity of aliment consumed in accretion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACCRE'TIVE. adj. [from accretion.] Growing; that which by growth is added.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not: we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants and animals: and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial; and the quickest eye can discover no more but that it is gone. Glanv. Scepsis Scient.

To ACCRO'ACH. v. a. [accrocher, Fr.] To draw to one as with a hook; to gripe, to draw away by degrees what is another's.

ACCRO'ACHMENT. n. s. [from accroach.] The act of accroaching. Dict.

To ACCRUE. v. n. [from the participle accrû, formed from accroître, Fr.]

1. To accede to, to be added to; as, a natural production or effect, without any particular respect to good or ill.

The Son of God, by his incarnation, hath changed the manner of that personal subsistence; no alteration thereby accruing to the nature of God. Hooker.

2. To be added, as an advantage or improvement, in a sense inclining to good rather than ill; in which meaning it is more frequently used by later authors.

From which compact there arising an obligation upon every one, so to convey his meaning, there accrues also a right to every one, by the same signs, to judge of the sense or meaning of the person so obliged to express himself. South's Sermons.

Let the evidence of such a particular miracle be never so bright and clear, yet it is still but particular; and must therefore want that kind of force, that degree of influence, which accrues to a standing general proof, from its having been tried or approved, and consented to, by men of all ranks and capacities, of all tempers and interests, of all ages and nations. Atterbury.

3. To append to, or arise from; as, an ill consequence. This sense seems to be less proper.

His scholar Aristotle, as in many other particulars, so likewise in this, did justly oppose him, and became one of the authors; choosing a certain benefit, before the hazard that might accrue from the disrespects of ignorant persons. Wilk. Math. Mag.

4. In a commercial sense, to be produced, or arise; as, profits.

The yearly benefit, that, out of those his works, accrueth to her majesty, amounteth to one thousand pounds. Carew's Surv.

The great profits which have accrued to the duke of Florence from his free port, have set several of the states of Italy on the same subject. Addison.

5. Sometimes to follow, as loss; but less properly.

The benefit or loss of such a trade accruing to the government, until it comes to take root in the nation. Temple's Misc.

ACCUBA'TION. n. s. [from accubo, to lye down to, Lat.] The antient posture of leaning at meals.

It will appear, that accubation, or lying down at meals, was a gesture used by very many nations. Brown.

To ACCU'MB. v. a. [accumbo, Lat.] To lie at the table, according to the ancient manner. Dict.

To ACCU'MULATE. v. a. [from accumulo, Lat.] To heap one thing upon another; to pile up, to heap together. It is used either literally, as, to accumulate money, or, figuratively, as, to accumulate merit or wickedness.

If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more; abandon all remorse;
On horrors head horrors accumulate;
For nothing can'st thou to damnation add. Shakespeare.

Crusht by imaginary treason's weight,
Which too much merit did accumulate. Sir John Denham.

ACCUMULA'TION. n. s. [from accumulate.]

1. The act of accumulating.

Some, perhaps, might otherwise wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering, or lifting of one favour upon another. Wotton.

One of my place in Syria, his lieutenant,
For quick accumulation of renown,
Which he atchiev'd by th' minute, lost his favour.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

2. The

2. The ſtate of being accumulated.

By the regular returns of it in ſome people, and their freedom from it after the morbid matter is exhauſted, it looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of it, as of other humours in the body, growing perhaps on ſome people as corns. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ACCU'MULATIVE. adj. [from accumulate.]

1. That which accumulates.

2. That which is accumulated.

If the injury meet not with meekneſs, it then acquires another accumulative guilt, and ſtands anſwerable not only for its own poſitive ill, but for all the accidental, which it cauſes in the ſufferer. Government of the Tongue.

ACCUMULA'TOR n. ſ. [from accumulate.] He that accumulates; a gatherer or heaper together.

Injuries may fall upon the paſſive man, yet there would be no broils and quarrels, the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries; which demonſtrates now unjuſtly meekneſs is charged with ſo much as accidental production of them. Decay of Piety.

A'CCURACY. n. ſ. [accuratio, Lat.] Exactneſs, nicety.

The man who hath the ſtupid ignorance, or hardened effrontery! to inſult the revealed will of God; or the petulant conceit to turn it into ridicule; or the arrogance to make his own perfections the meaſure of the Divinity; or, at beſt, that can collate a text, or quote an authority, with an inſipid accuracy; or demonſtrate a plain propoſition, in all the formality of A's and B's; theſe now are the only men worth mentioning. Delany.

We conſider the uniformity of the whole deſign, accuracy of the calculations, and ſkill in reſtoring and comparing paſſages of ancient authors. Arbuthnot on Coins.

A'CCURATE. adj. [accuratus, Lat.]

1. Exact, as oppoſed to negligence or ignorance, applied to perſons.

2. Exact, without defect or failure, applied to things.

No man living has made more accurate trials than Reaumure, that brighteſt ornament of France. Colſon.

A'CCURATELY. adv. [from accurate.] In an acurate manner; exactly, without errour, nicely.

The ſin of incidence is either accurately, or very nearly, in a given ratio to the ſine of refraction. Newt. Opt.

That all theſe diſtances, motions, and quantities of matter, ſhould be ſo accurately and harmoniouſly adjuſted in this great variety of our ſyſtem, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material cauſes, and muſt certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wiſdom. Bentley.

A'CCURATENESS. n. ſ. [from accurate.] Exactneſs, nicety.

But ſometime after, ſuſpecting that in making this obſervation I had not determined the diameter of the ſphere with ſufficient accurateneſs, I repeated the experiment. Newton's Opt.

To ACCU'RSE. v. a. [See CURSE.] To doom to miſery; to invoke miſery upon any one.

As if it were an unlucky comet, or as if God had ſo accurſed it, that it ſhould never ſhine to give light in things concerning our duty any way towards him. Hooker.

ACCU'RSED. part. adj.

1. That which is curſed or doomed to miſery.

'Tis the moſt certain ſign the world's accurſt,
That the beſt things corrupted are and worſt. Denham.

2. That which deſerves the curſe; execrable; hateful; deteſtable; and, by conſequence, wicked; malignant.

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His meſſage ere he come; that a ſwift bleſſing
May ſoon return to this our ſuffering country,
Under a hand accurs'd! Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

The chief part of the miſery of wicked men, and thoſe accurſed ſpirits, the devils, is this; that they are of a diſpoſition contrary to God. Tillotſon.

They, like the ſeed from which they ſprung, accurſt,
Againſt the gods immortal hatred nurſt. Dryden's Ovid.

ACCU'SABLE. adj. [from the verb accuſe.] That which may be cenſured; blamable; culpable.

There would be a manifeſt defect, and her improviſion juſtly accuſable; if animals, ſo ſubject unto diſeaſes from bilious cauſes, ſhould want a proper conveyance for choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ACCUSA'TION. n. ſ. [from accuſe.]

1. The act of accuſing.

Thus they in mutual accuſation ſpent
The fruitleſs hours, but neither ſelf-condemning,
And of their vain conteſt appear'd no end. Milton.

2. The charge brought againſt any one by the accuſer.

You read
Theſe accuſations, and theſe grievous crimes
Committed by your perſon, and your followers.
Shakeſpeare's Richard II.

All accuſation, in the very nature of the thing, ſtill ſuppoſing, and being founded upon ſome law: for where there is no law, there can be no trangreſſion; and where there can be no tranſgreſſion, I am ſure there ought to be no accuſation. South.

3. In the ſenſe of the courts—

A declaration of ſome crime preferred before a competent judge, by the intervention of an inditement lawfully made, in order to inflict ſome judgment on the guilty perſon. Ayl. Parer.

ACCU'SATIVE. adj. [accuſativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, ſignifying the relation of the noun, on which the action implied in the verb terminates.

ACCU'SATORY. adj. [from accuſe.] That which produceth or containeth an accuſation.

In a charge of adultery, the accuſer ought to ſet forth, in the accuſatory libel, ſome certain and definite time. Ayl. Parer.

To ACCU'SE. v. a. [accuſo, Lat.]

1. To charge with a crime. It requires the particle of before the ſubject of accuſation.

He ſtripp'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth;
And, calling weſtern winds, accus'd the ſpring of ſloth.
Dryden's Virgil.

The profeſſors are accuſed of all the ill practices which may ſeem to be the ill conſequences of their principles. Addiſon.

2. It ſometimes admits the particle for.

Never ſend up a leg of a fowl at ſupper, while there is a cat or dog in the houſe, that can be accuſed for running away with it: but, if there happen to be neither, you muſt lay it upon the rats, or a ſtrange greyhound. Swift.

3. To blame or cenſure, in oppoſition to applauſe or juſtification.

Their conſcience bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing or elſe excuſing one another. Rom. ii. 15.

Your valour would your ſloth too much accuſe,
And therefore, like themſelves, they princes chooſe.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

ACCU'SER. n. ſ. [from accuſe.] He that brings a charge againſt another.

There are ſome perſons forbidden to be accuſers, on the ſcore of their ſex, as women; others, of their age, as pupils and infants; others, upon the account of ſome crimes committed by them; and others, on the ſcore of ſome filthy lucre to propoſe to gain thereby; others, on the ſcore of their conditions, as libertines againſt their patrons; and others, through a ſuſpicion of calumny, as having once already given falſe evidence; and, laſtly, others on account of their poverty, as not being worth more than fifty aurei. Ayliffe's Parergon.

—That good man, who drank the pois'nous draught,
With mind ſerene, and could not wiſh to ſee
His vile accuſer drink as deep as he. Dryd. Juv.

If the perſon accuſed maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuſer is immediately put to an ignominious death; and, out of his goods and lands, the innocent perſon is quadruply recompenſed. Gulliver's Travels.

To ACCU'STOM. v. a. [accoûtumer, Fr.] To habituate, to enure, with the particle to. It is uſed chiefly of perſons.

How ſhall we breathe in other air
Leſs pure, accuſtom'd to immortal fruits? Milton.

It has been ſome advantage to accuſtom one's ſelf to books of the ſame edition. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

ACCU'STOMABLE. adj. [from accuſtom.] Of long cuſtom or habit; habitual; cuſtomary.

Animals even of the ſame original, extraction, and ſpecies, may be diverſified by accuſtomable reſidence in one climate, from what they are in another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACCU'STOMABLY. adv. According to cuſtom.

Touching the king's fines accuſtomably paid for the purchaſing of writs original, I find no certain beginning of them, and do therefore think that they alſo grew up with the chancery. Bacon's Alienation.

ACCU'STOMANCE. n. ſ. [accoutûmance, Fr.] Cuſtom, habit, uſe.

Through accuſtomance and negligence, and perhaps ſome other cauſes, we neither feel it in our own bodies, nor take notice of it in others. Boyle.

ACCU'STOMARILY. adv. In a cuſtomary manner; according to common or cuſtomary practice.

ACCU'STOMARY. adj. [from accuſtom.] Uſual, practiſed; according to cuſtom.

ACCU'STOMED. [from accuſtom.] According to cuſtom; frequent; uſual.

Look how ſhe rubs her hands.—It is an accuſtomed action with her, to ſeem thus waſhing her hands: I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

A'CE. n. ſ. [As not only ſignified a piece of money, but any integer, from whence is derived the word ace, or unit. Thus As ſignified the whole inheritance. Arbuthnot on Coins.]

1. An unit; a ſingle point on cards or dice.

When lots are ſhuffled together in a lap, urn or pitcher; or if a man blindfold caſts a die, what reaſon in the world can he have to preſume, that he ſhall draw a white ſtone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a ſize. South.

2. A ſmall quantity.

He will not bate an ace of abſolute certainty; but however doubtful or improbable the thing is, coming from him it muſt go for an indiſputable truth. Government of the Tongue.

I'll not wag an ace farther: the whole world ſhall not bribe me to it. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

ACE'PHALOUS. adj. [ἀκέφαλος, Gr.] Without a head. Dict.

ACE'RB. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughneſs, as moſt fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACE'RBITY. n. ſ. [acerbitas, Lat.]

1. A rough ſour taſte.
2. Applied to men, ſharpneſs of temper; ſeverity.

True it is, that the talents for criticiſm, namely, ſmartneſs, quick cenſure, vivacity of remark, indeed all but acerbity, ſeem rather the gifts of youth than of old age. Pope.

To ACE'RVATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

ACERVA'TION. n. ſ. [from acervate.] The act of heaping together.

ACE'RVOSE. adj. Full of heaps. Dict.

ACE'SCENT. adj. [aceſcens, Lat.] That which has a tendency to ſourneſs or acidity.

The ſame perſons, perhaps, had enjoyed their health as well with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a ſufficient quantity of aceſcents; as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACETO'SE. adj. That which has in it acids or vinegar. Dict.

ACETO'SITY. n. ſ. [from acetoſe.] The ſtate of being acetoſe, or of containing vinegar. Dict.

ACE'TOUS. adj. [from acetum, vinegar, Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar, ſour.

Raiſins, which conſiſt chiefly of the juice of grapes, inſpiſſated in the ſkins or huſks by the avolation of the ſuperfluous moiſture through their pores, being diſtilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an acetous ſpirit. Boyle.

ACHE. n. ſ. [ace, Sax. ἄχος, Gr. now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one ſyllable; the primitive manner being preſerved chiefly in poetry, for the ſake of the meaſure.]

A continued pain. See AKE.

I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beaſts ſhall tremble at thy din. Shakeſpeare.

A coming ſhow'r your ſhooting corns preſage,
Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage. Swift.

To ACHE, v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our ſenſes are dulled and ſpent by any extraordinary intention, and our very eyes will ache, if long fix'd upon any difficultly diſcerned object. Glanville.

To ACHI'EVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.]

1. To perform, to finiſh a deſign proſperouſly.

Our toils, my friends, are crown'd with ſure ſucceſs:
The greater part perform'd, achieve the leſs. Dryden.

2. To gain, to obtain.

Experience is by induſtry achiev'd,
And perfected by the ſwift courſe of time.
Shakeſpeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I periſh, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modeſt girl.
Shakeſpeare's Taming the Shrew.

Thou haſt achiev'd our liberty, confin'd
Within hell-gates till now. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Show all the ſpoils by valiant kings achiev'd,
And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd. Prior.

An ACHI'EVER. n. ſ. He that performs; he that obtains what he endeavours after.

A victory is twice itſelf, when the achiever brings home full numbers. Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

An ACHI'EVEMENT. n. ſ. [achevement, Fr.]

1. The performance of an action.

From every coaſt that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble martial crew,
That famous hard achievements ſtill purſue. Fairy Queen.

2. The eſcutcheon, or enſigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then ſhall the war, and ſtern debate, and ſtrife
Immortal, be the buſ'neſs of my life;
And in thy fane, the duſty ſpoils among,
High on the burniſh'd roof, my banner ſhall be hung;
Rank'd with my champions bucklers, and below
With arms revers'd, th' achievements of the foe. Dryden.

Achievement, in the firſt ſenſe, is derived from achive, as it ſignifies to perform; in the ſecond, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

ACHOR. n. ſ. [achor, Lat. ἀχώρ, Gr. furfur.]

A ſpecies of the herpes; it appears with a cruſty ſcab, which cauſes an itching on the ſurface of the head, occaſioned by a ſalt ſharp ſerum oozing through the ſkin. Quincy.

A'CID. adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.] Sour, ſharp.

Wild trees laſt longer than garden trees; and in the ſame kind, thoſe whoſe fruit is acid, more than thoſe whoſe fruit is ſweet. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N°. 585.

Acid, or ſour, proceeds from a ſalt of the ſame nature, without mixture of oil; in auſtere taſtes the oily parts have not diſentangled themſelves from the ſalts and earthy parts; ſuch is the taſte of unripe fruits. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Liquids and ſubſtances are called acids, which being compoſed of pointed particles, affect the taſte in a ſharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with ſyrup of violets, which it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or lixivial particles, it changes that ſyrup green. Quincy.

ACI'DITY. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taſte; ſharpneſs; ſourneſs.

Fiſhes, by the help of a diſſolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meats, ſkin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cremor; and yet this liquor manifeſts nothing of acidity to the taſte. Ray on the Creation.

When the taſte of the mouth is bitter, it is a ſign of a redundance of a bilious alkali, and demands a quite different diet from the caſe of acidity or ſourneſs. Arbuthnot on Aiments.

A'CIDNESS. n. ſ. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See ACIDITY.

ACI'DULÆ. n. ſ. [that is, aquæ acidula.]

Medicinal ſprings impregnated with ſharp particles, as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum-ſprings are. Quincy.

The acidulæ, or medical ſprings, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than uſual; and even the ordinary ſprings, which were before clear, freſh and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with ſulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake laſts. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory, p. 4.

To ACIDULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a ſlight degree.

The muriatic ſcurvy is evidently a diet of freſh unſalted things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient ſubſtances, ſour milk, butter, and acid fruits. Arbuthnot.

To ACKNO'WLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it ſeems, between the Latin and Engliſh, from agnoſco, and knowledge, which is deduced from the Saxon, cnapan, to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or perſon in a particular character.

My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jeſſica,
In place of lord Baſſanio and myſelf. Shakeſpeare.

None that acknowledge God, or providence,
Their ſouls eternity did ever doubt. Sir John Davies.

2. To confeſs; as a fault.

For I acknowledge my tranſgreſſions; and my ſin is ever before me. Pſalm li. 3.

3. To own; as, a benefit; ſometimes with the particle to before the perſon conferring the benefit.

His ſpirit
Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd not. Par. Loſt.

In the firſt place, therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty power the aſſiſtance he has given me in the beginning, and the proſecution of my preſent ſtudies. Dryden.

ACKNO'WLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received.

He has ſhewn his hero acknowledging and ungrateful, compaſſionate and hard hearted; but, at the bottom, fickle and ſelf-intereſted. Dryden's Virgil.

ACKNO'WLEDGMENT. n. ſ. [from acknowledge.]

1. Conceſſion of any character in another, as exiſtence, ſuperiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a neceſſary connexion and chain of cauſes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity; becauſe it carries every thinking man to an original of every ſucceſſive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Conceſſion of the truth of any poſition.

Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the chriſtian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hooker.

3. Confeſſion of a fault.
4. Confeſſion of a benefit received; gratitude.
5. Act of atteſtation to any conceſſion; ſuch as homage.

There may be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never eſtabliſhed, nor any acknowledgment of ſubjection made. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

The ſecond is an acknowledgment to his majeſty for the leave of fiſhing upon his coaſts; and though this may be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our ſide and cuſtom on theirs, not determined or extinguiſhed by any treaty between us, it may with juſtice be inſiſted on. Temple's Miſcellanies.

ACME. n. ſ. [ἄκμη, Gr.]

The height of any thing; more eſpecially uſed to denote the height of a diſtemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. The arche, the beginning or firſt attack. 2. Anabaſis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the declenſion of the diſtemper. Quincy.

ACO'LOTHIST. n. ſ. [ακολυθέω, Gr.] One of the loweſt order in the Romiſh church, whoſe office is to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

In the Romiſh communion it is duty, according to the papal law, when the biſhop ſings maſs, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to ſee that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the acolothiſt, to keep the ſacred veſſels, &c. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'CCLYTE. n. ſ. The ſame with ACOLOTHIST.

A'CONITE. n. ſ. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfs-bane, but commonly uſed in poetical language for poiſon in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nouriſhes the lion's angry ſeed;
Nor pois'nous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is, when known, refus'd. Dryden.

Deſpair, that aconite does prove,
And certain death to others, love,
That poiſon never yet withſtood,
Does nouriſh mine, and turns to blood. Glanville.

A'CORN. n. ſ. [Æcepn, Sax. from ac, an oak, and copn, corn or grain; that is, the grain of the oak.]

The ſeed or fruit born by the oak.

What roots old-age contracteth into errours, and how ſuch as are but acorns in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on ſtrawberries they fed;
Cornels and bramble-berries gave the reſt,
And falling acorns furniſh'd out a feaſt. Dryden's Ovid.

He that is nouriſhed by the acorns he picked up under an oak, or the apples he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himſelf. Locke.

ACO'USTICKS. n. ſ. [Ἀκουστικὰ of ἀκούω, Gr. to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of ſounds.
2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

To ACQUAINT. v. a. [accointer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with; applied either to perſons or things.

We that acquaint ourſelves with ev'ry zone,
And paſs the tropicks, and behold each pole;
When we come home, or to ourſelves unknown,
And unacquainted ſtill with our own ſoul. Davies.

There with thee, new welcome ſaint,
Like fortunes may her ſoul acquaint;
With thee there clad in radiant ſheen. Milton.

Before a man can ſpeak on any ſubject, it is neceſſary to be acquainted with it. Locke on Education.

Acquaint yourſelves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domeſtic and national; things of your own and foreign countries; and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourſelves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own ſpirits. Watts's Logick.

2. To inform.

But for ſome other reaſons, my grave Sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this buſineſs. Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night:

I have lately received a letter from a friend in the country, wherein he acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought down particular words and phraſes, which were never before in thoſe parts. Tatler.

ACQUA'INTANCE. n. ſ. [accointre, Fr.]

1. The ſtate of being acquainted with; familiarity, knowledge. It is applied as well to perſons as things, with the particle with.

Nor was his acquaintance leſs with the famous poets or his age, than with the noblemen and ladies. Dryden.

Our admiration of a famous man leſſens upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we ſeldom hear of a celebrated perſon, without a catalogue of ſome notorious weakneſſes and infirmities. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 256.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God: let us ſtudy to reſemble him. We muſt be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Familiar knowledge, ſimply without a prepoſition.

Brave ſoldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from my tongue,
Should 'ſcape the true acquaintance of mine ear. Shakeſp.

This keeps the underſtanding long in converſe with an object, and long converſe brings acquaintance. South.

In what manner he lived with thoſe who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance, how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them, I forbear particularly to ſay. Atterbury.

3. A ſlight or initial knowledge, ſhort of friendſhip, as applied to perſons.

I hope I am pretty near ſeeing you, and therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance; becauſe if you do not know me when we meet, you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope.

A long noviciate of acquaintance ſhould precede the vows of friendſhip. Bolingbroke.

4. The perſon with whom we are acquainted; him of whom we have ſome knowledge, without the intimacy of friendſhip.

In this ſenſe, the plural is, in ſome authours, acquaintance, in others acquaintances.

But ſhe, all vow'd unto the red-croſs knight,
His wand'ring peril cloſely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dead heart with anguiſh did torment. F. Queen:

That young men travel under ſome tutor, I allow well, ſo that he be ſuch a one that may be able to tell them, what acquaintances they are to ſeek, what exerciſes or diſcipline the place yieldeth. Bacon.

This, my lord, has juſtly acquired you as many friends, as there are perſons who have the honour to be known to you; meer acquaintance you have none, you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have converſed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

We ſee he is aſhamed of his neareſt acquaintances. Boyle againſt Bentley.

ACQUA'INTED. [from acquaint.] Familiar, well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament;
That war or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

ACQU'EST. n. ſ. [acqueſt, Fr. from acquérir, written by ſome acquiſt, with a view to the word acquire, or acquiſita.] Attachment, acquiſition; the thing gained.

New acqueſts are more burden than ſtrength. Bacon.

Mud, repoſed near the oſtia of thoſe rivers, makes continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the ſea, and preſerving theſe ſhells as trophies and ſigns of its new acqueſts and encroachments. Woodward.

To ACQUIE'SCE. v. n. [acquieſcer, Fr. acquieſcere, Lat.] To reſt in, or remain ſatisfied with, without oppoſition or diſcontent.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wiſhing, nor unactive complacency in; nor, laſtly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can paſs before God for a man's willing of ſuch things; and, conſequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquieſce in an airy ungrounded perſuaſion, that they will thoſe things which really they not will, they fall thereby into a groſs and fatal deluſion. South.

He hath employed his tranſcendent wiſdom and power, that by theſe he might make way for his benignity, as the end wherein they ultimately acquieſce. Grew.

ACQUIE'SCENCE. n. ſ. [from acquieſce.]

1. A ſilent appearance of content, diſtinguiſhed on one ſide from avowed conſent, on the other from oppoſition.

Neither from any of the nobility, nor of the clergy, who were thought moſt averſe from it, there appeared any ſign of contradiction to that; but an entire acquieſcence in all the biſhops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

2. Satisfaction, reſt, content.

Many indeed have given over their purſuits after fame, either from diſappointment, or from experience of the little pleaſure which attends it, or the better informations or natural coldneſs of old-age; but ſeldom from a full ſatisfaction and acquieſcence in their preſent enjoyments of it. Addiſon.

3. Submiſſion.

The greateſt part of the world take up their perſuaſions concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquieſcence in the word of thoſe, who ſhall repreſent things to them under theſe characters. South.

ACQUI'RABLE. adj. [from acquire.] That which may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Thoſe rational inſtincts, the connate principles engraven in the human ſoul, though they are truths acquirable and deducible by rational conſequence and argumentation, yet they ſeem to be inſcribed in the very craſis and texture of the ſoul, antecedent to any acquiſition by induſtry or the exerciſe of the diſcurſive faculty in man. Hale.

If the powers of cogitation and volition, and ſenſation, are neither inherent in matter as ſuch, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it neceſſarily follows, that they proceed from ſome cogitative ſubſtance, ſome incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call ſpirit and ſoul. Bentley.

To ACQU'IRE. v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquiro, Lat.] To gain by one's own labour or power; to obtain what is not received from nature, or tranſmitted by inheritance.

I've done enough. A lower place not well,
May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius,
Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, while he, we ſerve, 's away.
Shakeſpeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

ACQU'IRED. particip. adj. [from acquire. Gained by one's ſelf, in oppoſition to thoſe things which are beſtowed by nature.

We are ſeldom at eaſe, and free enough from the ſolicitation of our natural or adopted deſires; but a conſtant ſucceſſion of uneaſineſſes, out of that ſtock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

An ACQUI'RER. n. ſ. [from acquire.] The perſon that acquires; a gainer.

An ACQUI'REMENT. n. ſ. [from acquire.] That which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly uſed in oppoſition to the gifts of nature.

Theſe his acquirements, by induſtry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged by many excellent endowments of nature. Hayward on Edward VI.

By a content and acquieſcence in every ſpecies of truth, we embrace embrace the ſhadow thereof: or ſo much as may palliate its juſt and ſubſtantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of ſuch a taſte as that I am here ſpeaking of. The faculty muſt, in ſome degree, be born with us. Addiſon.

ACQUISI'TION. n. ſ. [acquiſitio, Lat.]

1. The act of acquiring or gaining.

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compaſs the poſſeſſion of theſe things, is by his own induſtrious acquiſition of them. South.

2. The thing gained; acquirement.

Great Sir, all acquiſition
Of glory as of empire, here I lay before
Your royal feet. Denham's Sophy.

A ſtate can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable criſis, than when ſome prince lies hovering like a vulture to diſmember its dying carcaſe; by which means it becomes only an acquiſition to ſome mighty monarchy, without hopes of a reſurrection. Spectator.

ACQU'ISITIVE. adj. [acquiſitivus, Lat.] That which is acquired or gained.

He died not in his acquiſitive but in his native ſoil; nature herſelf, as it were, claiming a final intereſt in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

ACQU'IST. n. ſ. [See ACQUEST.] Acquirement; attainment; gain.

His ſervant he with new acquiſt
Of true experience from this great event,
With peace and conſolation hath diſmiſt. Milton.

To ACQUI'T. v. a. [acquiter, Fr. See QUIT.]

1. To ſet free.

Ne do I wiſh (for wiſhing were but vain)
To be acquit from my continual ſmart;
But joy her thrall for ever to remain,
And yield for pledge my poor captived heart. Spenſer.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to abſolve; oppoſed to condemn, either ſimply with an accuſative, as, the jury acquitted him, or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime.

If I ſin, then thou markeſt me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job, x. 14.

By the ſuffrage of the moſt and beſt he is already acquitted, and, by the ſentence of ſome, condemned. Dryden's Conqueſt of Granada, Dedic.

He that judges, without informing himſelf to the utmoſt that he is capable, cannot acquit himſelf of judging amiſs. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majeſty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter. Swift.

3. To clear from any obligation.

Steady to my principles, and not diſpirited with my afflictions, I have, by the bleſſing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in ſome meaſure, acquitted myſelf of the debt which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a ſimilar ſenſe, it is ſaid, The man hath acquitted himſelf well; that is, he diſcharged his duty.

ACQU'ITMENT. n. ſ. [from acquit.] The ſtate of being acquitted; or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquitment or diſcharge of a man upon ſome precedent accuſation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cauſe had thereupon. South.

ACQU'ITTAL. n. ſ. in law, is a deliverance and ſetting free from the ſuſpicion or guiltineſs of an offence. Cowell.

The conſtant deſign of both theſe orators, was to drive ſome one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accuſed perſon, a perſuaſive to war, and the like. Swift.

To ACQU'ITTANCE. v. n. To procure an acquittance; to acquit; a word not in preſent uſe.

But if black ſcandal and foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the ſequel of your impoſition,
Your meer enforcement ſhall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and ſtains thereof. Shak. Rich. III.

ACQU'ITTANCE. n. ſ. [from acquit.]

1. The act of diſcharging from a debt.

But ſoon ſhall find
Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end
Juſtice ſhall not return, as beauty, ſcorn'd. Paradiſe Loſt.

2. A writing teſtifying the receipt of a debt.

You can produce acquittances
For ſuch a ſum, from ſpecial officers
Of Charles his father. Shakeſp. Love's Labour Loſt.

They quickly pay their debt, and then
Take no acquittances, but pay again. Donne.

They had got a worſe trick than that; the ſame man bought and ſold to himſelf, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Arbuthnot.

A'CRE. n. ſ. [Æcpe, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thouſand eight hundred and forty ſquare yards. Dict.

Search ev'ry acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. Shakeſpeare's K. Lear.

A'CRID. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taſte; bitter, ſo as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taſte.

Bitter and acrid differ only by the ſharp particles of the firſt, being involved in a greater quantity of oil than thoſe of the laſt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ACRIMO'NIOUS. adj. Abounding with acrimony; ſharp; corroſive.

If gall cannot be rendered acrimonious, and bitter of itſelf, then whatever acrimony or amaritude redounds in it, muſt be from the admixture of melancholy. Harvey on Conſumptions.

ACRIMONY. n. ſ. [acrimonia, Lat.]

1. Sharpneſs; corroſiveneſs.

There be plants that have a milk in them when they are cut; as, figs, old lettuce, ſow-thiſtles, ſpurge, &c. The cauſe may be an inception of putrefaction; for thoſe milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they ſhould be lenitive. Bacon.

The chymiſts define ſalt, from ſome of its properties, to be a body fuſible in the fire, congeable again by cold into brittle glebes or cryſtals, ſoluble in water, ſo as to diſappear, not malleable, and having ſomething in it which affects the organs of taſte with a ſenſation of acrimony or ſharpneſs. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Sharpneſs of temper, ſeverity, bitterneſs of thought or language.

This made John the Baptiſt ſet himſelf, with ſo much acrimony and indignation, to baffle this ſenſeleſs arrogant conceit of theirs, which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

A'CRITUDE. n. ſ. [from acrid.] An acrid taſte; a biting heat on the palate.

Green vitriol, mixed with ſome rays of a pale blue, from the ſame place; with its aſtringent and ſweetiſh taſtes, is joined ſome acritude. Grew's Muſæum.

ACROAMA'TICAL. adj. [ἀκροάομαι, Gr. I hear.] Of or pertaining to deep learning; the oppoſite of exoterical.

ACROA'TICKS. n. ſ. [Ἀκροατικὰ, Gr.] Ariſtotle's lectures on the more nice and principal parts of philoſophy, to whom none but friends and ſcholars were admitted by him.

ACRONYCAL. adj. [from ἄκρος, ſummus, and νὺξ, nox; importing the beginning of night.] A term of aſtronomy, applied to the ſtars, of which the riſing or ſetting is called acronical, when they either appear above or ſink below the horizon at the time of ſunſet. It is oppoſed to coſmical.

ACRO'NYCALLY. adv. [from acronical.] At the acronycal time.

He is tempeſtuous in the ſummer, when he riſes heliacally, and rainy in the winter, when he riſes acronycally. Dryden's Æneid.

A'CROSPIRE. n. ſ. [from ἄκρος and σπεῖρα, Gr.] A ſhoot or ſprout from the end of ſeeds before they are put in the ground.

Many corns will ſmilt, or have their pulp turned into a ſubſtance like thick cream; and moſt of thoſe which come without extraordinary pains, will ſend forth their ſubſtance in an acroſpire. Mortimer.

A'CROSPIRED. part. adj. Having ſprouts, or having ſhot out.

For want of turning, when the malt is ſpread on the floor, it comes and ſprouts at both ends, which is called acroſpired, and is fit only for ſwine. Mortimer.

ACRO'SS. adv. [from a for at, or the French à, as it is uſed in à travers, and croſs.] Athwart, laid over ſomething ſo as to croſs it.

The harp hath the concave not along the ſtrings, but acroſs the ſtrings; and no harp hath the ſound ſo melting and prolonged as the Iriſh harp. Bacon.

This view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms acroſs,
He ſtood, reflecting on his country's loſs. Dryden.

There is a ſet of artiſans, who, by the help of ſeveral poles, which they lay acroſs each others ſhoulders, build themſelves up into a kind of pyramid; ſo that you ſee a pile of men in the air of four or five rows riſing one above another. Addiſon.

An ACRO'STICK. n. ſ. [from ἄκρος and στίχος, Gr.] A poem in which the firſt letter of every line being taken, makes up the name of the perſon or thing on which the poem is written.

ACRO'STICK. adj.

1. That which relates to an acroſtick.

2. That which contains acroſticks.

Leave writing plays, and chooſe for thy command
Some peaceful province in acroſtick land:
There thou may'ſt wings diſplay, and altars raiſe,
And torture one poor word ten thouſand ways. Dryden.

ACROTERS, or ACROTERIA, n. ſ. [In architecture; from ἄκρον, Gr. the extremity of any body.] Little pedeſtals without baſes, placed at the middle and the two extremes of pediments, ſometimes ſerving to ſupport ſtatues.

To ACT. v. a. [ago, actum, Lat.]

1. To be in action, not to reſt.

He hangs between in doubt to act or reſt. Pope.

2. To perform the proper functions.

Albeit the will is not capable of being compelled to any of its actings, yet it is capable of being made to act with more or leſs difficulty, according to the different impreſſions it receives from motives or objects. South.

3. To practiſe the arts or duties of life; to conduct one's ſelf.

'Tis plain, that ſhe who, for a kingdom now,
Would ſacrifice her love, and break her vow,
Not out of love, but intereſt, acts alone,
And would, ev'n in my arms, lie thinking of a throne.
Dryden's Conqueſt of Granada.

The deſire of happineſs, and the conſtraint it puts upon us to act for it, no body accounts an abridgment of liberty. Locke.

The ſplendor of his office, is the token of that ſacred character which he inwardly bears: and one of theſe ought conſtantly to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to act up to it, through the whole courſe of his adminiſtration.
Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty to co-operate with this grace, vigorouſly to exert thoſe powers, and act up to thoſe advantages to which it reſtores us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. Rogers's Sermons.

4. To bear a borrowed character, as, a ſtage-player.

Honour and ſhame from no condition riſe;
Act well your part, there all the honour lies.
Pope's Eſſay on Man.

5. To counterfeit; to feign by action.

His former trembling once again renew'd,
With acted fear the villain thus purſu'd. Dryd. Æneid.

6. To produce effects in ſome paſſive ſubject.

Hence 'tis we wait the wond'rous cauſe to find
How body acts upon impaſſive mind. Garth's Diſpenſary.

The ſtomach, the inteſtines, the muſcles of the lower belly, all act upon the aliment; beſides, the chyle is not ſucked, but ſqueezed into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the guts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. To actuate; to put in motion; to regulate the movements.

Moſt people in the world are acted by levity and humour, by ſtrange and irrational changes. South.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as falſe as Judas, and, in the whole courſe of their converſation, act, and are acted, not by devotion, but deſign. South.

We ſuppoſe two diſtinct incommunicable conſciouſneſſes acting the ſame body, the one conſtantly by day, the other by night; and, on the other ſide, the ſame conſciouſneſs acting by intervals two diſtinct bodies. Locke.

ACT. n. ſ. [actum, Lat.]

1. Something done; a deed; an exploit, whether good or ill.

I've done enough. A lower place, not well,
May make too great an act: for learn this, Silius,
Better to leave undone than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when he, we ſerve, 's away.
Shakeſpeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

The conſcious wretch muſt all his acts reveal;
Loth to confeſs, unable to conceal;
From the firſt moment of his vital breath,
To his laſt hour of unrepenting death. Dryd. Æneid.

2. Agency; the power of producing an effect.

I will try the forces
Of theſe thy compounds on ſuch creatures as
We count not worth the hanging; but none human;
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their act; and by them gather
Their ſeveral virtues and effects. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

3. Action; the performance of exploits; production of effects.

'Tis ſo much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many, as the ſun is always carrying his light to ſome part or other of the world.
Dryden's Fables.

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame,
His will and act, his word and work the ſame. Prior.

4. The doing of ſome particular thing; a ſtep taken; a meaſure executed.

This act perſuades me,
That this remotion of the duke and her,
Is practice only. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

5. A ſtate of action.

The ſeeds of herbs and plants at the firſt are not in act, but in poſſibility that which they afterwards grow to be. Hooker.

God alone excepted, who actually and everlaſtingly is whatſoever he may be, and which cannot hereafter be that which now he is not; all other things beſides are ſomewhat in poſſibility, which as yet they are not in act. Hooker.

Sure they're conſcious
Of ſome intended miſchief, and are fled
To put it into act. Denham's Sophy.

Her legs were buſkin'd, and the left before;
In act to ſhoot, a ſilver bow ſhe bore. Dryd. Fables.

6. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt but the whole condition required by Chriſt, the repentance he came to preach, will, in that laſt ſcene of their laſt act, immediately before the exit, be as opportunely and acceptably performed, as at any other point of their lives. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Five acts are the juſt meaſure of a play. Roſcommon.

7. A decree of a court of juſtice, or edict of a legiſlature.

They make edicts for uſury to ſupport uſurers, repeal daily any wholeſome act eſtabliſhed againſt the rich, and provide more piercing ſtatutes daily to chain up and reſtrain the poor.
Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

You that are king, though he do wear the crown,
Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,
To blot out me. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

8. Record of judicial proceedings.

Judicial acts are all thoſe matters, which relate to judicial proceedings; and being reduced into writing by a publick notary, are recorded by the authority of the judge.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'CTION, n. ſ. [action, Fr. actio, Lat.]

1. The quality or ſtate of acting, oppoſite to reſt.

O noble Engliſh, that could entertain
With half their forces the full power of France;
And let another half ſtand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakeſp. Henry V.

2. An act or thing done; a deed.

This action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

God never accepts a good inclination inſtead of a good action, where that action may be done; nay, ſo much the contrary, that, if a good inclination be not ſeconded by a good action, the want of that action is made ſo much the more criminal and inexcuſable. South's Sermons.

3. Agency, operation.

It is better therefore, that the earth ſhould move about its own center, and make thoſe uſeful viciſſitudes of night and day, than expoſe always the ſame ſide to the action of the ſun.
Bentley's Sermons.

He has ſettled laws, and laid down rules, conformable to which natural bodies are governed in their actions upon one another. Cheyne's Philoſophical Principles.

4. The ſeries of events repreſented in a fable.

This action ſhould have three qualifications. Firſt, it ſhould be but one action; ſecondly, it ſhould be an entire action; and, thirdly, it ſhould be a great action. Addiſon.

5. Geſticulation; the accordance of the motions of the body with the words ſpoken; a part of oratory.

—He that ſpeaks doth gripe the hearer's wriſt,
While he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shakeſp. King John.

Our oratours are obſerved to make uſe of leſs geſture or action than thoſe of other countries. Addiſon.

6. [In law.] It is uſed with the prepoſition againſt before the perſon, and for before the thing.

Actions are perſonal, real, and mixt: action perſonal belongs to a man againſt another, by reaſon of any contract, offence, or cauſe, of like force with a contract or offence made or done by him or ſome other, for whoſe fact he is to anſwer. Action real is given to any man againſt another, that poſſeſſes the thing required or ſued for in his own name, and no other man's. Action mixt is that which lies as well againſt or for the thing which we ſeek, as againſt the perſon that hath it; called mixt, becauſe it hath a mixt reſpect both to the thing and to the perſon.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt. Action civil is that which tends only to the recovery of that which is due to us; as, a ſum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that which aims at ſome penalty or puniſhment in the party ſued, be it corporal or pecuniary: as, in common law, the next friends of a man felonioufly ſlain ſhall purſue the law againſt the murderer. Action mixt is that which ſeeks both the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty alſo for the unjuſt detaining of the ſame.

Action upon the caſe, is an action given for redreſs of wrongs done without force againſt any man, by law not ſpecially provided for.

Action upon the ſtatute, is an action brought againſt a man upon breach of a ſtatute. Cowell.

There was never man could have a juſter action againſt filthy fortune than I, ſince all other things being granted me, her blindneſs is the only lett. Sidney.

For our reward then,
Firſt, all our debts are paid; dangers of law,
Actions, decrees, judgments, againſt us quitted.
Ben. Johnſon's Catiline.

7. In the plural, in France, the ſame as ſtocks in England.

A'CTIONABLE. adj. [from action.] That which admits an action in law to be brought againſt it; puniſhable.

After he had been thus, as a man would think, quite extinguiſhed, his proceſs was formed; whereby he was found guilty of nought elſe, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

A'CTIONARY, or A'CTIONIST. n. ſ. [from action.] One that has a ſhare in actions or ſtocks.

A'CTION-TAKING. adj. Accuſtomed to reſent by means of law; litigious.

A knave, a raſcal, an eater of broken meats, a filthy worſted-ſtocking knave; a lily-liver'd action-taking knave.
Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

ACTITA'TION. n. ſ. [from actito, Lat.] Action quick and frequent. Dict.

To A'CTIVATE. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps used only by the author alleged.

As snow and ice, especially being holpen, and their cold activated by nitre or salt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours: so it may be, it will turn wood or stiff clay into stone, in longer time. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A'CTIVE. adj. [activus, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or quality of acting.

These particles have not only a vis inertiæ, accompanied with such passive laws of motion, as naturally result from that force, but also they are moved by certain active principles, such as is that of gravity, and that which causes fermentation, and the cohesion of bodies. Newton's Opticks.

2. That which acts, opposed to passive, or that which suffers.

—When an even flame two hearts did touch,
His office was indulgently to fit
Active to passives, correspondency
Only his subject was. Donne.

If you think that by multiplying the additaments in the same proportion, that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the passive will add more resistance than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon's Physical Remains.

3. Busy, engaged in action; opposed to idle or sedentary, or any state of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers.

'Tis virtuous action that must praise bring forth,
Without which, slow advice is little worth;
Yet they who give good counsel, praise deserve,
Though in the active part they cannot serve. Denham.

4. Practical; not merely theoretical.

The world hath had in these men fresh experience, how dangerous such active errors are. Hooker, Preface.

5. Nimble; agile; quick.

Some bend the stubborn bow for victory;
And some with darts their active sinews try. Dryd. Æn.

6. In grammar.

A verb active is that which signifies action, as does, I teach. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

A'CTIVELY. adv. [from active] In an active manner; busily; nimbly. In an active signification; as the word is used actively.

A'CTIVENESS. n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickness; nimbleness. This is a word more rarely used than activity.

What strange agility and activeness do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exercise? Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

ACTI'VITY. n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active, applied either to things or persons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increaseth the activity of cold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Our adversary will not be idle, though we are; he watches every turn of our soul, and incident of our life; and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'CTOR. n. f. [actor, Lat.]

1. He that acts, or performs any thing.

The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon.

He, who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himself but a transcript of Nero in his mind, and would, no doubt, gladly enough see such pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himself. South's Sermons.

2. He that personates a character; a stage-player.

Would you have
Such an Herculean actor in the scene,
And not this hydra? They must sweat no less
To fit their properties, than t'express their parts. Ben Johnson's Catiline.

When a good actor doth his part present,
In every act he our attention draws,
That at the last he may find just applause. Denham.

These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rain-bow; when the actor ceases to shine upon them, when he gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryd. Spanish Friar.

A'CTRESS. n. f. [actrice, Fr.]

1. She that performs any thing.

Virgil has, indeed, admitted Fame as an actress in the Æneid; but the part she acts is very short, and none of the most admired circumstances of that divine work. Addis. Spect.

2. A woman that plays on the stage.

We sprights have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures;
And therefore I that was an actress here,
Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

A'CTUAL. adj. [actuel, Fr.]

1. That which comprises action.

In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Really in act; not merely potential.

Sin, there in pow'r before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milt. Paradise Lost.

3. In act; not purely in speculation.

For he that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault:
Then what must he expect, that still proceeds
To finish sin, and work up thoughts to deeds? Dryden's Juvenal.

ACTUA'LITY. n. f. [from actual.] The state of being actual.

The actuality of these spiritual qualities is thus imprisoned, though their potentiality be not quite destroyed; and thus a crass, extended, impenetrable, passive, divisible, unintelligent substance is generated, which we call matter. Cheyne.

A'CTUALLY. adv. [from actual.] In act; in effect; really.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the chronicles written by an author of this frame of mind, and you will think you were reading a history of the kings of Israel or Judah, where the historians were actually inspired, and where, by a particular scheme of providence, the kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison.

Though our temporal prospects should be full of danger, or though the days of sorrow should actually overtake us, yet still we must repose ourselves on God. Rogers.

A'CTUALNESS. n. f. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'CTUARY. n. f. [actuarius, Lat.] The register who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court; a term of the civil law.

Suppose the judge should say, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the custody of them with himself: certainly, in this case, the actuary or writer of them ought to be preferred. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'CTUATE. adj. [from the verb To actuate.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.

To A'CTUATE. v. a. [from ago, actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate or encrease the powers of motion.

The light made by this animal depends upon a living spirit, and seems, by some vital irradiation, to be actuated into this lustre. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the subduing of every reigning sin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greatest abilities are most fired with ambition; and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the least actuated by it. Addison.

Our passions are the springs which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers.

ACTUO'SE. adj. [from act.] That which hath strong powers of action; a word little used.

To A'CUATE. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To sharpen, to invigorate with any powers of sharpness.

AC'ULEATE. adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That which has a point or sting; prickly; that which terminates in a sharp point.

ACU'MEN. n. f. [Lat.] A sharp point; figuratively, quickness of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Aristarchus in common conversation, to signify genius or natural acumen. Pope's Dunciad.

ACU'MINATED. particip. adj. Ending in a point; sharp-pointed.

This is not acuminated and pointed, as in the rest, but seemeth, as it were, cut off. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I appropriate this word, Noli me tangere, to a small round acuminated tubercle, which hath not much pain, unless it be touched or rubbed, or otherways exasperated by topicks. Wiseman's Surgery.

ACU'TE. adj. [acutus, Lat.]

1. Sharp, ending in a point; opposed to obtuse or blunt.

Having the ideas of an obtuse and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal bases and between parallels, I can, by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other, but cannot that way know whether they be equal. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense applied to men; ingenious; penetrating; opposed to dull or stupid.

The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts, and uncommon reflections, has started the notion of seeing all things in God. Locke.

3. Spoken of the senses, vigorous; powerful in operation.

Were our senses altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us. Locke.

4. Acute disease. Any disease, which is attended with an increased velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days. Quincy.

5. Acute accent; that which raises or sharpens the voice.

ACU'TELY. adv. [from acute.] After an acute manner; sharply; it is used as well in the figurative as primitive sense.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there, perhaps, as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism. Locke.

ACU'TENESS. n. s. [from acute, which see.]

1. Sharpness.
2. Force of intellects.

They would not be so apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteness and penetration of their understandings. Locke.

3. Quickness and vigour of senses.

If eyes so framed could not view at once the hour plate, their owner could not be benefited by that acuteness; which, whilst it discovered the secret contrivance of the machine, made him lose its use. Locke.

4. Violence and speedy crisis of a malady.

We apply present remedies according to indications, respecting rather the acuteness of the disease, and precipitancy of the occasion, than the rising and setting of stars. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

5. Sharpness of sound.

The acuteness of sound will shew, that whilst, to the eye, the body seems to be at rest, yet the minute parts of it continue in a very brisk motion, without which they could not strike the air. Boyle.

ADA'CTED. participial adj. [adactus, Lat.] Driven by force; a word little used. Dict.

A'DAGE. n. s. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim handed down from antiquity; a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects, that are confident pretenders to certainty; as if, contrary to the adage, science had no friend but ignorance. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

Fine fruits of learning! old ambitious fool,
Dar'st thou apply that adage of the school;
As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd;
And science is not science till reveal'd? Dryd.

ADAGIO n. s. [Italian.] A term used by musicians, to mark a slow time.

ADAMANT n. s. [adamas, Lat. from α and δάμνω, Gr. that is impenetrable, infrangible.]

1. A stone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardness.

So great a fear my name amongst them spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Shakesp.
Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanc'd,
Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant, and gold. Milton.
Eternal Deities,
Who rule the world with absolute decrees,
And write whatever time shall bring to pass,
With pens of adamant, on plates of brass. Dryd.

2. The diamond.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadstone.

Let him change his lodging from one end and part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon's Essays.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant!
But yet you draw not iron; for my heart
Is true as steel. Shakespeare.

ADAMANTE'AN. adj. [from adamant.] Hard as adamant.

He ran on embattl'd armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
Adamantean proof. Milton's Samson Agonistes.

This word occurs perhaps only in this passage.

ADAMA'NTINE. adj. [adamantinus, Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high
With adamantine columns, threats the sky. Dryd.

2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardness, indissolubility.

Could Eve's weak hand, extended to the tree,
In sunder rend that adamantine chain,
Whose golden links, effects and causes be,
And which to God's own chair doth fix'd remain? Davies.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fixed and fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity; if the Almighty had not spoken and said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after its kind; and it was so. Bentley's Sermons.

In adamantine chains shall death be bound,
And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound. Pope.
Tho' adamantine bonds the chief restrain,
The dire restraint his wisdom will defeat,
And soon restore him to his regal seat. Pope.

A'DAM'S-APPLE. n. s. [in anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

To ADA'PT. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to suit; in proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known,
My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight. Swift.

It is not enough that nothings offends the ear, but a good poet will adapt the very sounds, as well as words, to the things he treats of. Pope's Letters.

ADAPTA'TION. n. s. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another; the fitness of one thing to another.

Some species there be of middle natures, that is, of bird and beast, as batts; yet are their parts so set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either, there being a commixtion of both, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Their adhesion may be in part ascribed, either to some elastical motion in the pressed glass, or to the exquisite adaptation of the almost numberless, though very small, asperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the surfaces do lock in with one another, or are, as it were, clasped together. Boyle.

ADA'PTION. n. s. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a sufficient work to shew all the necessities, the wise contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of these admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole. Cheyne.

To ADCO'RPORATE. v. a. [from ad and corpus.] To unite one body with another; more usually wrote accorporate; which see.

To ADD. v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join something to that which was before.

Mark if his birth makes any difference,
If to his words it adds one grain of sense. Dryd.
They, whose muses have the highest flown,
Add not to his immortal memory,
But do an act of friendship to their own. Dryd.

2. To perform the mental operation of adding one number or conception to another.

Whatsoever positive ideas a man has in his mind, of any quantity, he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as easily as he can add together the ideas of two days, or two years. Locke.

A'DDABLE. adj. [from add.] That which may be added. Addible is more proper.

The first number in every addition is called the addable number, the other, the number or numbers added, and the number invented by the addition, the aggregate or sum. Cocker's Arithmetick.

To ADDE'CIMATE. v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or ascertain tithes. Dict.

To ADDE'EM. v. a. [from deem.] To esteem; to account. This word is now out of use.

She scorns to be addeem'd so worthless-base,
As to be mov'd to such an infamy. Daniel's Civil Wars.

A'DDER. n. s. [Ættep, Ættop, Nadpe, as it seems from eitten, Sax. poison] A serpent, a viper, a poisonous reptile; perhaps of any species. In common language, adders and snakes are not the same.

Or is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye. Shakesp.
An adder did it; for, with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.
Shakespeare's Midsum. Night's Dream.

The adder teaches us where to strike, by her curious and fearful defending of her head. Taylor of Living holy.

A'DDER'S-GRASS. n. s. The name of a plant, imagined by Skinner to be so named, because serpents lurk about it.

A'DDER'S-TONGUE. n. s. [ophioglossum, Lat.] The name of an herb.

It hath no visible flower; but the seeds are produced on a spike, which resembles a serpent's tongue; which seed is contained in many longitudinal cells, which open, and cast forth the seeds when ripe. It grows wild in moist meadows, and is used in medicine. Miller.

The most common simples with us in England, are comfrey, bugle, agrimony, sanicle, paul's-betony, fluellin, periwinkle, adder's-tongue. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'DDER'S-WORT. n. s. An herb so named, on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

A'DDIBLE. adj. [from add.] Possible to be added. See ADDABLE.

The clearest idea it can get of infinity, is the confused, incomprehensible remainder of endless, addible numbers, which affords no prospect of stop, or boundary. Locke.

ADDIBI'LITY. n. s. [from addible.] The possibility of being added.

This endless addition, or addibility (if any one like the word better) of numbers, so apparent to the mind, is that which gives us the clearest and most distinct idea of infinity. Locke.

A'DDICE. n. s. [for which we corruptly speak and write adz, from abeje, Sax. an axe.]

The addice hath its blade made thin and somewhat arching.

A D D

As the axe hath its edge parallel to its handle, so the addice hath its edge athwart the handle, and is ground to a bafil on its inside to its outer edge. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

To ADDICT. v. a. [addico, Lat.]

1. To devote, to dedicate, in a good sense; which is rarely used.

Ye know the house of Stephanus, that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints. 1 Cor. xvi. 15.

2. It is commonly taken in a bad sense; as, he addicted himself to vice.

A'DDICTEDNESS. n. s. [from addicted.] The quality or state of being addicted.

Those, that know how little I have remitted of my former addictedness to make chymical experiments, will believe, that the design was to give occasion to the more knowing artists to lay aside their reservedness. Boyle.

ADDI'CTION. n. s. [addictio, Lat.]

1. The act of devoting, or giving up.

2. The state of being devoted.

It is a wonder how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports. Shakesp.

An A'DDITAMENT. n. s. [additamentum, Lat.] The addition, or thing added.

Iron will not incorporate with brass, nor other metals, of itself, by simple fire: so as the enquiry must be upon the calcination, and the additament, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In such a palace there is first the case or fabrick, or moles of the structure itself; and, besides that, there are certain additaments that contribute to its ornament and use; as, various furniture, rare fountains and aqueducts, curious motions of divers things appendicated to it. Hal.'s Origin of Mankind.

ADDI'TION. n. s. [from add.]

1. The act of adding one thing to another; opposed to diminution.

The infinite distance between the Creator and the noblest of all creatures, can never be measured, nor exhausted by endless addition of finite degrees. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Additament, or the thing added.

It will not be modestly done, if any of our own wisdom intrude or interpose, or be willing to make additions to what Christ and his Apostles have designed. Hammond's Fundam.

Some such resemblances, methinks, I find
Of our last even'ing's talk, in this thy dream,
But with addition strange! Milton.

The abolishing of villanage, together with the custom permitted, among the nobles, of selling their lands, was a mighty addition to the power of the commons.
Swift on the Dissensions in Athens and Rome.

3. In arithmetick.

Addition is the reduction of two or more numbers of like kind, together into one sum or total. Cocker's Arith.

4. In law. A title given to a man over and above his christian name and surname, shewing his estate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling. Cowell.

Only retain
The name, and all th' addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution of th' last,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet part between you. Shakespeare.

From this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all th' applause and clamour of the host,
Caius Marcius Coriolanus. Bear th' addition nobly ever.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

There arose new disputes upon the persons named by the king, or rather against the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon.

ADDI'TIONAL. adj. [from addition.] That which is added.

Our kalendar being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, without any considerable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap-year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Holder on Time.

The greatest wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in so good an understanding, and celebrated one another with so much generosity, that each of them receives an additional lustre from his cotemporaries. Addison.

They include in them that very kind of evidence, which is supposed to be so powerful; and do, withal, afford us several other additional proofs, of great force and clearness. Atter.

ADDI'TORY. adj. [from add.] That which has the power or quality of adding.

The additory fiction gives to a great man a larger share of reputation than belongs to him, to enable him to serve some good end or purpose. Arbuthnot.

A'DDLE. adj. [from adel, a disease, Sax. according to Skinner and Junius; perhaps from ydel, idle, barren, unfruitful.] Originally applied to eggs, and signifying such as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen; thence transferred to brains that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle,
That carries eggs too fresh or addle;
And still at random, as he goes,
Among the rabble rout bestows. Hudibras.

After much solitariness, fasting, or long sickness, their brains were addle, and their bellies as empty of meat as their heads of wit. Burton on Melancholy.

Thus far the poet; but his brains grow addle:
And all the rest is purely from this noddle. Dryd.

To A'DDLE. v. a [from addle, adj.] To make addle; to corrupt; to make barren.

This is also evidenced in eggs, whereof the found one sinks, and such as are addled swim; as do also those that are termed hypenemiæ, or wind-eggs. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'DDLE-PATED adj. Having addled brains. See ADDLE.

Poor slaves in metre, dull and addle-pated,
Who rhyme below even David's psalms translated.
Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel.

To ADDRE'SS. v. a [addresser, Fr. from dereçar, Span. from dirigo, directum, Lat.]

1. To prepare one's self to enter upon any action; as, he addressed himself to the work.

It lifted up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as it would speak. Shakesp.

With him the Palmer eke, in habit sad,
Himself addrest to that adventure hard;
So to the river's side they both together far'd. Fairy Q.

Then Turnus, from his chariot leaping light,
Address'd himself on foot to single fight. Dryd.

2. To get ready; to put in a state for immediate use.

By this means they fell directly on head on the English battle; whereupon the earl of Warwick addressed his men to take the flank. Sir J. Hayward.

Duke Frederick hearing, how that every day
Men of great worth resorted to this forest,
Address'd a mighty power, which were on foot,
In his own conduct purposely to take
His brother here. Shakespeare, As you like it.

To-night in Harfleur we will be your guest,
To-morrow for the march we are addrest. Shak.

3. To apply to another by words, with various forms of construction.

4. Sometimes without a preposition.

Are not your orders to address the senate? Addison.

5. Sometimes with to.

Addressing to Pollio, his great patron, and himself no vulgar poet, he no longer could restrain the freedom of his spirit, but began to assert his native character, which is sublimity.
Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Past.

Among the croud, but far above the rest,
Young Turnus to the beauteous maid addrest. Dryd.

6. Sometimes with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he addressed himself to the general.

7. Sometimes with the accusative of the matter of the address, which may be the nominative to the passive.

The young hero had addressed his prayers to him for his assistance. Dryd. Æneid.

The prince himself, with awful dread possess'd,
His vows to great Apollo thus addrest. Dryd.

His suit was common; but, above the rest,
To both the brother-princes thus addrest. Dryd.

8. To address, is to apply to the king in form.

The representatives of the nation in parliament, and the privy-council, address'd the king to have it recalled. Swift.

ADDRE'SS. n. s. [addresse, Fr.]

1. Verbal application to any one, by way of persuasion, petition.

Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half confess'd and half conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might encrease. Prior.

Most of the persons, to whom these addresses are made, are not wise and skilful judges, but are influenced by their own sinful appetites and passions. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. Courtship.

They both behold thee with their sisters eyes,
And often have reveal'd their passion to me:
But, tell me, whose address thou favour'st most;
I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it. Addison.

About three years since, a gentleman, whom, I am sure, you yourself would have approved, made his addresses to me.
Addison. Spectator.

3. Manner of addressing another; as, we say, a man of an happy or a pleasing address; a man of an awkward address.

4. Skill, dexterity.

I could produce innumerable instances from my own memory and observation, of events imputed to the profound skill and address of a minister, which, in reality, were either mere effects of negligence, weakness, humour, passion, or pride, or, at best, but the natural course of things left to themselves.
Swift's Thoughts on the present Posture of Affairs.

5. Manner of directing a letter; a sense chiefly mercantile.

ADDRE'SSER.

ADDRE'SSER. n. ſ. [from addreſs.] The perſon that addreſſes or petitions.

ADDU'CENT. adj. [adducens, Lat.]

A word applied to thoſe muſcles that bring forward, cloſe, or draw together the parts of the body to which they are annexed. Quincy.

To ADDU'LCE. v. a. [adducir, Fr. dulcis, Lat.] To ſweeten; a word not now in uſe.

Thus did the French embaſſadors, with great ſhew of their king's affection, and many ſugared words, ſeek to addulce all matters between the two kings. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADELING. n. ſ. [from æbel, Sax. illuſtrious] A word of honour among the Angles, properly appertaining to the king's children: king Edward the Conteſſor, being without iſſue, and intending to make Edgar his heir, called him adeling. Cowell.

ADENO'GRAPHY. n. ſ. [from ἀδήνου and γράφω, Gr.] A treatiſe of the glands.

ADE'MPTION. n. ſ. [adimo, ademptum, Lat.] Taking away; privation. Dict.

ADE'PT. n. ſ. [from adeptus, Lat. that is adeptus artem.]

He that is completely ſkilled in all the ſecrets of his art. It is, in its original ſignification, appropriated to the chymiſts, but is now extended to other artiſts.

The preſervation of chaſtity is eaſy to true adepts. Pope.

ADE'PT. adj. Skilful; throughly verſed.

If there be really ſuch adept philoſophers as we are told of, I am apt to think, that, among their arcana, they are maſters of extremely potent menſtruums. Boyle.

ADEQUATE. adj. [adequatus, Lat.] Equal to; proportionate; correſpondent to, ſo as to bear an exact reſemblance or proportion. It is uſed generally in a figurative ſenſe, and often with the particle to.

Contingent death ſeems to be the whole adequate object of popular courage; but a neceſſary and unavoidable coffin ſtrikes paleneſs into the ſtouteſt heart. Harvey on Conſumptions.

The arguments were proper, adequate, and ſufficient to compaſs their reſpective ends. South's Sermons.

All our ſimple ideas are adequate; becauſe, being nothing but the effects of certain powers in things, fitted and ordained by God to produce ſuch ſenſations in us, they cannot but be correſpondent and adequate to thoſe powers. Locke.

Thoſe are adequate ideas, which perfectly repreſent their archetypes or objects. Inadequate are but a partial, or incomplete, repreſentation of thoſe archetypes to which they are referred. Watts's Logick.

A'DEQUATELY. adv. [from adequate.]

1. In an adequate manner; with juſtneſs of repreſentation; with exactneſs of proportion.

Gratitude conſiſts adequately in theſe two things: firſt, that it is a debt; and, ſecondly, that it is ſuch a debt as is left to every man's ingenuity, whether he will pay or no. South.

2. It is uſed with the particle to.

Piety is the neceſſary chriſtian virtue, proportioned adequately to the omniſcience and ſpirituality of that infinite Deity. Hammond's Fundamentals.

A'DEQUATENESS. n. ſ. [from adequate.] The ſtate of being adequate; juſtneſs of repreſentation; exactneſs of proportion.

ADESPO'TICK. adj. Not abſolute; not deſpotick. Dict.

2. To ſtick, in a figurative ſenſe; to be conſiſtent; to hold together.

Why every thing adheres together, that no dram of a ſcruple, no ſcruple of a ſcruple, no obſtacle, no incredulous or unſafe circumſtance—— Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

3. To remain firmly fixed to a party, perſon, or opinion.

Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you;
And ſure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. Shakeſp. Ham.

Every man of ſenſe will agree with me, that ſingularity is laudable, when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conſcience, morality, and honour. Boyle.

ADHE'RENCE. n. ſ. [from adhere.] See ADHESION.

1. The quality of adhering, or ſticking; tenacity.

2. In a figurative ſenſe, fixedneſs of mind; attachment; ſteadineſs.

Their firm adherence to their religion is no leſs remarkable than their diſperſion; conſidering it as perſecuted or contemned over the whole earth. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 495.

A conſtant adherence to one ſort of diet may have bad effects on any conſtitution. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Plain good ſenſe, and a firm adherence to the point, have proved more effectual than thoſe arts, which are contemptuouſly called the ſpirit of negociating. Swift.

ADHE'RENCY. n. ſ. [The ſame with adherence.]

1. Steady attachment.

2. That which adheres.

Vices have a native adherency of vexation. Decay of Piety.

ADHE'RENT. adj. [from adhere.]

1. Sticking to.

Cloſe to the cliff with both his hands he clung,
And ſtuck adherent, and ſuſpended hung. Pope's Odyſſey.

2. United with.

Modes are ſaid to be inherent or adherent; that is, proper or improper. Adherent or improper modes ariſe from the joining of ſom accidental ſubſtance to the chief ſubject, which yet may be ſeparated from it; ſo when a bowl is wet, or a boy is cloathed, theſe are adherent modes; for the water and the clothes are diſtinct ſubſtances which adhere to the bowl, or to the boy. Watts's Logick.

ADHE'RENT. n. ſ. [from adhere.] The perſon that adheres; one that ſupports the cauſe, or follows the fortune of another; a follower; a partiſan;

Princes muſt give protection to their ſubjects and adherents, when worthy occaſion ſhall require it. Sir W. Raleigh.

A new war muſt be undertaken upon the advice of thoſe, who, with their partiſans and adherents, were to be the ſole gainers by it. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ADHE'RER. n. ſ. [from adhere.] He that adheres.

He ought to be indulgent to tender conſciences; but, at the ſame time, a firm adherer to the eſtabliſhed church. Swift.

ADHE'SION. n. ſ. [adheſio, Lat.]

1. The act or ſtate of ſticking to ſomething. Adheſion is generally uſed in the natural, and adherence in the metaphorical ſenſe; as, the adheſion of iron to the magnet; and adherence of a client to his patron.

Why therefore may not the minute parts of other bodies, if they be conveniently ſhaped for adheſion, ſtick to one another, as well as ſtick to this ſpirit? Boyle.

The reſt conſiſting wholly in the ſenſible configuration, as ſmooth and rough; or elſe more, or leſs, firm adheſion of the parts, as hard and ſoft, tough and brittle, are obvious. Locke.

Prove that all things, on occaſion,
Love union, and deſire adheſion. Prior.

2. It is ſometimes taken, like adherence, figuratively, for firmneſs in an opinion, or ſteadineſs in practice.

The ſame want of ſincerity, the ſame adheſion to vice, and averſion from goodneſs, will be equally a reaſon for their rejecting any proof whatſoever. Atterbury's Sermons.

ADHE'SIVE. adj. [from adheſion] Sticking; tenacious; with to.

If ſlow, yet ſure, adheſive to the tract,
Hot ſteaming up. Thomſon's Autumn, l. 440.

To ADHI'BIT. v. a. [adhibeo, Lat.] To apply; to make uſe of.

ADHIBI'TION. n. ſ. [from adhibit.] Application; uſe. Dict.

ADJA'CENCY, n. ſ. [from adjaceo, Lat.]

1. The ſtate of lying cloſe to another thing.

2. That which is adjacent. See ADJACENT.

Becauſe the Cape hath ſea on both ſides near it, and other lands, remote as it were, equidiſtant from it; therefore, at that point, the needle is not diſtracted by the vicinity of adjacencies. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

ADJA'CENT. adj. [adjacens, Lat.] Lying cloſe; bordering upon ſomething.

It may corrupt within itſelf, although no part of it iſſue into the body adjacent. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory, N° 771.

Uniform pellucid mediums, ſuch as water, have no ſenſible reflection but in their external ſuperficies, where they are adjacent to other mediums of a different denſity. Newton's Opt.

ADJA'CENT. n. ſ. That which lies next another.

The ſenſe of the author goes viſibly in its own train, and the words receiving a determined ſenſe from their companions and adjacents, will not conſent to give countenance and colour to what muſt be ſupported at any rate. Locke's Eſſ. upon S. Paul.

ADIA'PHOROUS. adj. [ἀδιάφορος, Gr.] Neutral; particularly uſed of ſome ſpirits and ſalts, which are neither of an acid nor alkaline nature. Quincy.

Our adiaphorous ſpirit may be obtained, by diſtilling the liquor that is afforded by woods and divers other bodies. Boyle.

ADIA'PHORY. n. ſ. [ἀδιαφορία, Gr.] Neutrality; indifference.

To ADJECT. v. a. [adjicio, adjectum, Lat.] To add to; to put to another thing

ADJE'CTION. n. ſ. [adjectio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjecting, or adding.

2. The thing adjected, or added.

That unto every pound of ſulphur, an adjection of one ounce of quickſilver; or unto every pound of petre, one ounce of ſal-armoniac, will much intend the force, and conſequently the report, I find no verity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

ADJECTI'TIOUS. adj. [from adjection.] Added; thrown in upon the reſt.

A'DJECTIVE. n. ſ. [adjectivum, Lat.]

A word added to a noun, to ſignify the addition or ſeparation of ſome quality, circumſtance, or manner of being; as, good, bad, are adjectives, becauſe, in ſpeech, they are applied to nouns, to modify their ſignification, or intimate the manner of exiſtence in the things ſignified thereby. Clarke's Latin Gram.

All the verſification of Claudian is included within the compaſs of four or five lines; perpetually cloſing his ſenſe at the end of a verſe, and that verſe commonly which they call golden, or two ſubſtantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them, to keep the peace. Dryden.

A D J

A'DJECTIVELY. adv. [from adjective.] After the manner of an adjective; a term of grammar.

ADIEU'. adv. [from à Dieu, used elliptically for à Dieu je vous commende, used at the departure of friends.] The form of parting, originally importing a commendation to the Divine care, but now used, in a popular sense, sometimes to things inanimate; farewell.

Ne gave him leave to bid that aged sire
Adieu, but nimbly ran her wonted course. Fairy Queen.

Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble lords; you restrained yourself within the list of too cold an adieu; be more expressive to them. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

While now I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear;
Lest yet my half-clos'd eye may view
On earth an object worth its care. Prior.

To ADJO'IN. v. a [adjoindre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.] To join to; to unite to; to put to.

Corrections or improvements should be as remarks adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places, and superadded to a regular treatise. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

To ADJO'IN. v. n. To be contiguous to; to lye next so as to have nothing between.

Th' adjoining fane, th' assembled Greeks express'd,
And hunting of the Caledonian beast. Dryden's Fables.

In learning any thing, as little should be proposed to the mind at once as is possible; and, that being understood and fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining, yet unknown, simple, unperplexed proposition, belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally designed. Locke.

To ADJO'URN. v. a. [adjourner, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, naming the time; a term used in juridical proceedings; as, of parliaments, or courts of justice.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness,
That we adjourn this court to further day. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved; but each house may adjourn itself. Bac. Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

2. To put off; to defer; to let stay to another time.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Why hast thou thus adjourn'd
The graces for his merits due,
Being all to dolours turn'd. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Crown high the goblets with a chearful draught;
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.
Dryden, Æneid vii. l. 181:

The formation of animals being foreign to my purpose, I shall adjourn the consideration of it to another occasion.
Woodward's Nat. History, p. iii.

ADJO'URNMENT. n. s. [adjournement, Fr.] An assignment of a day, or a putting off till another day. Adjournement in eyre, an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre mean to sit again. Cowell.

We will and we will not, and then we will not again, and we will. At this rate we run our lives out in adjournments from time to time, out of a fantastical levity that holds us off and on, betwixt hawk and buzzard. L'Estrange.

A'DIPOUS. adj. [adiposus, Lat.] Fat. Dict.

A'DIT. n. s. [aditus, Lat.] A passage for the conveyance of water under ground; a passage under ground in general: a term among the minemen.

For conveying away the water, they stand in aid of sundry devices; as, adits, pumps, and wheels, driven by a stream, and interchangeably filling and emptying two buckets. Carew's Surv.

The delfs would be so flown with waters (it being impossible to make any adits or soughs to drain them) that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray on the Creat.

ADI'TION. n. s. [from ad.o, aditum, Lat.] The act of going to another. Dict.

To ADJU'DGE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.]

1. To give the thing controverted to one of the parties by a judicial sentence; with the particle to before the person.

The way of disputing in the schools leads from it, by insisting on one topical argument; by the success of which, victory is adjudged to the opponent, or defendant. Locke.

The great competitors for Rome,
Cæsar and Pompey on Pharsalian plains,
Where stern Bellona, with one final stroke,
Adjudg'd the empire of this globe to one. Phillips.

2. To sentence, or condemn to a punishment; with to before the thing.

But though thou art adjudged to the death;
Yet I will favour thee in what I can. Shakesp. Com. of Err.

3. Simply, to judge; to decree; to determine.

He adjudged him unworthy of his friendship and favour; purposing sharply to revenge the wrong he had received.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

ADJUDICA'TION. n. s. [adjudicatio, Lat.] The act of judging, or of granting something to a litigant, by a judicial sentence.

To ADJU'DICATE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] To adjudge; to give something controverted to one of the litigants, by a sentence or decision.

A'DJUMENT. n. s. [adjumentum, Lat.] Help; support. Dict.

A'DJUNCT. n s. [adjunctum, Lat.]

1. Something adherent or united to another, though not essentially part of it.

Learning is but an adjunct to ourself,
And where we are, our learning likewise is.
Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

But I make haste to consider you as abstracted from a court, which (if you will give me leave to use a term of logick) is only an adjunct, not a propriety, of happiness. Dryd. Aureng. Ded.

The talent of discretion, as I have described it in its several adjuncts and circumstances, is no where so serviceable as to the clergy. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. A person joined to another. This sense rarely occurs.

He made him the associate of his heir apparent, together with the lord Cottington (as an adjunct of singular experience and trust) in foreign travels, and in a business of love. Wotton.

A'DJUNCT. adj. United with; immediately consequent.

So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjunct to my act,
I'd do't. Shakesp. King John.

ADJU'NCTION. n. s. [adjunctio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjoining, or coupling together.
2. The thing joined.

ADJU'NCTIVE. n. s. [adjunctivus, Lat.]

1. He that joins.
2. That which is joined.

ADJURA'TION. n. s. [adjuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjuring, or proposing an oath to another.
2. The form of oath proposed to another.

When these learned men saw sickness and phrenzy cured, the dead raised, the oracles put to silence, the dæmons and evil spirits forced to confess themselves no gods, by persons, who only made use of prayer and adjurations in the name of their crucified Saviour; how could they doubt of their Saviour's power on the like occasions? Addison on the Christian Religion.

To ADJU'RE. v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] To impose an oath upon another, prescribing the form in which he shall swear.

Thou know'st, the magistrates
And princes of my country came in person,
Solicited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd,
Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty,
And of religion, press'd how just it was,
How honourable. Milton's Sampson's Agonistes, l. 853.

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high
His hands now free, thou venerable sky!
Inviolable pow'rs! ador'd with dread,
Ye fatal fillets! that once bound this head,
Ye sacred altars! from whose flames I fled,
Be all of you adjured. Dryden, Æneid ii.

To ADJU'ST. v. a. [adjuster, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to put in order; to settle in the right form.

Your lordship removes all our difficulties, and supplies all our wants, faster than the most visionary projector can adjust his schemes. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. To reduce to the true state or standard; to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the most part, want standards in nature, whereby men may rectify and adjust their signification; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the particle to before the thing to which the conformity is made.

As to the accomplishment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Josephus, without knowing his character, and compares it with what our Saviour foretold, would think the historian had been a Christian, and that he had nothing else in view, but to adjust the event to the prediction. Addison on the Christian Religion.

ADJU'STMENT. n. s. [adjustement, Fr.]

1. Regulation; the act of putting in method; settlement.

The farther and clearer adjustment of this affair, I am constrained to adjourn to the larger treatise. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. The state of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it as an instrument made to shew the hour; but it is a learned idea which the watch-maker has of it, who knows all the several parts of it, together with the various connexions and adjustments of each part. Watts's Logick.

A'DJUTANT. n. s. A petty officer, whose duty is to assist the major, by distributing the pay, and overseeing the punishment, of the common men.

To ADJU'TE. v. a. [adjuvo, adjutum, Lat.] To help; to concur: a word not now in use.

For if there be
Six bachelors as bold as he,
Adjuting to his company;
And each one hath his livery. Ben. Johnson's Under-woods.

ADJU'TOR. n. s. [adjutor, Lat.] A helper. Dict.

ADMINISTRA'TION. n. f. [adminiſtratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adminiſtering or conducting any employment; as, the conducting the publick affairs; diſpenſing the laws.

I then did uſe the perſon of your father;
The image of his pow'r lay then in me:
And in th' adminiſtration of his law,
While I was buſy for the commonwealth,
Your highneſs pleaſed to forget my place. Shakeſp. Hen. IV.

In the ſhort time of his adminiſtration, he ſhone ſo powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Ruſſian ſummer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate.
Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Paſtorals.

2. The active or executive part of government.

It may paſs for a maxim in ſtate, that the adminiſtration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legiſlator in too many.
Swift's Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

3. Thoſe to whom the care of publick affairs is committed.
4. Diſtribution; exhibition; diſpenſation.

There is, in ſacraments, to be obſerved their force, and their form of adminiſtration. Hooker, b. v.

By the univerſal adminiſtration of grace, begun by our bleſſed Saviour, enlarged by his apoſtles, carried on by their immediate ſucceſſors, and to be compleated by the reſt to the world's end; all types that darkened this faith are enlightened.
Sprat's Sermons.

ADMI'NISTRATIVE. adj. [from adminiſtrate.] That which adminiſters; that by which any one adminiſters.

ADMINISTRA'TOR. n. f. [adminiſtrator, Lat.]

1. Is properly taken for him that has the goods of a man dying inteſtate, committed to his charge by the ordinary, and is accountable for the ſame, whenever it ſhall pleaſe the ordinary to call upon him thereunto. Cowell.

He was wonderfully diligent to enquire and obſerve what became of the king of Arragon; in holding the kingdom of Caſtile, and whether he did hold it in his own right, or as adminiſtrator to his daughter. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. He that officiates in divine rites.

I feel my conſcience bound to remember the death of Chriſt, with ſome ſociety of Chriſtians or other, ſince it is a moſt plain command; whether the perſon, who diſtributes theſe elements, be only an occaſional or a ſettled adminiſtrator.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i. c. 18.

3. He that conducts the government.

The reſidence of the prince, or chief adminiſtrator, of the civil power. Swift's Short View of Ireland.

ADMIRA'TION. n. f. [admiratio, Lat.]

1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.

Indu'd with human voice, and human ſenſe,
Reaſoning to admiration. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ix.

They are imitations of the paſſions, which always move, and therefore, conſequently, pleaſe; for, without motion, there can be no delight; which cannot be conſidered but as an active paſſion. When we view thoſe elevated ideas of nature, the reſult of that view is admiration, which is always the cauſe of pleaſure. Dryd. Dufreſnoy, Preface.

There is a pleaſure in admiration, and this is that which properly cauſeth admiration, when we diſcover a great deal in an object, which we underſtand to be excellent; and yet we ſee, we know not how much more beyond that, which our underſtandings cannot fully reach and comprehend. Tillotſon's Serm.

2. It is taken ſometimes in a bad ſenſe, though generally in a good.

Your boldneſs I with admiration ſee;
What hope had you to gain a queen like me?
Becauſe a hero forc'd me once away,
Am I thought fit to be a ſecond prey? Dryden.

To ADMI'RE. v. a. [admiro, Lat. admirer, Fr.]

1. To regard with wonder; generally in a good ſenſe.

'Tis here that knowledge wonders, and there is an admiration that is not the daughter of ignorance. This indeed ſtupidly gazeth at the unwonted effect; but the philoſophic paſſion truly admires and adores the ſupreme efficient. Glanville.

2. It is ſometimes uſed, in more familiar ſpeech, for to regard with love.
3. It is uſed, but rarely, in an ill ſenſe.

You have diſplac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting
With moſt admir'd diſorder. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

To

To ADMI'RE. v. n. To wonder; ſometimes with the particle at.

The eye is already ſo perfect, that I believe the reaſon of a man would eaſily have reſted here, and admir'd at his own contrivance. Ray on the Creation.

An ADMI'RER. n. ſ. [from admire.]

1. The perſon that wonders, or regards with admiration.

Neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained ſo great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other. Addiſon, Spectator.

Who moſt to ſhun or hate mankind pretend,
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope's Eſſay on Man.

2. In common ſpeech, a lover.

ADMI'RINGLY. adv. [from admire.] With admiration; in the manner of an admirer.

The king very lately ſpoke of him admiringly and mournfully. Shakeſpeare's All's well that ends well.

We may yet further admiringly obſerve, that though men uſually give freelieſt where they have not given before, and make it an excuſe of their deſiſtance from giving, that they have given it otherwiſe. Boyle.

ADMI'SSIBLE. adj. [admitto, admiſſum, Lat.] That which may be admitted.

Suppoſe that this ſuppoſition were admiſſible, yet this would not any way be inconſiſtent with the eternity of the divine nature and eſſence. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADMI'SSION. n. ſ. [admiſſio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of admitting.

There was alſo enacted that charitable law, for the admiſſion of poor ſuitors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to ſue. Bacon's Henry VII.

By means of our ſolitary ſituation, and our rare admiſſion of ſtrangers, we know moſt part of the habitable world, and are ourſelves unknown. Bacon's New Atalantis.

2. The ſtate of being admitted.

My father ſaw you ill deſigns purſue;
And my admiſſion ſhow'd his fear of you. Dryd. Aurengzebe.

God did then exerciſe man's hopes with the expectations of a better paradiſe, or a more intimate admiſſion to himſelf. South's Sermons.

3. Admittance; the power of entering, or being admitted.

All ſprings have ſome degree of heat, none ever freezing, no not in the longeſt and ſevereſt froſts; eſpecially thoſe, where there is ſuch a ſite and diſpoſition of the ſtrata as gives free and eaſy admiſſion to this heat. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

Our king deſcends from Jove:
And hither are we come, by his command,
To crave admiſſion in your happy land. Dryd. Æneid vii.

4. In the eccleſiaſtical law.

It is, when the patron preſents a clerk to a church that is vacant, and the biſhop, upon examination, admits and allows of ſuch clerk to be fitly qualified, by ſaying, Admitto te habilem, &c. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. The allowance of an argument; the grant of a poſition not fully proved.

To ADMIT. v. a. [admitto, Lat.]

1. To ſuffer to enter; to grant entrance.

Does not one table Bavius ſtill admit?

2. To ſuffer to enter upon an office; in which ſenſe, the phraſe of admiſſion into a college, &c. is uſed.

The treaſurer found it no hard matter ſo far to terrify him, that, for the king's ſervice, as was pretended, he admitted, for a ſix-clerk, a perſon recommended by him. Clarendon.

3. To allow an argument or poſition.

Suppoſe no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue, that by no force thou may'ſt be won,
Admit no ſteel can hurt or wound thy ſide,
And be it heav'n hath thee ſuch favour done. Fairfax, b. ii.

This argument is like to have the leſs effect on me, ſeeing I cannot eaſily admit the inference. Locke.

4. To allow, or grant in general; ſometimes with the particle of.

If you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be exalted, and images raiſed above the life, that leads you inſenſibly from your own principles to mine. Dryden on Heroic Poetry.

ADMI'TTABLE. adj. [from admit.] The perſon or thing which may be admitted

The clerk, who is preſented, ought to prove to the biſhop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders; otherwiſe, the biſhop is not bound to admit him: for, as the law then ſtood, a deacon was admittable. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ADMI'TTANCE. n. ſ. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permiſſion to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which liſteth ſhould take upon him charge in the church; and therefore a ſolemn admittance is of ſuch neceſſity, that, without it, there can be no church-polity. Hooker. b. iii.

As to the admittance of the weighty elaſtic parts of the air into the blood through the coats of the veſſels, it ſeems contrary to experiments upon dead bodies. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The power or right of entering.

What
If I do line one of their hands?——'tis gold
Which buys admittance. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

Surely a daily expectation at the gate, is the readieſt way to gain admittance into the houſe. South's Sermons.

There's news from Bertran; he deſires
Admittance to the king, and cries aloud,
This day ſhall end our fears. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

There are ſome ideas which have admittance only through one ſenſe, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them. Locke.

3. Cuſtom, or prerogative, of being admitted to great perſons; a ſenſe now out of uſe.

Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpoſe: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance, authentick in your place and perſon, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Windſor.

4. Conceſſion of a poſition.

Nor could the Pythagorean give eaſy admittance thereto; for, holding that ſeparate ſouls ſucceſſively ſupplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raiſing of ſouls from other worlds. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

To ADMI'X. v. a. [admiſceo, Lat.] To mingle with ſomething elſe.

ADMI'XTION. n. ſ. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined by ſtrong waters, or by admixtion of ſalt, ſulphur, and mercury. Bacon's Phyſical Remains.

The elements are no where pure in theſe lower regions; and if there is any free from the admixtion of another, ſure it is above the concave of the moon. Glanville's Sceſſis Scientifica.

There is no way to make a ſtrong and vigorous powder of ſaltpetre, without the admixtion of ſulphur. Brown's Vulg. Err.

ADMI'XTURE. n. ſ. [from admix.] The body mingled with another; perhaps ſometimes the act of mingling.

A maſs which to the eye appears to be nothing but mere ſimple earth, ſhall, to the ſmell or taſte, diſcover a plentiful admixture of ſulphur, alum, or ſome other mineral. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory, p. iv.

Whatever acrimony, or amaritude, at any time redounds in it, muſt be derived from the admixture of another ſharp bitter ſubſtance. Harvey on Conſumptions.

To ADMO'NISH. v. a. [admoneo, Lat.]

To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counſel againſt wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty; with the particle of, or againſt, which is more rare, or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admoniſhed him againſt that unſkilful piece of ingenuity. Decay of Piety.

He of their wicked ways
Shall them admoniſh, and before them ſet
The paths of righteouſneſs. Milt. Par. Loſt, b. xi.

But when he was admoniſhed by his ſubject to deſcend, he come down, gently circling in the air, and ſinging, to the ground. Dryden's Dedication of Virgil's Poſt.

ADMO'NISHER. n. ſ. [from admoniſh.] The perſon that admoniſhes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admoniſher; a court-ſatyriſt fit for the gentle times of Auguſtus. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

ADMO'NISHMENT. n. ſ. [from admoniſh.] Admonition; the notice by which one is put in mind of faults or duties: a word not often uſed.

But yet be wary in thy ſtudious care.—
—Thy grave admoniſhments prevail with me.
Shakeſpeare's Henry V. p. i.

To th' infinitely Good we owe
Immortal thanks, and his admoniſhment
Receive, with ſolemn purpoſe to obſerve
Immutably his ſovereign will, the end
Of what we are. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. vii. l. 77.

ADMONI'TION. n. ſ. [admonitio, Lat.] The hint of a fault or duty; counſel; gentle reproof.

They muſt give our teachers leave, for the ſaving of thoſe ſouls, to intermingle ſometimes, with other more neceſſary things, admonition concerning theſe not unneceſſary. Hooker.

From this admonition they took only occaſion to redouble their fault, and to ſleep again; ſo that, upon a ſecond and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unſeaſonable drowſineſs. South's Sermons.

ADMONI'TIONER. n. ſ. [from admonition.] A liberal diſpenſer of admonition; a general adviſer. A ludicrous term.

Albeit the admonitioners did ſeem at firſt to like no preſcript form of prayer at all, but thought it the beſt that their miniſter ſhould always be left at liberty to pray, as his own diſcretion did ſerve, their defender, and his aſſociates, have ſince propoſed to the world a form as themſelves did like. Hooker, b. v. § 27.

ADMO'NITORY. adj. [admonitorius, Lat.] That which admoniſhes.

The ſentence of reaſon is either mandatory, ſhewing what muſt be done; or elſe permiſſive, declaring only what may be done; or, thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the moſt convenient for us to do. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity, b. i.

ADMURMURA'TION. n. ſ. [admurmuro, Lat.] The act of murmuring, or whiſpering to another. Dict.

To ADMO'VE. v. a. [admoveo, Lat.] To bring one thing to another.

If unto the powder of loadſtone or iron, we admove the north-pole of the loadſtone, the powders, or ſmall diviſions, will erect and conform themſelves thereto. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADO. n. ſ. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from à and faire.]

1. Trouble, difficulty.

He took Clitophon priſoner, whom, with much ado, he keepeth alive; the Helots being villainouſly cruel. Sidney.

They moved, and in the end perſuaded with much ado, the people to bind themſelves by ſolemn oath. Hooker.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein ſundry laws were made. Sir John Davies.

With much ado, he partly kept awake;
Not ſuff'ring all his eyes repoſe to take:
And aſk'd the ſtranger, who did reeds invent,
And whence began ſo rare an inſtrument. Dryden.

2. Buſtle; tumult; buſineſs; ſometimes with the participle about.

Let's follow, to ſee the end of this ado. Shakeſp. Taming the Shrew.

All this ado about Adam's fatherhood, and the greatneſs of its power, helps nothing to eſtabliſh the power of thoſe that govern. Locke.

3. It has a light and ludicrous ſenſe, implying more tumult and ſhew of buſineſs, than the affair is worth; in this ſenſe it is generally uſed.

I made no more ado, but took all their ſeven points in my target, thus. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two—
For, hark, Tybalt being ſlain ſo late,
It may be thought we held him carelelly,
Being our kinſman, if we revel much. Shakeſpeare.

Come, come, ſays Puſs, without any more ado, 'tis time for me to go to breakfaſt; for cats don't live upon dialogues. L'Eſtrange.

ADOLE'SCENCE n. ſ. [adoleſcentia, Lat.]

The age ſucceeding childhood, and ſucceeded by puberty; more largely, that part of life in which the body has not yet reached its full perfection. See ADOLESCENCY.

The ſons muſt have a tedious time of childhood and adoleſcence, before they can either themſelves aſſiſt their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of poſterity. Bentley.

ADOLES'CENCY. n. ſ. The ſame with adoleſcence.

He was ſo far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full ſtature, if we believe Joſephus, who places him in the laſt adoleſcency, and makes him twenty-five years old. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To ADO'PT. v. a. [adopto, Lat.]

1. To take a ſon by choice; to make him a ſon, who was not ſo by birth.

Were none of all my father's ſiſters left;
Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft;
None by an uncle's or a grandame's ſide,
Yet I cou'd ſome adopted heir provide. Dryden.

2. To place any perſon or thing in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to ſomething elſe.

Whether adopted to ſome neighb'ring ſtar,
Thou roll'ſt above us, in thy wand'ring race,
Or, in proceſſion fix'd and regular,
Mov'd with the heav'ns majeſtic pace;
Or call'd to more celeſtial bliſs,
Thou tread'ſt, with ſeraphims, the vaſt abyſs. Dryd.

We are ſeldom at eaſe from the ſolicitation of our natural or adopted deſires; but a conſtant ſucceſſion of uneaſineſſes, out of that ſtock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

ADO'PTEDLY. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of ſomething adopted.

Adoptedly, as ſchools-maids change their names,
By vain, though apt, affection. Shakeſpeare.

ADO'PTER. n. ſ. [from adopt.]

He that gives ſome one by choice the rights of a ſon.

ADO'PTION. n. ſ. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's ſelf what is not native.

See the hell of having a falſe woman! My bed ſhall be abuſed, my coffers ranſacked, my reputation gnawn at; and I ſhall not only receive this villainous wrong, but ſtand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me the wrong. Shakeſpeare.

2. The ſtate of being adopted.

In which time ſhe purpos'd,
By watching, weeping, tendance, kiſſing, to
O'ercome you with her ſhew: yes, and in time
(When ſhe had fitted you with her craft) to work
Her ſon into th' adoption of the crown. Shakeſpeare.

In every act of our chriſtian worſhip, we are taught to call upon him under the endearing character of our Father, to remind us of our adoption, that we are made heirs of God, and joint heirs of Chriſt. Rogers's Sermons.

ADO'PTIVE. adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

1. He that is adopted by another, and made his ſon.

It is impoſſible an elective monarch ſhould be ſo free and abſolute as an hereditar; no more than it is poſſible for a father to have ſo full power and intereſt in an adoptive ſon, as in a natural. Bacon.

2. He that adopts another, and makes him his ſon.

An adopted ſon cannot cite his adoptive father into court, without his leave. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ADO'RABLE. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That which ought to be adored; that which is worthy of divine honours.

On theſe two, viz. the love of God, and our neighbour, hang both the law and the prophets, ſays the adorable author of chriſtianity; and the apoſtle ſays, the end of the law is charity. Cheyne's Philoſophical Principles.

ADO'RABLENESS. n. ſ. [from adorable.] The quality of being adorable; worthineſs of divine honours.

ADO'RABLY. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORA'TION. n. ſ. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage paid to the Divinity, diſtinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and ſerviceable worſhip we name, for diſtinction ſake, whatſoever belongeth to the church, or publick ſociety, of God, by way of external adoration. Hooker.

It is poſſible to ſuppoſe, that thoſe who believe a ſupreme excellent Being, may yet give him no external adoration at all. Stillingfleet.

2. Homage paid to perſons in high place or eſteem.

O ceremony, ſhew me but thy worth:
What is thy toll, O adoration!
Art thou nought elſe but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men?
Wherein thou art leſs happy, being fear'd,
Than they in fearing.
What drink'ſt thou oft, inſtead of homage ſweet,
But poiſon'd flattery? Shakeſpeare.

To ADO'RE v. a. [adoro, Lat.]

1. To worſhip with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Themis they adore,
And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is uſed, popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard; to reverence; to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Tatler, N° 57.

ADO'REMENT. n. ſ. [from adore.] Adoration; worſhip: a word ſcarcely uſed.

The prieſts of elder times deluded their apprehenſions with ſooth ſaying, and ſuch oblique idolatries, and won their credulities to the literal and downright adorement of cats, lizzards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADO'RER. n. ſ. [from adore.] He that adores: a worſhipper: a term generally uſed in a low ſenſe; as, by lovers, or admirers.

Being ſo far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profeſs myſelf her adorer, not her friend. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

Whilſt as th' approaching pageant does appear,
And echoing crouds ſpeaks mighty Venus near;
I, her adorer, too devoutly ſtand
Faſt on the utmoſt margin of the land. Prior.

2. A worſhipper, in a ſerious ſenſe.

He was ſo ſevere an adorer of truth, as not to diſſemble; or to ſuffer any man to think that he would do any thing, which he reſolved not to do. Clarendon.

To ADORN. v. a. [adorno, Lat.]

1. To dreſs; to deck the perſon with ornaments.

He hath cloathed me with the garments of ſalvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteouſneſs, as a bridegroom decketh himſelf with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herſelf with her jewels. Iſaiah, lxi. 10.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part,
That ſhews more coſt than art;
Jewels at noſe and lips, but ill appear. Cowley.

2. To ſet out any place or thing with decorations.

A gallery adorned with the pictures or ſtatues of the invention of things uſeful to human life. Cowley.

3. To embelliſh with oratory or elegance of language.

This will ſupply men's tongues with many new things, to be named, adorned, and deſcribed, in their diſcourſe. Sprat's Hiſtory of the Royal Society.

Thouſands there are in darker fame that dwell,
Whoſe names ſome nobler poem ſhall adorn;
For, though unknown to me, they ſure fought well. Dryd.

ADO'RNMENT. n. ſ. [from adorn.] Ornament; embelliſhment; elegance.

Which attribute was not given to the earth, while it was confuſed; nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

She held the very garment of Poſthumus in more reſpect than my noble and natural perſon, together with the adornment of my qualities. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

ADO'WN. adv. [from a and down.] Down; on the ground.

Thrice

Thrice did ſhe ſink adown in deadly ſound,
And thrice he her reviv'd with buſy pain. Fairy Queen.

ADO'WN. prep. Down; towards the ground; from a higher ſituation towards a lower.

In this remembrance Emily ere day
Aroſe, and dreſs'd herſelf in rich array;
Freſh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her ſhoulders fell her length of hair. Dryden.

ADRE'AD. adv. [from a and dread, as, aſide, athirſt, aſleep.] In a ſtate of fear; frighted; terrified: now obſolete.

And thinking to make all men adread to ſuch a one an enemy, who would not ſpare, nor fear to kill ſo great a prince. Sidney.

ADRI'FT. adv. from a and drift, from drive.] Floating at random; as, any impulſe may drive.

Then, ſhall this mount
Of paradiſe, by might of waves, be mov'd
Out of his place, puſh'd by the horned flood;
With all his verdure ſpoil'd, and trees adrift
Down the great river, to the opening gulf,
And there take root. Milton.

It ſeem'd a corps adrift to diſtant ſight;
But at a diſtance who could judge aright. Dryden.

The cuſtom of frequent reflection will keep their minds from running adrift, and call their thoughts home from uſeleſs unattentive roving. Locke on Education.

ADROIT. adj. [French.] Dextrous; active; ſkilful.

An adroit ſtout fellow would ſometimes deſtroy a whole family, with juſtice apparently againſt him the whole time. Jervas.

ADRO'ITNESS. n. ſ. [from adroit.] Dexterity; readineſs; activity. Neither this word, nor adroit, ſeem yet completely naturalized.

ADRY'. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirſt; thirſty; in want of drink.

He never told any of them, that he was his humble ſervant, but his well-wiſher; and would rather be thought a malecontent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Spect.

ADSCITI'TIOUS. adj. [adſcititius, Lat.] That which is taken in to complete ſomething elſe, though originally extrinſick; ſupplemental; additional.

ADSTRI'CTION. n. ſ. [adſtrictio, Lat.] The act of binding together; and applied, generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

To ADVANCE. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]

Now morn, her roſy ſteps in th' eaſtern clime
Advancing, ſow'd the earth with orient pearl. Milton.

1. To raiſe to preferment; to aggrandize.

The declaration of the greatneſs of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him. Eſther, x. 2.

3. To improve.

What laws can he adviſed more proper and effectual to advance the nature of man to its higheſt perfection, than theſe precepts of chriſtianity? Tillotſon.

4. To heighten; to grace; to give luſtre to.

As the calling dignifies the man, ſo the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by it. South's Sermons.

5. To forward; to accelerate.

Theſe three laſt were ſlower than the ordinary Indian wheat of itſelf: and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

6. To propoſe; to offer to the publick.

I dare not advance my opinion againſt the judgment of ſo great an author; but I think it fair to leave the deciſion to the publick. Dryden.

Some ne'er advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the ſpreading notion of the town. Pope.

To ADVA'NCE. v. n.

1. To come forward.

At this the youth, whoſe vent'rous ſoul
No fears of magick art controul,
Advanc'd in open fight. Parnel.

2. To make improvement.

They who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and ſwell themſelves with a little articulated air, ſhould not take words for real entities in nature, till they can frame clear and diſtinct ideas of thoſe entities. Locke.

ADVA'NCE. n. ſ. [from to advance.]

1. The act of coming forward.

All the foot were put into Abington, with a reſolution to quit, or defend, the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it. Clarendon.

So, like the ſun's advance, your titles ſhow;
Which, as he riſes, does the warmer grow. Waller.

2. A tendency to come forward to meet a lover; an act of invitation.

In vain are all the practis'd wiles,
In vain thoſe eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the ſmiles,
Can move one unrelenting heart. Walſh.

His genius was below
The ſkill of ev'ry common beau;
Who, tho' he cannot ſpell, is wiſe
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret for a kind advance. Swift.

He has deſcribed the unworthy paſſion of the goddeſs Calypſo, and the indecent advances ſhe made to detain him from his own country. Pope.

3. Progreſſion; riſe from one point to another.

Our Saviour raiſed the ruler's daughter, the widow's ſon, and Lazarus; the firſt of theſe, when ſhe had juſt expired; the ſecond, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been ſome time buried. And having, by theſe gradual advances, manifeſted his divine power, he at laſt exerted the higheſt and moſt glorious degree of it; and raiſed himſelf alſo by his own all-quickening virtue, and according to his own expreſs prediction. Atterbury.

Men of ſtudy and thought, that reaſon right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advances in their diſcoveries of it. Locke.

4. Improvement; progreſs towards perfection.

The principle and object of the greateſt importance in the world to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale.

ADVA'NCEMENT. n. ſ. [avancement, Fr.]

1. The act of coming forward.

This refinement having begun about the time of the revolution, I had ſome ſhare in the honour of promoting it; and I obſerve, that it makes daily advancements, and, I hope, in time will raiſe our language to the utmoſt perfection. Swift.

2. The ate of being advanced; preferment.

During whoſe reign, the Percies of the North
Finding his uſurpation moſt unjuſt,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

3. The act of advancing another.

In his own grace he doth exalt himſelf
More than in your advancement. Shakeſpeare.

4. Improvement.

Nor can we conceive it may be unwelcome unto thoſe honoured worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ADVA'NCER. n. ſ. [from advance.] He that advances any thing; a promoter; forwarder.

Soon after the death of a great officer, who was judged no advancer of the king's matters, the king ſaid to his ſolicitor Bacon, who was his kinſman, How, tell me truly, what ſay you of your couſin that is gone? Bacon.

Let us add only this concerning this latter ſort, that they are greater advancers of defamatory deſigns, than the very firſt contrivers. Government of the Tongue.

ADVA'NTAGE. n. ſ. [avantage, Fr.]

1. Superiority; often with of or ever before a perſon.

In the practical prudence of managing ſuch gifts, the laity may have ſome advantage over the clergy; whoſe experience is, and ought to be, leſs of this world than the others. Sprat.

All other ſorts and ſects of men would evidently have the advantage of us, and a much ſurer title to happineſs than we. Atterbury.

2. Superiority gained by ſtratagem, or unlawful means.

The common law hath left them this benefit, whereof they make advantage, and wreſt it to their bad purpoſes. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

But ſpecially he took advantage of the night for ſuch privy attempts, inſomuch that the bruit of his manlineſs was ſpread every-where. 2 Macc. viii. 7.

It is a noble and a ſure defiance of a great malice, backed with a great intereſt; which yet can have no advantage of a man, but from his own expectations of ſomething that is without him. South's Sermons.

As ſoon as he was got to Sicily, they ſent for him back; deſigning to take advantage, and proſecute him in the abſence of his friends. Swift.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

I beſeech you,
If you think fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of ſome brief diſcourſe
With Deſdemona alone. Shakeſpeare.

4. Favourable circumſtances.

Like jewels to advantage ſet,
Her beauty by the ſhade does get. Waller.

A face, which is over-fluſhed, appears to advantage in the deepeſt ſcarlet, and the darkeſt complexion is not a little alleviated by a black hood. Addiſon.

True wit is nature to advantage dreſs'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er ſo well expreſs'd.
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

5. Gain; profit.

For thou ſaidſt, what advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit ſhall I have, if I be cleanſed from my ſin? Job, xxxv. 3.

Certain

Certain it is, that advantage now ſits in the room of conſcience, and ſteers all. South.

6. Overplus; ſomething more than the mere lawful gain.

O my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much; within this wall of fleſh
There is a ſoul counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy love.
Shakeſpeare's King John.

You ſaid, you neither lend nor borrow
Upon advantage. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

7. Preponderation on one ſide of the compariſon.

Much more ſhould the conſideration of this pattern arm us with patience againſt ordinary calamities; eſpecially if we conſider his example with this advantage, that though his ſufferings were wholly undeſerved, and not for himſelf but for us, yet he bore them patiently. Tillotſon.

To ADVA'NTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To benefit.

Convey what I ſet down to my lady: it ſhall advantage more than ever the bearing of letter did.
Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

The great buſineſs of the ſenſes being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wiſely ordered by nature, that pain ſhould accompany the reception of ſeveral ideas. Locke.

We ſhould have purſued ſome other way, more effectual, for diſtreſſing the common enemy, and advantaging ourſelves. Swift.

The trial hath endamag'd thee no way,
Rather more honour left, and more eſteem;
Me naught advantag'd, miſſing what I aim'd. Milton.

2. To promote; to bring forward; to gain ground.

To ennoble it with the ſpirit that inſpires the Royal Society, were to advantage it in one of the beſt capacities in which it is improveable. Glanville.

ADVA'NTAGED. adj. [from to advantage.] Poſſeſſed of advantages.

In the moſt advantaged tempers, this diſpoſition is but comparative; whereas the moſt of men labour under diſadvantages, which nothing can rid them off. Glanville.

ADVA'NTAGE-GROUND. n. ſ. Ground that gives ſuperiority, and opportunities of annoyance or reſiſtance.

This excellent man, who ſtood not upon the advantage-ground before, from the time of his promotion to the archbiſhoprick, or rather from that of his being commiſſioner of the treaſury, exceedingly provoked, or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions; who agreed in nothing elſe. Clarendon.

ADVANTA'GEOUS. adj. [avantageux, Fr.]

1. Of advantage; profitable; uſeful; opportune; convenient.

The time of ſickneſs, or affliction, is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a ſeaſon of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard; and may be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increaſing ſpiritual life in the ſoul.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

Here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be atchiev'd
By ſudden onſet, either with hell-fire
To waſte his whole creation; or poſſeſs
All as our own. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. It is uſed with relation to perſons, and followed by to.

Since every painter paints himſelf in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himſelf, to the end that he may cultivate thoſe talents which make his genius. Dryden.

ADVANTA'GEOUSLY. adv. [from advantageous.]

Conveniently; opportunely; profitably.

It was advantageouſly ſituated, there being an eaſy paſſage from it to Ægypt, Æthiopia, Perſia, and India, by ſea. Arbuth.

ADVANTA'GEOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from advantageous.] Quality of being advantageous; profitableneſs; uſefulneſs; convenience.

The laſt property, which qualifies God for the fitteſt object of our love, is, the advantageouſneſs of his to us, both in the preſent and the future life. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

To ADVE'NE. v. n. [advenio, Lat.] To accede to ſomething; to become part of ſomething elſe, without being eſſential; to be ſuperadded.

A ſixth cauſe conſidered in judicature, is ſtiled an accidental cauſe; and the accidental of any act, is ſaid to be whatever advenes to the act itſelf already ſubſtantiated. Ayliffe.

ADVE'NIENT. adj. [adveniens, Lat.] Advening; coming from outward cauſes; ſuperadded.

If to ſuppoſe the ſoul a diſtinct ſubſtance from the body, and extrinſecally advenient, be a great error in philoſophy, almoſt all the world hath hitherto been miſtaken.
Glanville's Vanity of Dogmatiſm.

Being thus divided from truth in themſelves, they are yet farther removed by advenient deception; for they are daily mocked into error by ſubtler deviſes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'DVENT. n. ſ. [from adventus; that is, adventus Redemptoris.]

The name of one of the holy ſeaſons, ſignifying the coming; that is, the coming of our Saviour; which is made the ſubject of our devotion during the four weeks before Chriſtmas.

ADVE'NTINE. adj. [from advenio, adventum.] Adventitious; that which is extrinſically added; that which comes from outward cauſes: a word ſcarcely in uſe.

As for the peregrine heat, it is thus far true, that, if the proportion of the adventine heat be greatly predominant to the natural heat and ſpirits of the body, it tendeth to diſſolution or notable alteration. Bacon.

ADVENTI'TIOUS. adj. [adventitious, Lat.] That which advenes; accidental; ſupervenient; extrinſically added, not eſſentially inherent.

Diſeaſes of continuance get an adventitious ſtrength from cuſtom, beſides their material cauſe from the humours. Bacon.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the others adventitious; yet ſuch changes of colours, from whatſoever cauſe they proceed, may be properly enough taken in, to illuſtrate the preſent ſubject. Boyle.

If his blood boil, and th' adventitious fire
Rais'd by high meats, and higher wines, require
To temper and allay the burning heat;
Waters are brought, which by decoction get
New coolneſs. Dryd. Juvenal.

Of this we have an inſtance in the gem-kind; where, of all the many ſorts reckoned up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original; their diverſities, as to luſtre, colour, and hardneſs, ariſing from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter. Woodward.

ADVE'NTIVE. n. ſ. [from advenio, Lat.] The thing or perſon that comes from without: a word not now in uſe.

That the natives be not ſo many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventives alſo.
Bacon's Advice to Sir George Villiers.

ADVE'NTUAL. adj. [from advent.]

Relating to the ſeaſon of advent.

I do alſo daily uſe one other collect; as, namely, the collects adventual, quadrageſimal, paſchal, or pentecoſtal, for their proper ſeaſons. Biſhop Saunderſon.

ADVE'NTURE. n. ſ. [French.]

1. An accident; a chance; a hazard; an event of which we have no direction.

The general ſummoned three caſtles that were near: one deſperate of ſuccour, and not deſirous to diſpute the defence, preſently yielded; but two ſtood upon their adventure.
Sir John Hayward.

2. In this ſenſe is uſed the phraſe, at all adventures; [à l'aventure, Fr.] By chance; without any rational ſcheme.

Blows flew at all adventures, wounds and deaths given and taken unexpected; many ſcarce knowing their enemies from their friends. Sir John Hayward.

Where the mind does not perceive this probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

3. The occaſion of caſual events; an enterpriſe in which ſomething muſt be left to hazard.

For I muſt love, and am reſolv'd, to try
My fate, or, failing in th' adventure, die. Dryden.

This noun, with all its derivatives, are frequently written without ad; as, venture, venturous.

To ADVE'NTURE. v. n. [adventurer, Fr.]

1. To try the chance; to dare.

Be not angry,
Moſt mighty princeſs, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a falſe report. Shakeſpeare.

The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to ſet the ſole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateneſs and tenderneſs. Deuter. xxviii. 26.

2. In an active ſenſe, to put into the power of chance.

For my father fought for you, and adventured his life for, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian. Judges, ix. 17.

3. It is often uſed with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he adventured himſelf.

ADVE'NTURER. n. ſ. [adventurier, Fr.] He that ſeeks occaſions of hazard; he that puts himſelf in the hands of chance.

He is a great adventurer, ſaid he,
That hath his ſword through hard aſſay forgone,
And now hath vow'd, till he avenged be
Of that deſpight, never to wear none. Fairy Queen.

The kings of England did not make the conqueſt of Ireland their own work; it was begun by particular adventurers, and other voluntaries, who came to ſeek their fortunes in Ireland.
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

In this action, highly commendable, he intended to hazard his own action, that ſo the more eaſily he might win adventurers, who elſe were like to be leſs forward. Raleigh.

Had it not been for the Britiſh, which the late wars drew over, and of adventurers or ſoldiers ſeated here, the country had, by the laſt war, and plague, been left, in a manner, deſtitute.
Temple's Miſcellanies.

Their wealthy trade from pirate's rapine free,
Our merchants ſhall no more adventurers be. Dryden.

ADVE'N-

ADVE'NTUROUS. adj. [adventureux, Fr.]

1. He that is inclined to adventures; and, conſequently, bold, daring, courageous.

At land and ſea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more advent'rous knight;
Who oftner drew his ſword, and always for the right.
Dryd. Hind. and Panther.

2. Applied to things; that which is full of hazard; which requires courage; dangerous.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more advent'rous ſong.
My humble verſe demands a ſofter theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling ſtream. Addiſon.

ADVE'NTUROUSLY. adv. [from adventurous.] After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

They are both hanged; and ſo would this be, if he durſt ſteal any thing adventurouſly. Shakeſpeare's Henry V.

ADVE'NTURESOME. adj. [from adventure.]

The ſame with adventurous: a low word, ſcarcely uſed in writing.

ADVE'NTURESOMENESS. n. ſ. [from adventureſome.] The quality of being adventureſome. Dict.

A'DVERB. n. ſ. [adverbium, Lat.]

A word joined to a verb or adjective, and ſolely applied to the uſe of qualifying and reſtraining the latitude of their ſignification, by the intimation of ſome circumſtance thereof; as of quality, manner, degree. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Thus we ſay, he runs ſwiftly; the bird flies aloft; he lives virtuouſly.

ADVE'RBIAL. adj. [adverbialis, Lat.] That which has the quality or ſtructure of an adverb.

ADVE'RBIALLY. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.] Like an adverb; in the manner of an adverb.

I ſhould think alta was joined adverbially with tremit, did Virgil make uſe of ſo equivocal a ſyntax. Addiſon.

ADVERSABLE. adj. [from adverſe.]

Contrary to; oppoſite to.

ADVERSA'RIA. n. ſ. [Lat. A book, as it ſhould ſeem, in which Debtor and Creditor were ſet in oppoſition.] A common-place; a book to note in.

Theſe parchments are ſuppoſed to have been St. Paul's adverſaria. Bull's Sermons.

A'DVERSARY. n. ſ. [adverſaire, Fr. adverſarius, Lat.]

An opponent; antagoniſt; enemy: generally applied to thoſe that have verbal or judicial quarrels; as, controvertiſts or litigants: ſometimes to an opponent in ſingle combat. It may ſometimes imply an open profeſſion of enmity; as we ſay, a ſecret enemy is worſe than an open adverſary.

Yet am I noble, as the adverſary
I come to cope. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Thoſe rites and ceremonies of the church, therefore, which were the ſelf-ſame now that they were, when holy and virtuous men maintained them againſt profane and deriding adverſaries, her own children have in deriſion. Hooker.

Mean while th' adverſary of God and man,
Satan, with thoughts inflam'd, of higheſt deſign,
Puts on ſwift wings. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

An adverſary, on the contrary, makes a ſtricter ſearch into us, and diſcovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues; an enemy inflames his crimes. Addiſon. Spectator.

ADVE'RSATIVE. adj. [adverſativus, Lat.]

A term of grammar, applied to a word which makes ſome oppoſition or variety; as in this ſentence: This diamond is orient, but it is rough. But is an adverſative conjunction.

A'DVERSE. adj. [adverſus, Lat.]

In proſe it has now the accent on the firſt ſyllable; in verſe it is accented on the firſt by Shakeſpeare; on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the laſt, by Dryden; on the firſt, by Roſcommon.

1. Acting with contrary directions; as, two bodies in colliſion.

Was I for this nigh wreckt upon the ſea,
And twice, by adverſe winds, from England's bank
Drove back again unto my native clime. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

As when two polar winds blowing adverſe,
Upon the Cronian ſea together drive
Mountains of ice. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

With adverſe blaſt up-turns them from the South,
Notus and Afer. Ibid. l. 701.

A cloud of ſmoke envelopes either hoſt;
And all at once the combatants are loſt;
Darkling they join adverſe, and ſhock unſeen;
Courſers with courſers juſtling, men with men. Dryd.

2. Figuratively, contrary to the wiſh or deſire; thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is oppoſed to proſperous.

What if he hath decreed, that I ſhall firſt
Be try'd in humble ſtate, and things adverſe;
By tribulations, injuries, inſults,
Contempts, and ſcorns, and ſnares, and violence. Milton.

Some the prevailing malice of the great,
Unhappy men, or adverſe fate,
Sunk deep into the gulfs of an afflicted ſtate. Riſcommon.

3. Perſonally oppoſent; the perſon that counteracts another, or conteſts any thing.

Well ſhe ſaw her father was grown her adverſe party; and yet her fortune ſuch, as ſhe muſt favour her rivals. Sidney.

ADVE'RSITY. n. ſ. [adverſité, Fr.] Affliction; calamity; that is, oppoſition to our wiſhes.

1. The cauſe of our ſorrow; affliction; misfortune. In this ſenſe it may have a plural.

Let me embrace theſe four adverſities,
For wiſe men ſay, it is the wiſeſt courſe. Shakeſp. Hen. VI.

2. The ſtate of unhappineſs; misery.

Sweet are the uſes of adverſity,
Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head. Shakeſpeare.

Concerning deliverance itſelf from all adverſity, we uſe not to ſay men are in adverſity, whenſoever they feel any ſmall hinderance of their welfare in this world, but when ſome notable affliction or croſs, ſome great calamity or trouble, befalleth them. Hooker.

A remembrance of the good uſe he had made of proſperity, contributed to ſupport his mind under the heavy weight of adverſity, which then lay upon him. Atterbury.

ADVE'RSELY. adv. [from adverſe.] In an adverſe manner; oppoſitely; unfortunately.

What I think, I utter, and ſpend my malice in my breath. Meeting two ſuch wealſmen as you are, (I cannot call you Lycurguſſes) if the drink you give me touch my palate adverſly, I make a crooked face at it. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

To ADVE'RT. v. n. [adverto, Lat.]

1. To attend to; to regard; to obſerve; with the particle to before the object of regard.

The mind of men being not capable at once to advert to more than one thing, a particular view and examination of ſuch an innumerable number of vaſt bodies, will afford matter of admiration. Ray on the Creation.

Now to the univerſal whole advert;
The earth regard as of that whole a part;
In which wide frame more noble worlds abound;
Witneſs, ye glorious orbs, which hang around. Blackmore.

2. We ſometimes ſay, To advert the mind to an object.

ADVE'RTENCE. n. ſ. [from advert.]

Attention to; regard to; conſideration.

Chriſtianity may make Archimedes his challenge; give it but where it may ſet its foot; allow but a ſober advertance to its propoſals, and it will move the whole world. Decay of Piety.

ADVE'RTENCY. n. ſ. [from advert.] The ſame with advertence.

Attention; regard; heedfulneſs.

Too much advertency is not your talent; or elſe you had fled from that text, as from a rock. Swift.

To ADVERTI'SE. v. a. [advertir, Fr.] It is now ſpoken with the accent upon the laſt ſyllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the ſecond.

1. To inform another; to give intelligence; with an accuſative of the perſon informed.

The biſhop did require a reſpite,
Wherein he might the king his lord advertiſe,
Whether our daughter were legitimate.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

As I by friends am well advertiſed,
Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
Biſhop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates are in arms.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

2. To inform; to give notice; with of before the ſubject of information.

The death of Selymus nothing ſuſpected, Ferhates, underſtanding that Solyman expected more aſſured advertiſement, ſent unto the other Baſſas; unto whom he declared the death of the emperor: of which they, by another meſſenger, advertiſed Solyman; firming thoſe letters with all their hands and ſeals. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

They were to advertiſe the chief hero of the diſtreſſes of his ſubjects, occaſioned by his abſence, to crave his ſuccour, and ſo icite him to haſten his return. Dryden.

3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertiſement in the publick prints; as, He adverti*ſed his loſs.*

ADVERTI'SEMENT, or ADVE'RTISEMENT. n. ſ. [advertiſement, Fr.]

1. Inſtruction; admonition.

—'Tis all men's office to ſpeak patience
To thoſe, that wring under the load of ſorrow;
But no man's virtue nor ſufficiency,
To be ſo moral, when he ſhall endure
The like himſelf: therefore give me no counſel;
My griefs are louder than advertiſement.
Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

2. Intelligence; information.

Then, as a cunning prince that uſeth ſpies,
If they return no news, doth nothing know;
But if they make advertiſement of lies,
The prince's counſel all awry do go. Sir John Davies.

He had received advertiſement, that the party, which was ſent for his relief from London, had received ſome bruſh in Somerſetſhire, which would much retard their march. Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their ſeveral ſounds, ſerve for many kinds of advertiſements, in military affairs: the bells ſerve to proclaim a ſcare-fire; and, in ſome places, water-breaches; the departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine ſervice; the hour of the day; day of the month. Hol.

3. Notice of any thing publiſhed in a paper of intelligence.

ADVERTI'SER. n. ſ. [adverti ſeur, Fr.]

1. He that gives intelligence or information.

2. The paper in which advertiſements are publiſhed.

ADVERTISING, or ADVERTI'SING. part. adj. [from advertiſe.] Active in giving intelligence; monitory: a word not now in uſe.

As I was then
Advertiſing, and holy to your buſineſs,
Not changing heart with habit, I am ſtill
Attornied at your ſervice. Shakeſp.

To ADVE'SPERATE. v. n. [adveſpero, Lat.] To draw towards evening. Dict.

ADVICE. n. ſ. [avis, adeis, Fr. from adviſo, low Latin.]

1. Counſel; inſtruction: except that inſtruction implies ſuperiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiors.

Break we our match up, and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have ſeen to-night
Unto young Hamlet. Shakeſp.

O troubled, weak and coward, as thou art!
Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
To worſe extremes with ſwifter ſteps would run;
Not ſav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone. Prior.

2. Reflection; prudent conſideration; as, he always acts with good advice.

What he hath won, that he hath fortified:
So hot a ſpeed, with ſuch advice diſpos'd,
Such temperate order, in ſo fierce a courſe,
Doth want example. Shakeſp. King John.

3. Conſultation; deliberation; with the particle with.

Great princes, for the moſt part, taking advice with workmen, with no leſs coſt, ſet their things together. Bacon.

4. Intelligence; as, the merchants received advice of their loſs. This ſenſe is ſomewhat low, and chiefly commercial.

ADVI'CE-BOAT. n ſ. A veſſel employed to bring intelligence.

ADVI'SABLE. adj. [from adviſe.] Prudent; fit to be adviſed.

Some judge it adviſable for a man to account with his heart every day; and this, no doubt, is the beſt and ſureſt courſe; for ſtill the oftener, the better. South's Sermons.

It is not adviſable to reward, where men have the tenderneſs not to puniſh. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

ADVISABLENESS. n ſ. [from adviſable.] The quality of being adviſable, or fit; fitneſs; propriety.

To ADVI'SE. v. a. [adviſer, Fr.]

1. To counſel; with the particle to before the thing adviſed.

If you do ſtir abroad, go arm'd.——
——Arm'd, brother!——
——Brother, I adviſe you to the beſt. Shakeſp.

I would adviſe all gentlemen to learn merchants accounts, and not to think it a ſkill that belongs not to them. Locke.

When I conſider the ſcruples and cautions I here lay in your way, methinks it looks as if I adviſed you to ſomething which I would have offered at, but in effect not done. Locke.

2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing; often with the particle of before the thing told.

You were advis'd, his fleſh was capable
Of wounds and ſcars; and that his forward ſpirit
Would lift him, where moſt trade of danger rang'd.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

Such diſcourſe bring on,
As may adviſe him of his happy ſtate;
Happineſs in his pow'r, left free to will. Parad. Loſt.

A poſting meſſenger diſpatch'd from hence,
Of this fair troop advis'd their aged prince. Dryden.

To ADVI'SE. v. n.

1. To conſult; with the particle with before the perſon conſulted; as, he adviſed with his companions.

2. To conſider; to deliberate.

Adviſe if this be worth
Attempting, or to ſit in darkneſs here,
Hatching vain empires. Milton.

ADVI'SED. participial adj. [from adviſe.]

1. Acting with deliberation and deſign; prudent; wiſe.

Let his travel appear rather in his diſcourſe, than in his apparel or geſture; and, in his diſcourſe, let him be rather adviſed in his anſwers, than forward to tell ſtories. Bacon.

Th' Almighty Father, where he ſits
Shrin'd in his ſanctuary of heav'n ſecure,
Conſulting on the ſum of things foreſeen,
This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd. Milton.

2. Performed with deliberation; done on purpoſe; acted with deſign.

By that which we work naturally, as, when we breathe, ſleep, and move, we ſet forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no expreſs purpoſe to make that our end, nor any adviſed determination therein to follow a law. Hooker.

In my ſchool-days, when I had loſt one ſhaft,
I ſhot his fellow of the ſelf-ſame flight,
The ſelf-ſame way, with more adviſed watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both. Shakeſpeare.

ADVI'SEDLY. adv. [from adviſed.] Deliberately; purpoſely; by deſign; prudently.

Surprize may be made by moving things, when the party is in haſte, and cannot ſtay to conſider adviſedly of that which is moved. Bacon.

Thou ſtileſt ſecond thoughts (which are by all allowed the beſt) a relapſe; and talkeſt of a quagmire, where no man ever ſtuck faſt; and accuſeſt conſtancy of miſchief in what is natural, and adviſedly undertaken. Sir John Suckling.

ADVI'SEDNESS. n. ſ. [from adviſed.] Deliberation; cool and prudent precedure.

While things are in agitation, private men may modeſtly tender their thoughts to the conſideration of thoſe that are in authority; to whoſe care it belongeth, in preſcribing concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all juſt adviſedneſs and moderation. Saunderſon's Judgment in one View.

ADVI'SEMENT. n. ſ. [adviſement, Fr.]

1. Counſel; information.

Mote I wote,
What ſtrange adventure do you now purſue?
Perhaps my ſuccour, or adviſement meet,
Mote ſtead you much your purpoſe to ſubdue. Fairy Queen.

I will, according to your adviſement, declare the evils which ſeem moſt hurtful. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

2. It is taken likewiſe, in old writers, for prudence and circumſpection. It is now, in both ſenſes, antiquated.

ADVI'SER. n. ſ. [from adviſe.] The perſon that adviſes, or gives counſel; a counſellor.

Here, free from court-compliances, he walks,
And with himſelf, his beſt adviſer, talks. Waller.

They never fail of their moſt artful and indefatigable addreſs, to ſilence this impertinent adviſer, whoſe ſeverity awes their exceſſes. Rogers's Sermons.

ADULA'TION. n. ſ. [adulation, Fr. adulatio, Lat.] Flattery; high compliment.

O be ſick, great Greatneſs!
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.
Think'ſt thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shakeſpeare.

They who flattered him moſt before, mentioned him now with the greateſt bitterneſs, and called him now the corrupter of the king, and betrayer of the people; without imputing the leaſt crime to him, committed ſince the time of that exalted adulation, or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now. Clarendon.

ADULA'TOR. n. ſ. [adulator, Lat.] A flatterer. Dict.

A'DULATORY. adj. [adulatorius, Lat.] Flattering; full of compliments.

ADU'LT, adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; paſt the age of infancy and weakneſs.

They would appear leſs able to approve themſelves, not only to the confeſſor, but even to the catechiſt, in their adult age, than they were in their minority; as having ſcarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, ſince they conned them to avoid correction. Decay of Piety.

The earth, by theſe applauded ſchools, 'tis ſaid,
This ſingle crop of men and women bred;
Who grown adult, (ſo chance it ſeems enjoin'd)
Did male and female, propagate their kind. Blackmore.

ADU'LT. n. ſ. A perſon above the age of infancy, or grown to ſome degree of ſtrength; ſometimes full grown: a word uſed chiefly by medicinal writers.

The depreſſion of the cranium, without a fracture, can but ſeldom occur; and then it happens to children, whoſe bones are more pliable and ſoft than thoſe of adults. Sharp.

ADU'LTNESS. n. ſ. [from adult.] The ſtate of being adult. See ADOLESCENCE. Dict.

To ADU'LTER. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adultero, Lat.] To commit adultery with another: a word not claſſical.

Adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath pluckt on France.
Shakeſp. King John.

2. To corrupt by ſome foreign admixture; to contaminate.

Common pot-aſhes, bought of them that ſell it in ſhops, who are not ſo fooliſhly knaviſh, as to adulterate them with ſaltpetre, which is much dearer than pot-aſhes. Boyle.

Could a man be compoſed to ſuch an advantage of conſtitu-

tion, that it ſhould not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this ſecond nature would alter the craſis of his underſtanding. Glanville's Sceptſis Scientifica.

The preſent war has ſo adulterated our tongue with ſtrange words, that it would be impoſſible for one of our great grandfathers to know what his poſterity have been doing. Spect.

ADU'LTERATED. adj. [from to adulterate.]

1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.

I am poſſeſs'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the grime of luſt;
Being ſtrumpeted by thy contagion. Shakeſp.
—That inceſtuous, that adulterate beaſt. Shakeſp.

2. Corrupted with ſome foreign mixture.

It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vender of them. Govern. of the Tongue.

They will have all their gold and ſilver, and may keep their adulterate copper at home; for we are determined not to purchaſe it with our manufactures. Swift's Miſcellanies.

ADU'LTERATENESS. n. ſ. [from adulterate.] The quality or ſtate of being adulterate, or counterfeit.

ADULTERA'TION. n. ſ. [from adulterate.]

1. The act of adulterating or corrupting by foreign mixture; contamination.

To make the compound paſs for the rich metal ſimple, is an adulteration, or counterfeiting: but if it be done avowedly, and without diſguiſing, it may be a great ſaving of the richer metal. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

2. The ſtate of being adulterated, or contaminated.

Such tranſlations are like the adulteration of the nobleſt wines, where ſomething of the colour, ſpirit, and flavour, will remain; and, while they pleaſe ſome injudicious palates, do only raiſe the indignation of every good taſte. Felton.

ADU'LTERER. n. ſ. [adulter, Lat.] The perſon guilty of adultery.

With what impatience muſt the muſe behold,
The wife by her procuring huſband ſold;
For tho' the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may ſucceed. Dryd.

ADU'LTRESS. n. ſ. [from adulterer,] A woman that commits adultery.

The Spartan lady replied, when ſhe was aſked, What was the puniſhment for adultreſſes? There are no ſuch things here. Government of the Tongue.

A robe of tiſſue, ſtiff with golden wire;
An upper veſt, once Helen's rich attire;
From Argos by the fam'd adultreſs brought;
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought. Dryd.

ADU'LTEROUS. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

Th' adulterous Antony, moſt large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull,
That noſes it againſt us. Shakeſpeare.

An adulterous perſon is tied to reſtitution of the injury, ſo far as it is reparable; and to make proviſion for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate. Taylor.

Think on whoſe faith th' adulterous youth rely'd;
Who promis'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride? Dryd.

ADU'LTERY. n. ſ. [adulterium, Lat.] The act of violating the bed of a married perſon.

All thy domeſtick griefs at home be left,
The wife's adultery, with the ſervants theft;
And (the moſt racking thought which can intrude)
Forget falſe friends, and their ingratitude. Dryd.

ADU'MBRANT. adj. [from adumbrate.] That which gives a ſlight reſemblance.

To ADU'MBRATE. v. a. [adumbro, Lat.]

To ſhadow out; to give a ſlight likeneſs; to exhibit a faint reſemblance, like that which ſhadows afford of the bodies which they repreſent.

Heaven is deſigned for our reward, as well as reſcue; and therefore is adumbrated by all thoſe poſitive excellencies, which can endear or recommend. Decay of Piety.

ADUMBRA'TION. n. ſ. [from adumbrate.]

1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a ſlight and imperfect repreſentation. See ADUMBRATE.

To make ſome adumbration of that we mean, the interiour is rather an impulſion or contuſion of the air, than an eliſion or ſection of the ſame. Bacon's Natural Hiſt.

2. The ſlight and imperfect repreſentation of a thing; a faint ſketch.

The obſervers view but the backſide of the hangings; the right one is on the other ſide the grave: and our knowledge is but like thoſe broken ends; at beſt a moſt confuſed adumbration. Glanville's Sceptſis Scientifica.

Thoſe of the firſt ſort have ſome adumbration of the rational nature, as vegetables have of the ſenſible. Holes.

ADUNA'TION. n. ſ. [from ad and unus, Lat.] The ſtate of being united; union: a word of little uſe.

When, by glaciation, wood, ſtraw, duſt, and water, are ſuppoſed to be united into one lump, the cold does not cauſe any real union or aduna'tion, but only hardening the aqueous parts of the liquor into ice; the other bodies, being accidentally preſent in that liquor, are frozen up in it, but not really united. Boyle.

ADU'NCITY. n. ſ. [aduncitas, Lat.] Crookedneſs; flexure inwards; hookedneſs.

There can be no queſtion, but the aduncity of the pounces, and beaks of the hawks, is the cauſe of the great and habitual immorality of thoſe animals. Arbuthnot.

ADU'NQUE. adj. [aduncus, Lat.] Crooked; bending inwards; hooked.

The birds that are ſpeakers, are parrots, pies, jays, doves, and ravens; of which parrots have an adunque bill, but the reſt not. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

A'DVOCACY. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The act of pleading; vindication; defence; apology: a word of little uſe.

If any there are who are of opinion, that there are no antipodes, or that the ſtars do fall, they ſhall not want herein the applauſe or advocacy of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'DVOCATE. n. ſ. [advocatus, Lat.]

1. He that pleads the cauſe of another in a court of judicature.

An advocate, in the general import of the word, is that perſon who has the pleading and management of a judicial cauſe. In a ſtrict way of ſpeaking, only that perſon is ſtiled advocate, who is the patron of the cauſe, and is often, in Latin, termed togatus, and, in Engliſh, a perſon of the long robe. Ayl. Par.

Learn what thou ow'ſt thy country and thy friend;
What's requiſite to ſpare, and what to ſpend:
Learn this; and, after, envy not the ſtore
Of the greas'd advocate that grinds the poor. Dryden.

2. He that pleads any cauſe, in whatever manner, as a controvertiſt or vindicator.

If ſhe dares truſt me with her little babe,
I'll ſhew't the king, and undertake to be
Her advocate to the loudeſt. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Of the ſeveral forms of government that have been, or are, in the world, that cauſe ſeems commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by freſher experience. Temple's Miſcellanies.

3. It is uſed with the particle for before the perſon or thing, in whoſe favour the plea is offered.

Foes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone. Pope.

4. In the ſcriptural and ſacred ſenſe, it ſtands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.

Me his advocate,
And propitiation; all his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft. Milton.

ADVOCA'TION. n. ſ. [from advocate.] The office of pleading; plea; apology.

Alas! thrice gentle Caſſio,
My advocation is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor ſhould I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour alter'd. Shakeſp.

ADVOLA'TION. n. ſ. [advolo, advolatum, Lat.] The act of flying to ſomething Dict.

ADVOLU'TION. n. ſ. [advolutio, Lat.] The act of rolling to ſomething.

ADVOU'TRY. n. ſ. [avoutrie, Fr.] Adultery.

He was the moſt perfidious man upon the earth, and he had made a marriage compounded between an advoutry and a rape. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADVOWE'. n. ſ. He that has the right of advowſon. See ADVOWSON.

ADVO'WSON, or ADVO'WZEN. n. ſ. [In common law.]

A right to preſent to a benefice, and ſignifies as much as Jus Patronatûs. In the canon law, it is ſo termed, becauſe they that originally obtained the right of preſenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto; and are therefore termed ſometimes Patroni, ſometimes Advocati. Cowell.

To ADU'RE. v. n. [adure, Lat.] To burn up.

Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor ſcorch, doth mellow, and not adure. Bacon.

ADU'ST. adj. [aduſtus, Lat.]

1. Burnt up; hot as with fire, ſcorched.

By this means, the virtual heat of the water will enter; and ſuch a heat as will not make the body aduſt, or fragile. Bacon.

Which with torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air aduſt,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton.

2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philoſophical ſenſe, to the complexion and humours of the body.

Such humours are aduſt, as, by long heat, become of a hot and fiery nature, as choler, and the like. Quincy.

To eaſe the ſoul of one oppreſſive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a ſtate.
The ſame aduſt complexion has impell'd
Charles to the convent, Philip to the field. Pope.

ADU'STED. adj. [See ADUST.]

1. Burnt; ſcorch'd; dried with fire.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam
They found, they mingled, and with ſubtle art,
Concocted, and aduſted, they reduc'd
To blackeſt grain, and into ſtore convey'd. Parad. Loſt.

2. Hot,

2. Hot, as the complexion.

In regard they are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit, Helia needs not much care for them; besides, she must give losers leave to speak. Howell.

ADU'STIBLE. adj. [from adust.] That which may be adusted, or burnt up. Dict.

ADU'STION. n. s. [from adust.] The act of burning up, or drying, as by fire.

This is ordinarily a consequent of a burning colliquative fever; the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion, upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Harvey on Consumptions.

ADZ n. s. See ADDICE.

AE, or Æ. A diphthong of very frequent use in the Latin language, which seems not properly to have any place in the English; since the æ of the Saxons has been long out of use, being changed to e simple, to which, in words frequently occurring, the æ of the Romans is, in the same manner, altered, as in equater, equinoctial, and even in Eneas.

Æ'GLOGUE. n. s. [written instead of eclogue, from a mistaken etymology. A pastoral; a dialogue in verse between goatherds.

Which moved him rather in æglogues otherwise to write, doubting, perhaps, his ability, which he little needed, or minding to furnish our tongue with this kind wherein it faulteth. Spenser's Pastorals.

Æ'GILOPS. n. s. [αἴγιλωψ, Gr. signifying goat-eyed, the goat being subject to this ailment.]

A tumour or swelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the nose, either with or without an inflammation: a so a plant so called, for its supposed virtues against such a distemper. Quincy.

Ægilops is a tubercle in the inner canthus of the eye. Wiseman's Surgery.

ÆGYPTI'ACUM. n. s. An ointment consisting only of honey, verdigrease and vinegar. Quincy.

ÆL, or EAL, or AL.

In compound names, as πᾶς in the Greek compounds, signifies all, or altogether. So Ælwin is a compleat conqueror: Albert, all illustrious: Aldred, altogether reverend: Alfred, altogether peaceful. To these Pammachius, Pancratius, Pamphilius, &c. do in some measure answer. Gibson's Camden.

ÆLF, (which, according to various dialects, is pronounced ulf, wolf, hulph, hilp, helfe, and, at this day, helpe) implies assistance. So Ælfwin is victorious, and Ælfwold, an auxiliary governour; Ælfsa, a lender of assistance: with which Beetius, Symmachus, Erasmus, &c. bear a plain analogy. Gibson's Camden.

ÆNI'GMA. See ENIGMA.

AE'RIAL. adj. [aërius, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the air, as consisting of it.

The thunder, when to roll
With terrour through the dark aerial hall. Paradise Lost.

From all that can with fins or feathers fly,
Thro' the aerial or the watry sky. Prior.

I gathered the thickness of the air, or aerial interval, of the glasses at that ring. Newton's Opticks.

Vegetables abound more with aerial particles, than animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Produced by the air.

The gifts of heav'n my following song pursues,
Aerial honey and ambrosial dews. Dryd. Virg. Georg.

3. Inhabiting the air.

Where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd,
In regions mild, of calm and serene air. Paradise Regained.

Aerial animals may be subdivided into birds and flies. Locke.

4. Placed in the air.

Here subterranean works and cities see,
There towns aerial on the waving tree. Pope's Essay on Man.

5. High; elevated in situation, and therefore in the air.

A spacious city stood, with firmest walls,
Sure mounded, and with numerous turrets crown'd,
Aerial spires, and citadels, the seat
Of kings and heroes resolute in war. Philips.

AE'RIE. n. s. [aire, Fr.]

The proper word in hawks, and other birds of prey, for that which we generally call a nest in other birds. Cowel.

ÆTHIOPS-MINERAL. n. s.

A medicine so called, from its dark colour, prepared of quicksilver and sulphur, ground together in a marble mortar to a black powder. Such as have used it most, think its virtues not very great. Quincy.

ÆTITES. n. s. [ἀετός, an eagle.] Eagle-stone. It is about the bigness of a chesnut, and hollow, with somewhat in it that rattles upon shaking. Quincy.

AFA'R. adv. [from a for at, and far.] See FAR.

1. At a great distance.

So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frighted peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils,
To be commenc'd in strouds afar remote? Shakspeare's Henry IV.

We hear better when we hold our breath than contrary; insomuch as in listening to attain a sound afar off, men hold their breath. Bacon's Natural History, N° 284.

2. To a great distance.

Hector hastened to relieve his boy;
Dismiss'd his burnish'd helm that shone afar,
The pride of warriours, and the pomp of war. Dryd.

3. From afar; from a distant place.

The rough Vulturnus, furious in its course,
With rapid streams divides the fruitful grounds,
And from afar in hollow murmur sounds. Addison on Italy.

4. Afar off; remotely distant.

Much suspecting his secret ends, he entertained a treaty of peace with France, but secretly and afar off, and to be governed as occasions should vary. Sir John Hayward.

AFE'ARD. particip. adj. [from to fear, for to fright, with a redundant.]

1. Frighted; terrified; afraid.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made afeard. Fairy Queen.

But tell me, Hal, art thou not horridly afeard? Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as Douglas, Percy, and Glendower. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Till he cherish'd too much beard,
And make love, or me afeard. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.

2. It has the particle of before the object of fear.

I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers. Pope.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging, disposing, and managing all human affairs. Watts's Logick.

What St. John's ſkill in ſtate affairs,
What Ormond's valour, Oxford's cares,
To aid their ſinking country lent,
Was all deſtroy'd by one event. Swift.

To AFFE'AR. v. n. [from affier, Fr.] To confirm; to give a ſanction to; to eſtabliſh: an old term of law.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy baſis ſure;
For goodneſs dares not check thee!
His title is affear'd. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

AFFE'CT. n. ſ. [from the verb affect.]

1. Affection; paſſion; ſenſation.

It ſeemeth that as the feet have a ſympathy with the head; ſo the wriſts have a ſympathy with the heart; we ſee the affects and paſſions of the heart and ſpirits are notably diſcloſed by the pulſe. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

2. Quality; circumſtance.

I find it difficult to make out one ſingle ulcer, as authors deſcribe it, without other ſymptoms or affects joined to it. Wiſem.

This is only the antiquated word for affection.

To AFFE'CT. v. a. [affecter, Fr. afficio, affectum, Lat.]

1. To act upon; to produce effects in any other thing.

The ſun
Had firſt his precept ſo to move, ſo ſhine,
As might affect the earth with cold, and heat,
Scarce tolerable. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The generality of men are wholly governed by names, in matters of good and evil; ſo far as theſe qualities relate to, and affect, the actions of men. South's Sermons.

Yet even thoſe two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the ſame force and vigour, as they would do at the ſame diſtance in any other ſituation imaginable. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To move the paſſions.

As a thinking man cannot but be very much affected with the idea of his appearing in the preſence of that Being, whom none can ſee and live; he muſt be much more affected, when he conſiders, that this Being whom he appears before, will examine the actions of his life, and reward or puniſh him accordingly. Addiſon's Spectator.

3. To aim at; to endeavour after: ſpoken of perſons.

Atrides broke
His ſilence next, but ponder'd ere he ſpoke:
Wiſe are thy words and glad I would obey,
But this proud man affects imperial ſway. Dryden.

4. To tend to; to endeavour after: ſpoken of things.

The drops of every fluid affect a round figure, by the mutual attraction of their parts; as, the globe of the earth and ſea affects a round figure, by the mutual attraction of its parts by gravity. Newton's Opticks.

5. To be fond of; to be pleaſed with; to love; to regard with fondneſs.

That little which ſome of the heathen did chance to hear, concerning ſuch matter as the ſacred Scripture plentifully containeth, they did in wonderful ſort affect. Hooker.

There is your crown;
And he that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience riſe. Shakeſp.

Think not that wars we love, and ſtrife affect;
Or that we hate ſweet peace. Fairfax.

None but a woman could a man direct
To tell us women what we moſt affect. Dryd.

6. To make a ſhew of ſomething; to ſtudy the appearance of any thing; with ſome degree of hypocriſy.

Another nymph, amongſt the many fair,
Before the reſt affected ſtill to ſtand,
And watch'd my eye preventing my command. Prior.

Theſe often carry the humour ſo far, till their affected coldneſs and indifference quite kills all the fondneſs of a lover. Addiſon's Spectator.

The conſcious huſband, whom like ſymptoms ſeize,
Charges on her the guilt of their diſeaſe;
Affecting fury, acts a madman's part,
He'll rip the fatal ſecret from her heart. Granville.

7. To imitate in an unnatural and conſtrained manner.

Spenſer, in affecting the ancients, writ no language; yet I would have him read for his matter, but as Virgil read Ennius. Ben. Johnſon's Diſcoveries.

8. To convict of ſome crime; to attaint with guilt: a phraſe merely juridical.

By the civil law, if a dowry with a wife be promiſed and not paid, the huſband is not obliged to allow her alimony. But if her parents ſhall become inſolvent by ſome misfortune, ſhe ſhall have alimony, unleſs you can affect them with fraud, in promiſing what they knew they were not able to perform. Ayliffe's Parergon.

AFFECTA'TION. n. ſ. [affectatio, Lat.] The act of making an artificial appearance.

In things of their own nature indifferent, if either councils or particular men have at any time, with ſound judgment, miſliked conformity between the church of God and infidels, the cauſe thereof hath been ſomewhat elſe than only affectation of diſſimilitude. Hooker.

It has been, from age to age, an affectation to love the pleaſure of ſolitude, among thoſe who cannot poſſibly be ſuppoſed qualified for paſſing life in that manner. Spectator.

AFFE'CTED. participial adj. [from affect.]

1. Moved; touched with affection; internally diſpoſed or inclined.

No marvel then if he were ill affected;
'Tis they have put him on the old man's death,
To have th' expence and waſte of his revenues.
Shakeſp. King Lear.

He was aſſured, that the model they ſeemed affected to in their directory, was not like to any of their foreign reformed churches now in the world. Clarendon.

2. Studied with over-much care, or with hypocritical appearance.

Theſe antick, liſping affected phantaſies, theſe new tuners of accents. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

3. In a perſonal ſenſe, full of affectation; as, an affected lady.

AFFE'CTEDLY. adv. [from affected.] In an affected manner; hypocritically; with more appearance than reality.

Perhaps they are affectedly ignorant; they are ſo willing it ſhould be true, that they have not attempted to examine it, Government of the Tongue.

Some indeed have been ſo affectedly vain, as to counterfeit immortality, and have ſtolen their death, in hopes to be eſteemed immortal. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

By talking ſo familiarly of one hundred and ten thouſand pounds, by a tax upon a few commodities, it is plain, you are either naturally or affectedly ignorant of our condition. Swift.

AFFE'CTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from affected.] The quality of being affected, or of making falſe appearances.

AFFE'CTION. n. ſ. [affection, Fr. affectio, Lat.]

1. The ſtate of being affected by any cauſe, or agent. This general ſenſe is little in uſe.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe ſings i'th' noſe,
Cannot contain their urine, for affection.
Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

2. Paſſion of any kind.

Then gan the palmer thus: moſt wretched man,
That to affections does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But ſoon through ſufferance grow to fearful end. Fairy Q.

Impute it to my late ſolitary life, which is prone to affections. Sidney.

Affections, as joy, grief, fear, and anger, with ſuch like, being, as it were, the ſundry faſhions and forms of appetite, can neither riſe at the conceit of a thing indifferent, nor yet chooſe but riſe at the ſight of ſome things. Hooker.

To ſpeak truth of Cæſar,
I have not known when his affections ſway'd
More than his reaſon. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

Zeal ought to be compoſed of the higheſt degrees of pious affections; of which ſome are milder and gentler, ſome ſharper and more vehement. Sprat's Sermons.

I can preſent nothing beyond this to your affections, to excite your love and deſire. Tillotſon.

3. Love; kindneſs; good-will to ſome perſon; often with to, or toward, before the perſon.

I have acquainted you
With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath anſwer'd my affection.
Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

My king is tangl'd in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shakeſp.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of theſe princely ſuitors? Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.

Make his intereſt depend upon mutual affection and good correſpondence with others. Collier on General Kindneſs.

Nor at firſt ſight, like moſt, admires the fair;
For you he lives, and you alone ſhall ſhare
His laſt affection, as his early care. Pope.

4. Good-will to any object; zeal; paſſionate regard.

I have reaſon to diſtruſt mine own judgment, as that which may be overborn by my zeal and affection to this cauſe. Bacon's Holy War.

Set your affection upon my words; deſire them, and ye ſhall be inſtructed. Wiſdom.

His integrity to the king was without blemiſh, and his affection to the church ſo notorious, that he never deſerted it. Cla.

All the precepts of chriſtianity command us to moderate our paſſions, to temper our affections towards all things below. Temple.

Let not the mind of a ſtudent be under the influence of warm affection to things of ſenſe, when he comes to the ſearch of truth. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

5. State of the mind, in general.

There grows,
In my moſt ill compos'd affection, ſuch

A ſtanchleſs avarice, that, were I king,
I ſhould cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakeſpeare.
The man that hath no muſick in himſelf,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of ſweet ſounds,
Is fit for treaſons, ſtratagems, and ſpoils;
The motions of his ſpirit are dull as night,
And his affection dark as Erebus:
Let no ſuch man be truſted. Shakeſpeare.

6. Quality; property.

The certainty and accurateneſs which is attributed to what they deliver, muſt be reſtrained to what they teach, concerning thoſe purely mathematical diſciplines, arithmetick and geometry, where the affections of quantity are abſtractedly conſidered. Boyle.

The mouth being neceſſary to conduct the voice to the ſhape of its cavity, neceſſarily gives the voice ſome particular affection of ſound in its paſſage before it come to the lips. Holder's Elements of Speech.

God may have joined immaterial ſouls to other kinds of bodies, and in other laws of union; and, from thoſe different laws of union, there will ariſe quite different affections, and natures, and ſpecies of the compound beings. Bentley's Sermons.

7. State of the body, as acted upon by any cauſe.

It ſeemed to me a venereal gonorrhœa, and others thought it aroſe from ſome ſcorbutical affection. Wiſeman's Surgery.

8. Lively repreſentation in painting.

Affection is the lively repreſentment of any paſſion whatſoever, as if the figures ſtood not upon a cloth or board, but as if they were acting upon a ſtage. Wotton's Architecture.

AFFE'CTIONATE. adj. [affectionné, Fr. from affection.]

1. Full of affection; ſtrongly moved; warm; zealous.

In their love of God, and deſire to pleaſe him, men can never be too affectionate; and it is as true, that, in their hatred of ſin, men may be ſometimes too paſſionate. Sprat's Sermons.

2. Strongly inclined to; diſpoſed to; with the particle to.

As for the parliament, it preſently took fire, being affectionate, of old, to the war of France. Bacon.

3. Fond; tender.

He found me ſitting, beholding this picture, I know not with how affectionate countenance, but, I am ſure, with a moſt affectionate mind. Sidney.

Away they fly
Affectionate, and undeſiring bear
The moſt delicious morſel to their young. Thomſon.

4. Benevolent; tender.

When we reflect on all this affectionate care of providence for our happineſs, with what wonder muſt we obſerve the little effect it has on men. Rogers's Sermons.

AFFE'CTIONATELY. adv. [from affectionate.] In an affectionate manner; fondly; tenderly; benevolently.

AFFE'CTIONATENESS. n. ſ. [from affectionate.] The quality or ſtate of being affectionate; fondneſs; tenderneſs; good-will; benevolence.

AFFI'ANCE. n. ſ. [affiance, from affier, Fr.]

1. A marriage-contract.

At laſt ſuch grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my ſpouſe had won,
Accord of friends, conſent of parents ſought,
Affiance made, my happineſs begun. Fairy Queen.

2. Truſt in general; confidence; ſecure reliance.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given
To dream on evil, or to work my downfal.—
—Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrowed.
Shakeſpeare.

3. Truſt in the divine promiſes and protection. To this ſenſe it is now almoſt confined.

It receives him into a covenant of grace, where there is pardon reached out to all truly penitent ſinners, and aſſiſtance promiſed, and engaged, and beſtowed upon very eaſy conditions, viz. humility, prayer, and affiance in him: Hammond.

There can be no ſurer way to ſucceſs, than by diſclaiming all confidence in ourſelves, and referring the events of things to God with an implicit affiance. Atterbury's Sermons.

To AFFI'ANCE. v. a. [from the noun affiance.]

1. To betroth; to bind any one by promiſe to marriage.

To me, ſad maid, or rather widow ſad,
He was affianced long time before,
And ſacred pledges he both gave and had;
Falſe, errant knight, infamous, and forſworn. Fairy Queen.

Her ſhould Angelo have married; was affianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract, and limit of the ſolemnity, his brother was wrecked, having, in that veſſel, the dowry of his ſiſter. Shakeſpeare.

2. To give confidence.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, ſecure y reſt,

Thou doſt deliver more or leſs than truth,
Thou art no ſoldier. Shakeſpeare.

AFFI'NITY. n. ſ. [affinité, Fr. from affinis, Lat.]

1. Relation by marriage; relation contracted by the huſband to the kindred of the wife, and by the wife to thoſe of the huſband. It is oppoſed to conſanguinity, or relation by birth.

In this ſenſe it has ſometimes the particle with, and ſometimes to, before the perſon to whom the relation is contracted.

And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter. 1 Kings, iii. 1.

They had left none alive, who had ſet his hand to their ſervitude, by the blindneſs of rage killing many guiltleſs perſons, either for affinity to the tyrant, or enmity to the tyrant-killers. Sidney, b, ii.

A breach firſt with Spain, and not long after with France itſelf, notwithſtanding ſo ſtrait an affinity, ſo lately treated with the one, and actually accompliſhed with the other; as if indeed (according to that pleaſant maxim of ſtate) kingdoms were never married. Wotton.

2. Relation to; connexion with; reſemblance to: ſpoken of things.

The Britiſh tongue, or Welſh, as we now call it, was in uſe only in this iſland, having great affinity with the old Gallick. Camden.

All things that have affinity with the heavens, move upon the center of another, which they benefit. Bacon.

The art of painting hath wonderful affinity with that of poetry. Dryden.

Man is more diſtinguiſhed by devotion than by reaſon, as ſeveral brute creatures diſcover ſomething like reaſon, though they betray not any thing that bears the leaſt affinity to devotion. Addiſon.

To AFFI'RM. v. n. [affirmo, Lat.] To declare; to tell confidently: oppoſed to the word deny.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salike lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elve. Shakeſpeare.

To AFFI'RM. v. a. To ratify or approve a former law, or judgment: oppoſed to reverſe or repeal.

The houſe of peers hath a power of judicature in ſome caſes, properly to examine and then to affirm; or, if there be cauſe, to reverſe the judgments which have been given in the court of king's bench. Bacon.

In this ſenſe we ſay, to affirm the truth.

AFFI'RMABLE. adj. [from affirm.] That which may be affirmed.

Thoſe attributes and conceptions that were applicable and affirmable of him when preſent, are now affirmable and applicable to him though paſt. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

AFFI'RMANCE n. ſ. [from affirm.] Confirmation: oppoſed to repeal.

This ſtatute did but reſtore an ancient ſtatute, which was itſelf alſo made but in affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

AFFI'RMANT. n. ſ. [from affirm.] The perſon that affirms; a declarer. Dict.

AFFIRMA'TION. n. ſ. [affirmatio, Lat.]

1. The act of affirming or declaring: oppoſed to negation or denial.

This gentleman vouching, upon warrant of bloody affirmation, his to be more virtuous, and leſs attemptable, than any of our ladies. Shakeſpeare.

2. The poſition affirmed.

That he ſhall receive no benefit from Chriſt, is the affirmation, whereon his deſpair is founded; and one way of removing this diſmal apprehenſion, is, to convince him, that Chriſt's death, if he perform the condition required, ſhall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Confirmation: oppoſed to repeal.

The learned in the laws of our land obſerve, that our ſtatutes ſometimes are only the affirmation, or ratification, of that which, by common law, was held before. Hooker.

AFFI'RMATIVE. adj. [from affirm.]

1. That which affirms, oppoſed to negative; in which we uſe the affirmative, that is, the affirmative poſition.

For the affirmative, we are now to anſwer ſuch proofs of theirs as have been before alleged. Hooker.

Whether there are ſuch beings or not, 'tis ſufficient for my purpoſe, that many have believed the affirmative. Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

2. That which can or may be affirmed: a ſenſe uſed chiefly in ſcience.

As in algebra, where affirmative quantities vaniſh or ceaſe, there negative ones begin: ſo in mechanicks, where attraction ceaſes, there a repulſive virtue ought to ſucceed. Newt. Opt.

3. Applied to perſons; he who has the habit of affirming with vehemence; poſitive; dogmatical.

Be not confident and affirmative in an uncertain matter, but report things modeſtly and temperately, according to the degree of that perſuaſion, which is, or ought to be, begotten by the efficacy of the authority, or the reaſon, inducing thee. Taylor.

AFFI'RMATIVELY. adv. [from affirmative.] In an affirmative manner; on the poſitive ſide; not negatively.

The reaſon of man hath no ſuch reſtraint: concluding not only affirmatively, but negatively; not only affirming, there is no magnitude beyond the laſt heavens, but alſo denying there is any vacuity within them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AFFI'RMER. n. ſ. [from affirm.] The perſon that affirms.

If by the word virtue, the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier, by the word virtue, means only courage, or, at moſt, our duty toward our neighbour, without including, in the idea of it, the duty which we owe to God. Watts's Logick.

To AFFI'X. v. a. [affigo, affixum, Lat.] To unite to the end, or à poſteriori; to ſubjoin.

He that has ſettled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to diſcern their differences one from another. Locke.

If men conſtantly affixed applauſe and diſgrace where they ought, this principle would have a very good influence on the publick conduct of men; though on ſecret villanies it lays no reſtraint. Rogers's Sermons.

AFFI'X. n. ſ. [affixum, Lat.] A term of grammar; ſomething united to the end of a word.

In the Hebrew language, the noun has its affixa, to denote the pronouns poſſeſſive or relative. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

To AFFLI'CT. v. a. [affligo, afflictum, Lat.]

1. To put to pain; to grieve; to torment.

In the ſeventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye ſhall afflict your ſouls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a ſtranger that ſojourneth among you. Leviticus, xvi. 29.

Give not over thy mind to heavineſs, and afflict not thyſelf in thine own counſel. Eccluſ, xxx. 21.

For a father afflicted with untimely mourning, when he hath made an image of his child ſoon taken away, now honoured him as a God, which was then a dead man, and delivered to thoſe that were under him, ceremonies and ſacrifices. Wiſdom.

It teacheth us, how God thought fit to plague and afflict them, it doth not appoint in what form and manner we ought to puniſh the ſin of idolatry in others. Hooker.

O coward conſcience! how doſt thou afflict me?
The lights burn blue—Is it not dead midnight?
Cold fearful drops ſtand on my trembling fleſh.
Shakeſp. Richard III.

A melancholy tear afflicts my eye,
And my heart labours with a ſudden ſigh. Prior.

2. The paſſive to be afflicted, has often at before the cauſal noun.

The mother was ſo afflicted at the loſs of a fine boy, who was her only ſon, that ſhe died for grief of it. Addiſon.

AFFLIC'TEDNESS. n. ſ. [from afflicted.] The ſtate of affliction, or of being afflicted; ſorrowfulneſs; grief.

AFFLI'CTER. n. ſ. [from afflict.] The perſon that afflicts.

AFFLI'CTION. n. ſ. [affliction, Lat.]

1. The cauſe of pain or ſorrow; calamity.

To the fleſh, as the Apoſtle himſelf granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous: therefore nature, which cauſeth fear, teacheth to pray againſt all adverſity. Hooker.

We'll bring you to Windſor, to one Mr. Brook, that you have cozened of money; I think, to repay that money will be a biting affliction. Shakeſpeare.

2. The ſtate of ſorrowfulneſs; miſery: oppoſed to proſperity.

Beſides you know,
Proſperity's the very bond of love,
Whoſe freſh complexion, and whoſe heart together
Affliction alters. Shakeſpeare.

Where ſhall we find the man that bears affliction,
Great and majeſtic in his griefs, like Cato? Addiſon.

Some virtues are only ſeen in affliction, and ſome in proſperity. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 257.

AFFLI'CTIVE. adj. [from afflict.] That which cauſes affliction; painful; tormenting.

They found martyrdom a duty dreſſed up indeed with all that was terrible and afflictive to human nature, yet not at all the leſs a duty. South.

Nor find
Where to retire themſelves, or where appeaſe
Th' afflictive keen deſire of food, expos'd
To winds, and ſtorms, and jaws of ſavage death. Philips.

Reſtleſs Proſerpine—
—On the ſpacious land and liquid main,
Spreads ſlow diſeaſe, and darts afflictive pain. Prior.

A'FFLUENCE. n. ſ. [affluence, Fr. affluentia, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to any place; concourſe. It is almoſt always uſed figuratively.

I ſhall not relate the affluence of young nobles from hence into Spain, after the voice of our prince being there had been noiſed. Wotton.

2. Exuberance of riches; ſtream of wealth; plenty.

Thoſe degrees of fortune, which give fulneſs and affluence to one ſtation, may be want and penury in another. Rogers.

Let joy or eaſe, let affluence or content,
And the gay conſcience of a life well ſpent,
Calm ev'ry thought, inſpirit ev'ry grace. Pope.

A'FFLUENCY. n. ſ. The ſame with affluence.

A'FFLUENT. adj. [affluent, Fr. affluens, Lat.]

1. Flowing to any part.

Theſe parts are no more than foundation-piles of the enſuing body; which are afterwards to be increaſed and raiſed to a greater bulk by the affluent blood, that is tranſmitted out of the mother's body. Harvey.

2. Abundant: exuberant; wealthy.

I ſee thee, Lord and end of my deſire,
Loaded and bleſt with all the affluent ſtore,
Which human vows at ſmoaking ſhrines implore. Prior.

A'FFLUENTNESS. n. ſ. [from affluent.] The quality of being affluent. Dict.

A'FFLUX. n. ſ. [affluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to ſome place; affluence.
2. That which flows to another place.

The cauſe hereof cannot be a ſupply by procreations; ergo, it muſt be by new affluxes to London out of the country. Graunt.

The infant grows bigger out of the womb, by agglutinating one afflux of blood to another. Harvey.

AFFLU'XION. n. ſ [affluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to a particular place.
2. That which flows from one place to another.

An inflammation either ſimple, conſiſting of an hot and ſanguineous affluxion, or elſe denominable from other humours, according unto the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To AFFO'RD. v. a. [affourrer, affourrager, Fr.]

1. To yield or produce; as, the ſoil affords grain; the trees afford fruits. This ſeems to be the primitive ſignification.
2. To grant, or confer any thing; generally in a good ſenſe, and ſometimes in a bad, not properly.

So ſoon as Maurmon there arrived, the door
To him did open, and afforded way. Fairy Queen.

This is the conſolation of all good men, unto whom his ubiquity affordeth continual comfort and ſecurity; and this is the affliction of hell, to whom it affordeth deſpair and remedileſs calamity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. To be able to ſell. It is uſed always with reference to ſome certain price; as, I can afford this for leſs than the other.

They fill their magazines in times of the greateſt plenty, that ſo they may afford cheaper, and increaſe the public revenue at a ſmall expence of its members. Addiſon on Italy.

4. To be able to bear expences; as, traders can afford more finery in peace than war.

The ſame errors run through all families, where there is wealth enough to afford that their ſons may be good for nothing. Swift.

To AFFO'REST. v. a. [afforeſtare, Lat.] To turn ground into foreſt.

It appeareth, by Charta de Foreſta, that he afforeſted many woods and waſtes, to the grievance of the ſubject, which by that law were diſafforeſted. Davies.

AFFORESTA'TION. n. ſ. [from afforeſt.]

The charter de Foreſta was to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II. who had made new afforeſtations, and much extended the rigour of the foreſt laws. Hale.

To AFFRA'NCHISE. v. a. [affranchir, Fr.] To make free.

To AFFRA'Y. v. a. [effrayer, or effriger, Fr. which Menage derives from frayer; perhaps it comes from frigus.] To fright; to terrify; to ſtrike with fear. This word is not now in uſe.

The ſame to wight he never wou'd diſcloſe,
But when as monſters huge he would diſmay,
Or daunt unequal armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray. Fairy Queen.

AFFRA'Y, or AFFRAYMENT. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

A tumultuous aſſault of one or more perſons upon others; a law term. A battle: in this ſenſe it is written fray.

AFFRICTION. n. ſ. [affrictio, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have divers times obſerved, in wearing ſilver-hilted ſwords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affriction would quickly blacken them; and, congruouſly hereunto, I have found pens blacked almoſt all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a ſilver caſe. Boyle.

To AFFRI'GHT. v. a. [See FRIGHT.]

1. To affect with fear; to terrify: it generally implies a ſudden impreſſion of fear.

Thy name affrights me, in whoſe ſound is death. Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

God-like his courage ſeem'd, whom nor delight
Could ſoften, nor the face of death affright. Waller.

He, when his country (threaten'd with alarm)
Requires his courage and his conqu'ring arm,
Shall, more than once, the Punic bands affright. Dryd.

2. It is uſed in the paſſive, ſometimes with at before the thing feared.

Thou ſhalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you. Deut.

3. Sometimes with the particle with before the thing feared.

As one affright
With helliſh fiends, or furies mad uproar,
He then uproſe. Fairy Queen.

AFFRI'GHT. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Terrour; fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, cloathed with cloudy night,
Does ſhew to him, that walks in fear and ſad affright. F. Q.

Wide was his pariſh, not contracted cloſe
In ſtreets, but here and there a ſtraggling houſe;
Yet ſtill he was at hand, without requeſt,
To ſerve the ſick; to ſuccour the diſtreſs'd:
Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark tempeſtuous night. Dryden.

4. The cauſe of fear; a terrible object.

I ſee the gods
Upbraid our ſuff'rings, and would humble them,
By ſending theſe affrights, while we are here,
That we might laugh at their ridiculous fear. B. Johnſon.

The war at hand appears with more affright,
And riſes ev'ry moment to the ſight. Dryden.

AFFRI'GHTFUL. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terrour; terrible.

We ſhall find there is an abſence of all that is deſtructive or affrightful to human nature. Decay of Piety.

AFFRI'GHTMENT. n. ſ. [from affright.]

1. The impreſſion of fear; terrour.

Hearing ſhe was at reſt, he attended till ſhe ſhould awake of herſelf; which ſhe did with the affrightment of a dream. Wotton.

Paſſionate words or blows from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terrour and affrightment; which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impreſſion. Locke.

2. The ſtate of fearfulneſs.

Whether thoſe that, under any anguiſh of mind, return to affrightments, have not been hypocrites. Hammond.

To AFFRO'NT. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem ſtare; ad frontem & contumeliam allidere, to inſult a man to his face.]

1. To meet face to face; to encounter. This ſeems the genuine and original ſenſe of the word, which was formerly indifferent to good or ill.

We have cloſely ſent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia, Shakeſpeare.

The ſeditious, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway; whom when they found both ready and reſolute to fight, they deſired enterparlance, and in the mean-time they began to fortify. Hayward.

2. To meet, in an hoſtile manner, front to front.

His holy rites and ſolemn feaſts profan'd,
And with their darkneſs durſt affront his light. Milt.

3. To offer an open inſult; to offend avowedly. With reſpect to this ſenſe, it is obſerved by Cervantes, that, if a man ſtrikes another on the back, and then runs away, the perſon ſo ſtruck is injured, but not affronted; an affront always implying a juſtification of the act.

But harm precedes not ſin only our foe,
Tempting affronts us with his foul eſteem
Of our integrity. Milton.

I would learn the cauſe, why Torriſmond,
Within my palace walls, within my hearing,
Almoſt within my ſight, affronts a prince,
Who ſhortly ſhall command him. Dryden.

This brings to mind Fauſtina's fondneſs for the gladiator, and is interpreted as ſatire. But how can one imagine, the Fathers would dare to affront the wife of Aurelius. Addiſon.

AFFRO'NT. n. ſ. [from the verb affront.]

1. Inſult offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his ſon, Bacon.

You've done enough; for you deſign'd my chains:
The grace is vaniſh'd, but th' affront remains. Dryden.

He that is found reaſonable in one thing, is concluded to be ſo in all; and to think or ſay otherwiſe, is thought ſo unjuſt an affront, and ſo ſenſeleſs a cenſure, that no body ventures to do it. Locke.

There is nothing which we receive with ſo much reluctance as advice: we look upon the man who gives it us, as offering an affront to our underſtanding, and treating us like children or ideots. Addiſon.

2. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general ſenſe.

Oft have they violated
The temple, oft the law with foul affronts,
Abominations rather. Milton.

3. Open oppoſition; encounter: a ſenſe not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Far beyond
The ſons of Anak, famous now and blaz'd,
Fearleſs of danger, like a petty god
I walk'd about admir'd of all, and dreaded
On hoſtile ground, none daring my affront. Milt.

4. Diſgrace; ſhame. This ſenſe is rather peculiar to the Scottiſh dialect.

Antonius attacked the pirates of Crete, and, by his too great preſumption, was defeated; upon the ſenſe of which affront he died with grief. Arbuthnot.

AFFRO'NTER. n. ſ. [from affront.] The perſon that affronts.

AFFRO'NTING. participial adj. [from affront.] That which has the quality of affronting.

Among words which ſignify the ſame principal ideas, ſome are clean and decent, others unclean; ſome are kind, others are affronting and reproachful, becauſe of the ſecondary idea which cuſtom has affixed to them. Watts.

To AFFUSE. v. a. [affundo, affuſum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I fruitleſsly poured on them acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile ſalt or ſpirit, which would probably have diſcovered itſelf, by making an ebullition with the affuſed liquor. Boyle.

AFFU'SION. n. ſ. [affuſio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affuſion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink. Grew.

To AFFY'. v. a. [affier, Fr. affidare mulierem, Bracton.] To betroth in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthleſs king. Shakeſ.

To AFFY'. v. n. To put confidence in; to put truſt in.

Marcus Andronicus, ſo I do affy
In thy uprightneſs and integrity,
That I will here diſmiſs my loving friends. Shakeſp.

AFI'ELD. adv. [from a and field. See FIELD.] To the field.

We drove afield, and both together heard
What time the grey fly winds her ſultry horn,
Batt'ring our flocks with the freſh dews of night. Milton.

Afield I went, amid the morning dew,
To milk my kine, for ſo ſhould houſewives do. Gay.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and flat.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree, and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and caſt earth upon them; and every twig will take root. Bacon.

AFLO'AT. adv. [from a and float. See FLOAT.] Floating; born up in the water: in a figurative ſenſe, within view; in motion.

There

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in ſhallows and in miſeries.
On ſuch a full ſea as we are now afloat;
And we muſt take the current when it ſerves,
Or loſe our venture. Shakeſpeare.

Take any paſſion of the ſoul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and, juſt in the critical height of it, nick it with ſome lucky or unlucky word, and you may as certainly over-rule it to your own purpoſe, as a ſpark of fire, falling upon gun-powder, will infallibly blow it up. South.

There are generally ſeveral hundred loads afloat, for they begin to cut above twenty five leagues up the river above Hall; and there are other rivers that flow into the Inn, which bring in their contributions. Addiſon.

AFOOT. adv. [from a and foot.]

1. On foot; not on horſeback.

He thought it beſt to return, for that day, to a village not far off; and diſpatching his horſe in ſome ſort, the next day early, to come afoot thither. Shakeſpeare.

2. In action; as, a deſign is afoot.

I pr'ythee, when thou ſeeſt that act afoot,
Ev'n with the very comment of thy ſoul
Obſerve mine uncle. Shakeſpeare.

3. In motion.

Of Albany's and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not—
'Tis ſaid they are afoot. Shakeſpeare.

AFO'RE. prep. [from a and fore. See BEFORE.]

1. Before; nearer in place to any thing; as he ſtood afore him.

2. Sooner in time.

If your diligence be not ſpeedy, I ſhall be there afore you. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

AF'ORE. adv.

1. In time forgone or paſt.

1. Struck with fear; terrified; fearful.

So perſecute them with thy tempeſt, and make them afraid with thy ſtorm. Pſalms.

2. It has often the particle of before the object of fear.

There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguiſh of her ſpirit, thus ſhe pray'd. Dryden.

If, while this wearied fleſh draws fleeting breath,
Not ſatisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It hap'ly be thy will, that I ſhould know
Glimpſe of delight, or pauſe from anxious woe;
From now, from inſtant now, great Sire, diſpel
The clouds that preſs my ſoul. Prior.

AFRE'SH adv. [from a and freſh. See FRESH.] Anew; again, after intermiſſion.

The Germans now uſing no ſuch light horſemen, but ſerving upon great horſes, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by theſe light ſkirmiſhes; the Turks, with their light horſes, eaſily ſhunning their charge, and again, at their pleaſure, charging them afreſh, when they ſaw the heavy horſes almoſt weary. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

When once we have attained theſe ideas, they may be excited afreſh by the uſe of words. Watts's Logick.

A'FTER. adv.

1. In ſucceeding time. It is uſed of time mentioned as ſucceeding ſome other. So we cannot ſay, I ſhall be happy after, but hereafter; but we ſay, I was firſt made miſerable by the loſs, but was after happier.

Far be it from me, to juſtify the cruelties which were at firſt uſed towards them, which had their reward ſoon after. Bacon.

The chief were thoſe who, from the pit of hell
Roaming to ſeek their prey on earth, durſt fix
Their ſeats long after next the ſeat of God. Milton.

2. Following another.

Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, leſt it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakeſpeare.

After is compounded with many words, but almoſt always in its genuine and primitive ſignification; ſome, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

A'FTER ACCEPTATION. [from after and acceptation.] A ſenſe afterwards, not at firſt admitted.

'Tis true, ſome doctors in a ſcantier ſpace,
I mean, in each apart, contract the place:
Some, who to greater length extend the line,
The church's after acceptation join. Dryd. Hind and Panther.

A'FTERAGES. n. ſ. [from after and ages.] Succeſſive times; poſterity. This word has no ſingular.

Not the whole land, which the Chuſites ſhould, or might in future time, conquer; ſeeing, in afterages, they became lords of many nations. Raleigh.

Nor to philoſophers is praiſe deny'd,
Whoſe wiſe inſtructions afterages guide. Denham.

What an opinion will afterages entertain of their religion, who bid fair for a jibbet, by endeavouring to bring in a ſuperſtition, which their forefathers periſhed in flames to keep out. Addiſon's Freeholder.

A'FTER ALL. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at laſt; in fine in concluſion.

They have given no good proof in aſſerting this extravagant principle; for which, after all, they have no ground or colour, but a paſſage or two of ſcripture, miſerably perverted, in oppoſition to many expreſs texts. Atterbury.

But, after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to ſome good old authors, whoſe works I had leiſure to ſtudy. Pope on Paſtoral Poetry.

A'FTERBIRTH. n. ſ. [from after and birth.] The membrane in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after the ſecundine.

The exorbitances or degenerations of that, whether from a hurt in labour, or from part of the after-birth left behind, produce ſuch virulent diſtempers of the blood, as make it caſt out a tumour. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A'FTERCLAP. n. ſ. [from after and clap.] Unexpected events happening after an affair is ſuppoſed to be at an end.

For the next morrow's meed they closely went,
For fear of afterclaps to prevent. Spenser.

It is commonly taken in an ill sense.

A'FTERCOST. n. s. [from after and cost.] The latter charges; the expence incurred after the original plan is executed.

You must take care to carry off the land-floods and streams, before you attempt draining; lest your aftercost and labour prove unsuccessful. Mortimer.

A'FTERCROP. n. s. [from after and crop.] The second crop or harvest of the same year.

Aftercrops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for cattle. Mortimer.

A'FTER-DINNER. n. s. [from after and dinner.] The hour passing just after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amusement.

Thou hast nor youth nor age,
But, as it were, an after dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakespeare.

A'FTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. s. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavours made after the first effort or endeavour.

There is no reason why the sound of a pipe should leave traces in their brains, which, not first, but by their after-endeavours, should produce the like sounds. Locke.

A'FTER-ENQUIRY. n. s. [from after and enquiry.] Enquiry made after the fact committed, or after life.

You must either be directed by some that take upon them to know, or to take upon yourself that, which, I am sure, you do not know, or lump the after-enquiry on your peril; and how you shall speed in your journey's end, I think, you'll never return to tell me. Shakespeare.

To A'FTER-EYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view.

Thou shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To aftereye him. Shakespeare.

A'FTERGAME. n. s. [from after and game.] The scheme which may be laid, or the expedients which are practised after the original design has miscarried; methods taken after the first turn of affairs.

This earl, like certain vegetables, did bud and open slowly; nature sometimes delighting to play an aftergame, as well as fortune, which had both their turns and tides in course. Wotton.

The fables of the ax-handle and the wedge, serve to precaution us not to put ourselves needlessly upon an aftergame, but to weigh beforehand what we say and do. L'Estrange.

Our first design, my friend, has prov'd abortive;
Still there remains an aftergame to play. Addison.

A'FTERHOURS. n. s. [from after and hours.] The hours that succeed.

So smile the heav'ns upon this holy act,
That afterhours with sorrow chide us not.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

A'FTER-LIVER. n. s. [from after and live.] He that lives in succeeding times.

By thee my promise sent
Unto myself, let after-livers know. Sidney.

AFTERLOVE. n. s. [from after and love.] The second or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love and pardon thee. Shakespeare.

A'FTERMATH. n. s. [from after, and math, from mow.] The latter math; the second crop of grass mown in autumn. See AFTERCROP.

A'FTERNOON. n. s. [from after and noon.] The time from the meridian to the evening.

A beauty-waining and distressed widow,
Ev'n in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

However, keep the lively taste you hold
Of God; love him now, but fear him more;
And, in your afternoons, think what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before. Donne.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But when the bus'ness of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and drabs, they spend the afternoon.
Dryden.

A'FTERPAINS. n. s. [from after and pain.]
The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the secundine.

A'FTERPART. n. s. [from after and part.] The latter part.

The flexibleness of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe; and, in the afterpart, reason and foresight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his safety and improvement. Locke.

A'FTERPROOF. n. s. [from after and proof.] Evidence posteriour to the thing in question.

All know, that he likewise at first was much under the expectation of his afterproof; such a solar influence there is in the solar aspect. Wotton.

A'FTERTASTE. n. s. [from after and taste.] A taste remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

A'FTERTHOUGHT. n. s. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients formed too late. It is not properly to be used for secondthought.

Expence, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motely hue, and dark despair;
Suspicions, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all she view'd, in tawny dress'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckow on her fist. Dryden.

A'FTER-TIMES. n. s. [from after and time.] Succeeding times. See AFTERAGES.

You promis'd once, a progeny divine
Of Romans, rising from the Trojan line,
In aftertimes should hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law. Dryden.

A'FTERTOSSING. n. s. [from after and toss.] The motion of the sea after a storm.

Confusions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion, and are no more than the aftertossings of a sea, when the storm is laid. Addison.

AF'TERWARD. adv. [from after, and peapo, Sax.] In succeeding time; sometimes written afterwards, but less properly.

Uses not thought upon before, may afterward spring up, and be reasonable causes of retaining that, which former considerations did formerly procure to be instituted. Hooker.

An anxious distrust of the divine goodness, makes a man more and more unworthy of it; and miserable beforehand, for fear of being so afterward. L'Estrange.

A'FTERWIT. n. s. [from after and wit.] The contrivance of expedients after the occasion of using them is past. See AFTERTHOUGHT.

There is no recalling of what's gone and past; so that afterwit comes too late, when the mischief is done. L'Estrange.

A'FTER-WRATH. n. s. [from after and wrath.] Anger when the provocation seems past.

I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men
T' excuse their after-wrath. Shakespeare.

A'GA. n. s. The title of a Turkish military officer.

AGA'IN. adv. [agen, Sax.]

1. A second time; once more; marking the repetition of the same thing.

The poor remnant of human seed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again, slowly, by little and little. Bacon.

Go now, deluded man, and seek again
New toils, new dangers, on the dusty plain. Dryden.

Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the rest, who possess lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the sake of establishing their superstition. Swift.

2. On the other hand; marking some opposition or contrariety.

His wit encreased upon the occasion; and so much the more, if the occasion were sharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the shortness of his foresight, or the strength of his will, certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.

Those things that we know not what to do withal, if we had them, and those things, again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loss and shame, are the very conditions of this fable. L'Estrange.

3. On another part; marking a transition to some new consideration.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow;
Again, behold the winter's weight
Oppress the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.

4. In return, noting re-action, or reciprocal action; as, his fortune worked upon his nature, and his nature again upon his fortune.

5. Back; in restitution.

When your head did but ake,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows;
The best I had, a princess wrought it me,
And I did never ask it you again. Shakespeare.

6. In return for any thing; in recompence.

That he hath given will he pay again. Prov. xix. 27.

7. In order of rank or succession; marking distribution.

Question was asked of Demosthenes, What was the chief part of an orator? He answered Action. What next? Action. What next, again? Action. Bacon.

The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them: and the cause of that again is either the tough and viscous juice of the plant, or the strength and heat thereof. Bacon.

8. Besides; in any other time or place.

They have the Walloons, who are tall soldiers; yet that is but a spot of ground. But, on the other side, there is not in the world again such a spring and seminary of brave military people, as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice as much; marking the ſame quantity once repeated.

There are whom heav'n has bleſt with ſtore of wit,
Yet want as much again to manage it;
For wit and judgment ever are at ſtrife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife. Pope.

I ſhould not be ſorry to ſee a chorus on a theatre, more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorned at a king's charges. Dryden.

10. Again and again; with frequent repetition; often.

This is not to be obtained by one or two haſty readings; it muſt be repeated again and again, with a cloſe attention to the tenour of the diſcourſe. Locke.

11. In oppoſition; by way of reſiſtance.

Who art thou that thou anſwereſt again? Rom. ix. 20.

12. Back; as, returning from ſome meſſage.

Bring us word again which way we ſhall go. Deut. i. 22.

AGA'INST. prep. [ængeon, ongeonꝺ, Sax.]

1. In oppoſition to any perſon.

And he will be a wild man; his hand will be againſt every man, and every man's hand againſt him. Gen. xvi. 12.

2. Contrary; oppoſite, in general.

That authority of men ſhould prevail with men either againſt or above reaſon, is no part of our belief. Hooker.

He is melancholy without cauſe, and merry againſt the hair. Shakeſpeare.

We might work any effect without and againſt matter; and this not holpen by the co-operation of angels or ſpirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon.

The preventing goodneſs of God does even wreſt him from himſelf, and ſave him, as it were, againſt his will. South.

The god, uneaſy till he ſlept again,
Reſolv'd, at once, to rid himſelf of pain;
And, tho' againſt his cuſtom, call'd aloud,
Exciting Morpheus from the ſleepy crowd. Dryden.

Men often ſay a thing is againſt their conſcience, when really it is not. Swift.

3. In contradiction to any opinion.

After all that can be ſaid againſt a thing, this will ſtill be true, that many things poſſibly are, which we know not of; and that many more things may be than are: and if ſo, after all our arguments againſt a thing, it will be uncertain whether it be or not. Tillotſon.

The church-clergy have written the beſt collection of tracts againſt popery, that ever appeared in England. Swift.

4. With contrary motion or tendency; uſed of material action.

Boils and plagues
Plaiſter you o'er, that you may be abhorr'd
Farther than ſeen, and one infect another
Againſt the wind a mile. Shakeſpeare.

The kite being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the freſh air; and many times flieth againſt the wind, as trouts and ſalmons ſwim againſt the ſtream. Bacon.

5. Contrary to rule or law.

If aught againſt my life
Thy country ſought of thee, it ſought unjuſtly,
Againſt the law of nature, law of nations. Milton.

Againſt the public ſanctions of the peace,
Againſt all omens of their ill ſucceſs;
With fates averſe, the rout in arms reſort,
To force their monarch, and inſult the court. Dryden.

6. Oppoſite to, in place.

Againſt the Tiber's mouth, but far away. Dryden.

7. To the hurt of another.

And when thou think'ſt of her eternity,
Think not that death againſt her nature is;
Think it a birth: and when thou go'ſt to die,
Sing like a ſwan, as if thou went'ſt to bliſs. Davies.

8. In proviſion for; in expectation of.

This mode of ſpeaking probably had its original from the idea of making proviſion againſt, or in oppoſition to a time of misfortune, but by degrees acquired a neutral ſenſe.

Thence ſhe them brought into a ſtately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair diſpred,
And ready dight with drapets feſtival,
Againſt the viands ſhould be miniſtred. Fairy Queen.

The like charge was given them againſt the time they ſhould come to ſettle themſelves in the land promiſed unto their fathers. Hooker.

Some ſay, that ever 'gainſt that ſeaſon comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning ſingeth all night long:
And then they ſay no ſpirit walks abroad;
The nights are wholeſome, then no planets ſtrike,
No fairy tales, no witch has power to charm;
So hallowed and ſo gracious is the time. Shakeſp.

To that purpoſe, he made haſte to Briſtol, that all things might be ready againſt the prince came thither. Clarendon.

Againſt the promis'd time provides with care,
And haſtens in the woof, the robe he was to wear. Dryd.

All which I grant to be reaſonably and truly ſaid, and only deſire they may be remembered againſt another day. Stillingfl.

A'GALAXY. n. ſ. [from α and γάλα, Gr.] Want of milk. Dict.

AGA'PE. adv. [from a and gape.] Staring with eagerneſs; as, a bird gapes for meat.

In himſelf was all his ſtate;
More ſolemn than the tedious pomp that waits
On princes, when their rich retinue long
Of horſes led, and grooms beſmear'd with gold,
Dazzles the crowd and ſets them all agape. Milton.

Dazzle the crowd, and ſet them all agape. Philips.

The whole crowd ſtood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator.

A'GARICK. n. ſ. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug of uſe in phyſick, and the dying trade. It is divided into male and female; the male is uſed only in dying, the female in medicine; the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.

There are two excreſcences which grow upon trees; both of them in the nature of muſhrooms: the one the Romans call boletus, which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table; the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks, though it be affirmed by ſome, that it groweth alſo at the roots. Bacon.

AGA'ST. adj. [This word, which is uſually, by later authours, written aghaſt, is, not improbably, the true word derived from agaze, which has been written aghaſt, from a miſtaken etymology. See AGHAST.] Struck with terrour; amazed; frighted to aſtoniſhment.

Thus roving on
In confus'd march forlorn, th' advent'rous bands,
With ſhudd'ring horrour pale, and eyes agaſt,
View'd firſt their lamentable lot, and found
No reſt. Milton.

A'GATE. n. ſ. [agate, Fr. achates, Lat.] A precious ſtone of the loweſt claſs, often clouded with beautiful variegations.

In ſhape no bigger than an agate ſtone,
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakeſpeare.

Agates are only varieties of the flint kind; they have a grey horny ground, clouded, lineated, or ſpotted with different colours, chiefly duſky, black, brown, red, and ſometimes blue. Woodward.

A'GATY. adj. [from agate.] Partaking of the nature of agate.

An agaty flint was above two inches in diameter; the whole covered with a friable cretaceous cruſt. Woodward.

To AGA'ZE. v. a. [from a and gaze, to ſet a gazing; as, amaze, amuſe, and others.] To ſtrike with amazement; to ſtupify with ſudden terrour. The verb is now out of uſe.

So as they travell'd, ſo they gan eſpy
An armed knight toward them gallop faſt,
That ſeemed from ſome feared foe to fly,
Or other griſly thing that him agaſt. Fairy Queen.

AGA'ZED. participial adj. [from agaze; which ſee.] Struck with amazement; terrified to ſtupidity.

Hundreds he ſent to hell, and none durſt ſtand him;
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he flew:
The French exclaim'd; "The devil was in arms!"
All the whole army ſtood agazed on him. Shakeſpeare.

AGE. n. ſ. [age, Fr. anciently eage, or aage; it is deduced by Menage, by ætatium, of ætas; by Junius, from aa, which, in the Teutonic dialects, ſignified long duration.]

1. Any period of time attributed to ſomething as the whole, or part, of its duration: in this ſenſe, we ſay, the age of man, the ſeveral ages of the world, the golden or iron age.

One man in his time plays many parts,
His life being ſeven ages. Shakeſpeare.

And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt ſeventeen years; ſo the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and ſeven years. Geneſis, xlvii. 28.

2. A ſucceſſion or generation of men.

Hence, laſtly, ſprings cares of poſterities,
For things their kind would everlaſting make.
Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age ſhall take. Davies.

Next, to the Son,
Deſtin'd Reſtorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n, and earth, ſhall to the ages riſe,
Or down from heav'n deſcend. Milton.

No declining age
E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Roſcommon.

3. The time in which any particular man, or race of men, lived, or ſhall live; as, the age of heroes.

4. The ſpace of a hundred years; a ſecular period; a century.

5. The latter part of life; old age; oldneſs.

You ſee how full of change his age is: the obſervation we have made of it hath not been little; he always loved our ſiſter moſt, and with what poor judgment he hath now caſt her off. Shakeſpeare.

Boys muſt not have th' ambitious care of men,
Nor men the weak anxieties of age. Roſcommon.

And on this forehead, where your verſe has ſaid,
The loves delighted, and the graces play'd;
Inſulting age will trace his cruel way,
And leave ſad marks of his deſtructive ſway. Prior.

6. Matu-

6. Maturity; ripeneſs; full ſtrength of life.

A ſolemn admiſſion of proſelytes, all that either, being of age, deſire that admiſſion for themſelves, or that, in infancy, are by others preſented to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our fires, not with their own content,
Had, ere we came to age, our portion ſpent. Dryden.

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of diſcretion; and twenty-one years is the full age: In a woman, at ſeven years of age, the lord her father may diſtrain his tenants for aid to marry her; at the age of nine years, ſhe is dowable; at twelve years, ſhe is able finally to ratify and confirm her former conſent given to matrimony; at fourteen, ſhe is enabled to receive her land into her own hands, and ſhall be out of ward at the death of her anceſtor; at ſixteen, ſhe ſhall be out of ward, though, at the death of her anceſtor, ſhe was within the age of fourteen years; at twenty-one, ſhe is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a ſtripling is enabled to chooſe his own guardian; at the age of fourteen, a man may conſent to marriage. Cowell.

A'GED. adj. [from age. It makes two ſyllables in poetry.]

1. Old; ſtricken in years; applied generally to animate beings.

If the compariſon do ſtand between man and man, which ſhall hearken unto other, ſith the aged, for the moſt part, are beſt experienced, leaſt ſubject to raſh and unadviſed paſſions. Hooker.

Novelty is only in requeſt; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of courſe, as it is virtuous to be conſtant in any undertaking. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Kindneſs itſelf too weak a charm will prove,
To raiſe the feeble fires of aged love. Prior.

2. Old; applied to inanimate things. This uſe is rare, and commonly with ſome tendency to the proſopopœia.

The people did not more worſhip the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves; and the ſame Quintillian ſaith of the aged oaks. Stillingfleet.

A'GEDLY. adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged perſon.

AGE'N. adv. [agen, Sax. Again; in return. See AGAIN.

This word is only written in this manner, though it be in reality the true orthography, for the ſake of rhime.

Thus Venus: Thus her ſon reply'd agen;
None of your ſiſters have we heard or ſeen. Dryden.

A'GENCY. n. ſ. [from agent.]

1. The quality of acting; the ſtate of being in action; action.

A few advances there are in the following papers, tending to aſſert the ſuperintendence and agency of providence in the natural world. Woodward.

2. The office of an agent or factor for another; buſineſs performed by an agent.

Some of the purchaſers themſelves may be content to live cheap in a worſe country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agencies. Swift.

A'GENT. adj. [agens, Lat. That which acts; oppoſed to patient, or that which is acted upon.

This ſucceſs is oft truly aſcribed unto the force of imagination upon the body agent; and then, by a ſecondary means, it may upon a diverſe body; as, for example, if a man carry a ring, or ſome part of a beaſt, believing ſtrongly that it will help him to obtain his love, it may make him more induſtrious, and again more confident and perſiſting than otherwiſe he would be. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

A'GENT. n. ſ.

1. An actor; he that acts; he that profeſſes the faculty of action.

Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not excluded as impertinent unto the thing, but as needleſs in regard of the agent, which ſeeth already what to reſolve upon. Hooker.

To whom nor agent, from the inſtrument,
Nor pow'r of working, from the work is known. Davies.

Heav'n made us agents free to good or ill,
And forc'd it not, tho' he foreſaw the will.
Freedom was firſt beſtow'd on human race,
And preſcience only held the ſecond place. Dryden.

A miracle is a work exceeding the power of any created agent, conſequently being an effect of the divine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

2. A ſubſtitute; a deputy; a factor; a perſon employed to tranſact the buſineſs of another.

—All hearts in love, uſe your own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itſelf,
And truſt no agent. Shakeſpeare.

They had not the wit to ſend to them, in any orderly faſhion, agents or choſen men, to tempt them, and to treat with them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Remember, Sir, your fury of a wife,
Who, not content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your paſſion will purſue. Dryden.

3. That which has the power of operating, or producing effects upon another thing.

They produced wonderful effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Temple.

AGGENERA'TION. n. ſ. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The ſtate of growing or uniting to another body.

To make a perfect nutrition, there is required a tranſmutation of nutriment; now where this converſion or aggeneration is made, there is alſo required, in the aliment, a ſimilarity of matter. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To A'GGERATE. v. a. [from agger, Lat.] To heap up. Dict.

AGGERO'SE. adj. [from agger, Lat.] Full of heaps. Dict.

To AGGLOMERATE. v. a. [agglomero, Lat.]

1. To gather up in a ball, as thread.
2. To gather together.

To AGGLO'MERATE. v. n.

Beſides, the hard agglomerating ſalts,
The ſpoil of ages, would impervious choke
Their ſecret channels. Thomſon's Autumn.

AGGLU'TINANTS. n. ſ. [from agglutinate.] Thoſe medicines or applications which have the power of uniting parts together.

To AGGLU'TINATE. v. n. [from ad and gluten, glue, Lat.] To unite one part to another; to join together, ſo as not to fall aſunder. It is a word almoſt appropriated to medicine.

It has got room enough to grow into its full dimenſions, which is performed by the daily ingeſtion of food that is digeſted into blood; which being diffuſed through the body, is agglutinated to thoſe parts that were immediately agglutinated to the foundation-parts of the womb. Harvey.

AGGLUTINA'TION. n. ſ. [from agglutinate.] Union; coheſion; the act of agglutinating; the ſtate of being agglutinated.

The occaſion of its not healing by agglutination, as the other did, was from the alteration the ichor had begun to make in the bottom of the wound. Wiſeman.

AGGLU'TINATIVE. adj. [from agglutinate.] That which has the power of procuring agglutination.

Rowl up the member with the agglutinative rowler. Wiſem.

To AGGRANDI'ZE. v. a. [aggrandiſer, Fr.] To make great; to enlarge; to exalt; to improve in power, honour, or rank. It is applied to perſons generally, ſometimes to things.

If the king ſhould uſe it no better than the pope did, only to aggrandize covetous churchmen, it cannot be called a jewel in his crown. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Theſe furniſh us with glorious ſprings and mediums, to raiſe and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our ſouls, to awaken the better paſſions, and to elevate them even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purpoſes. Watts.

A'GGRANDIZEMENT. n. ſ. [aggrandiſſement, Fr.] The ſtate of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

A'GGRANDIZER. n. ſ. [from aggrandize.] The perſon that aggrandizes or makes great another.

To AGGRA'TE. v. a. [aggratare, Ital.] To pleaſe; to treat with civilities: a word not now in uſe.

And in the midſt thereof, upon the floor,
A lovely bevy of fair ladies ſate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour;
The which them did in modeſt wiſe amate,
And each one ſought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

To A'GGGRAVATE. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.]

1. To make heavy; uſed only in a metaphorical ſenſe; as, to aggravate an accuſation, or a puniſhment.

A grove hard by, ſprung up with this their change,
His will who reigns above! to aggravate
Their penance, laden with fruit, like that
Which grew in paradiſe, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton.

Ambitious Turnus in the preſs appears,
And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryden.

2. To make any thing worſe, by the addition of ſome particular circumſtance, not eſſential.

This offence, in itſelf ſo heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof, which was not malice or diſcontent, but an aſpiring mind to the papacy. Bacon.

AGGRAVA'TION. n. ſ. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.
2. The extrinſecal circumſtances or accidents, which encreaſe the guilt of a crime, or the miſery of a calamity.

If it be weigh'd
By itſelf, with aggravations not ſurcharg'd,
Or elſe with juſt allowance counterpois'd,
I may, if poſſible, thy pardon find
The eaſier towards me, or thy hatred leſs. Milton.

He, to the ſins which he commits, hath the aggravation ſuperadded of committing them againſt knowledge, againſt conſcience, againſt ſight of the contrary law. Hammond.

A'GGREGATE. adj. [aggregatus, Lat.] Framed by the collection of any particular parts into one maſs, body, or ſyſtem.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonſenſical ſyſtems of the whole. Ray.

A'GGREGATE. n. ſ. [from the verb.] The complex or collective reſult of the conjunction or acervation of many particulars.

The reaſon of the far greateſt part of mankind, is but an aggreggate of miſtaken phantaſms, and, in things not ſenſible, a conſtant deluſion. Glanville.

A great number of ſuch living and thinking particles could not poſſibly, by their mutual contact, and preſſing, and ſtriking, compoſe one greater individual animal, with one mind and underſtanding, and a vital conſenſion of the whole body; any more than a ſwarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and conſtituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentl.

To A'GGREGATE. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.] To collect together; to heap many particulars into one maſs.

The aggregated ſoil
Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, ſmote. Milton.

AGGREGA'TION. n. ſ. [from aggregate.]

1. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water reſident in the abyſs is, in all parts of it, ſtored with a conſiderable quantity of heat, and more eſpecially in thoſe where theſe extraordinary aggregations of this fire happen. Woodward's Nat. Hiſtory.

2. The whole compoſed by the coacervation of many particulars; an aggregate.

3. Collection, or ſtate of being collected.

Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation; and being erroneous in their ſingle numbers, once huddled together, they will be errour itſelf. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To AGGRE'SS. v. n. [aggredior, aggreſſum, Lat.] To commit the firſt act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The rage diſpers'd, the glorious pair advance
With mingl'd anger, and collected might,
To turn the war, and tell aggreſſing France,
How Britain's ſons, and Britains friends can fight. Prior.

AGGRE'SSION. n. ſ. [aggreſſio, Lat.] The firſt act of injury; commencement of a quarrel by ſome act of iniquity.

There is no reſiſting of a common enemy, without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be alſo, on the other hand, a conſpiracy of common enmity and aggreſſion. L'Eſtr.

AGGRE'SSOR. n. ſ. [from aggreſs.] The perſon that firſt commences hoſtility; the aſſaulter or invader, oppoſed to the defendant.

Fly in nature's face?
But how, if nature fly in my face firſt?
Then nature's the aggreſſor: Let her look to't.
Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

It is a very unlucky circumſtance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of ſuch authors, whoſe works are ſo ſoon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the firſt aggreſſors. Pope and Swift's Preface to Miſcellanies.

AGGRI'EVANCE. n. ſ. [See GRIEVANCE.] Injury; hardſhip inflicted; wrong endured.

To AGGRIE'VE. v. a. [from gravis, Lat. See To grieve.]

1. To give ſorrow; to cauſe grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and aggrieve the active.

But while therein I took my chief delight,
I ſaw, alas! the gaping earth devour
The ſpring, the place, and all clean out of ſight:
Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour. Spenſer.

2. To impoſe ſome hardſhips upon; to harraſs; to hurt in one's right. This is a kind of juridical ſenſe; and whenever it is uſed now, it bears ſome alluſion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbiſhop of York, much aggrieved with ſome practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Camden.

The landed man finds himſelf aggrieved, by the falling of his rents, and the ſtreightening of his fortune; whilſt the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Locke.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs receiv'd,
Cloë complains, and wond'rouſly's aggriev'd. Granville.

To AGGRO'UP. v. a. [aggropare, Ital.] To bring together into one figure; to croud together: a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleaſant to the ſight; as alſo thoſe things which appear to be performed with eaſe. Dryden.

AGHA'ST. adj. [either the participle of agaze, (ſee AGAZE.) and then to be written agazed, or agaſt, or from a and gaſt, a ghoſt, which the preſent orthography favours; perhaps they were originally different words.] Struck with horrour, as at the ſight of a ſpectre; ſtupified with terrour. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

Who ſighing ſore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-ſtrings braſt,
With dreary drooping eyne look'd up like one aghaſt. Spenſ.

The aged earth aghaſt.
With terrour of that blaſt,
Shall from the ſurface to the centre ſhake. Milton.

Aghaſt he wak'd, and, ſtarting from his bed,
Cold ſweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erſpread. Dryden.

I laugh to think how your unſhaken Cato
Will look aghaſt, while unforeſeen deſtruction
Pours in upon him thus from every ſide. Addiſon.

A'GILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being ſpeedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horſe the head,
And bending forward ſtruck his agile heels
Againſt the panting ſides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel-head. Shakſpeare.

The immediate and agile ſubſervience of the ſpirits to the empire of the mind or ſoul. Hale.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,
Render it agile, witty, valiant, ſage,
As fits the various courſe of human age. Prior.

A'GILENESS. n. ſ. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleneſs; readineſs for motion; quickneſs; activity: agility.

AGI'LITY. n. ſ. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleneſs; readineſs to move; quickneſs; activity.

A limb over-ſtrained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGI'LLOCHUM. n. ſ. Aloes-wood.

A tree in the Eaſt-Indies, brought to us in ſmall bits, of a very fragrant ſcent. It is hot, drying, and accounted a ſtrengthener of the nerves in general. The beſt is of a blackiſh purple colour, and ſo light as to ſwim upon water. Quincy.

A'GIO. n. ſ. [an Italian word, ſignifying eaſe or conveniency.] A mercantile term, uſed chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money. Chambers.

To AGI'ST. v. a. [from giſte, Fr. a bed or reſting-place, or from giſter, i. e. ſtabulari.]

To take in and feed the cattle of ſtrangers in the king's foreſt, and to gather the money. The officers that do this, are called agiſtors, in Engliſh gueſt or giſt-takers. Their function is termed agiſtment; as, agiſtment upon the ſea banks. This word agiſt is alſo uſed, for the taking in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week. Blount.

AGI'STMENT. n. ſ. [See AGIST.]

It is taken by the canon lawyers in another ſenſe than is mentioned under agiſt. They ſeem to intend by it, a modus or compoſition, or mean rate, at which ſome right or due may be reckoned: perhaps it is corrupted from addouciſſement, or adjuſtment.

AGI'STOR. n. ſ. [from agiſt.] An officer of the king's foreſt. See AGIST.

A'GITABLE. n. ſ. [from agitate; agitabilis, Lat.] That which may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps that which may be diſputed. See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

To A'GITATE. v. a. [agito, Lat.]

1. To put in motion; to ſhake; to move nimbly; as, the ſurface of the waters is agitated by the wind; the veſſel was broken by agitating the liquour.

2. To be the cauſe of motion; to actuate; to move.

Where dwells this ſov'reign arbitrary ſoul,
Which does the human animal controul,
Informs each part, and agitates the whole? Blackmore.

3. To affect with perturbation; as, the mind of man is agitated by various paſſions.

4. To ſtir; to bandy from one to another; to diſcuſs; to controvert; as, to agitate a queſtion.

Though this controverſy be revived, and hotly agitated among the moderns; yet I doubt whether it be not, in a great part, a nominal diſpute. Boyle.

AGITA'TION. n. ſ. [from agitate, agitatio, Lat.]

1. The act of moving, or ſhaking any thing.

Putrefaction aſketh reſt; for the ſubtle motion which putrefaction requireth, is diſturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

2. The ſtate of being moved or agitated; as, the waters, after a ſtorm, are ſome time in a violent agitation.

3. Diſcuſſion; controverſial examination.

A kind of a ſchool queſtion is ſtarted in this fable, upon reaſon and inſtinct: and whether this deliberative proceeding of the crow, was not rather a logical agitation of the matter. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

4. Violent motion of the mind; perturbation; diſturbance of the thoughts.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of ſleep, and do the effects of watching. In this ſlumbry agitation, beſides her walking, and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her ſay? Shakeſpeare.

His mother could no longer bear the agitations of ſo many paſſions as thronged upon her. Tatler.

5. Deliberation; contrivance; the ſtate of being conſulted upon.

The project now in agitation for repealing of the teſt act, and yet leaving the name of an eſtabliſhment to the preſent national church, is inconſiſtent. Swift.

AGITA'TOR. n. ſ. [from agitate.] He that agitates any thing; he who manages affairs: in which ſenſe ſeems to be uſed the agitators of the army.

A'GLET. n. ſ. [A word which ſome derive from αἴγλη, ſplendour, but which is apparently to be deduced from aiguletie, Fr. a tag to a point, and that from aigu, ſharp.]

1. A tag of a point curved into ſome repreſentation of an animal, generally of a man.

He thereupon gave for the garter a chain worth 200 l. and his gown addreſſed with aglets, eſteemed worth 25 l. Hayward.

Why, give him gold enough, and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet baby, or an old trot, and ne'er a tooth in her head. Shakeſp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. The pendants at the ends of the chieves of flowers, as in tulips.

A'GMINAL. adj. [from agmen, Lat] Belonging to a troop. Dict.

A'GNAIL. n. ſ. [from ange, grieved, and nagle, a nail.] A diſeaſe of the nails; a whitlow; an inflammation round the nails.

AGNA'TION. n. ſ. [from agnatus, Lat.] Deſcent from the ſame father, in a direct male line, diſtinct from cognation, or conſanguinity, which includes deſcendants from females.

AGNI'TION. n. ſ. [from agnitio, Lat.] Acknowledgment.

To AGNI'ZE. v. a. [from agnoſco, Lat.] To acknowledge; to own; to avow. This word is now obſolete.

I do agnize
A natural and prompt alacrity
I find in hardneſs; and do undertake
This preſent war againſt the Ottomites. Shakeſpeare.

AGNOMINA'TION. n. ſ. [agnominatio, Lat.] Alluſion of one word to another, by reſemblance of ſound.

The Britiſh continueth yet in Wales, and ſome villages of Cornwall, intermingled with provincial Latin, being very ſignificative, copious, and pleaſantly running upon agnominations, although harſh in aſpirations. Camden.

AGNUS CASTUS. n. ſ. [Lat.] The name of the tree commonly called the Chaſte Tree, from an imaginary virtue of preſerving chaſtity.

Of laurel ſome, of woodbine many more,
And wreathes of agnus caſtus others bore. Dryden.

AGO'. adv. [agan, Sax. paſt or gone; whence writers formerly uſed, and in ſome provinces the people ſtill uſe, agone for ago.]

Paſt; as, long ago; that is long time has paſt ſince. Reckoning time towards the preſent, we uſe ſince; as, it is a year ſince it happened: reckoning from the preſent, we uſe ago; as, it happened a year ago. This is not, perhaps, always obſerved.

Be of good comfort; for the great ſupply,
That was expected by the Dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Godwin ſands. Sh. K. John.

This both by others and myſelf I know,
For I have ſerv'd their ſovereign long ago;
Oft have been caught within the winding train. Dryden.

I ſhall ſet down an account of a diſcourſe I chanced to have with one of them ſome time ago. Addiſon Freeholder.

AGO'G. adv. [a word of uncertain etymology; the French have the term à gogo, in low language; as, ils vivent à gogo, they live to their wiſh: from this phraſe our word may be, perhaps, derived.]

1. In a ſtate of deſire; in a ſtate of imagination; heated with the notion of ſome enjoyment; longing.

As for the ſenſe and reaſon of it, that has little or nothing to do here; only let it ſound full and round, and chime right to the humour, which is at preſent agog, (juſt as a big, long, rattling name is ſaid to command even adoration from a Spaniard) and, no doubt, with this powerful, ſenſeleſs engine, the rabble-driver, ſhall be able to carry all before him. South's Sermons.

2. It is uſed with the verbs to be, or to ſet; as, he is agog, or you may ſet him agog.

The gawdy goſſip, when ſhe's ſet agog,
In jewels dreſt, and at each ear a bob,
Goes flaunting out, and, in her trim of pride,
Thinks all ſhe ſays or does, is juſtify'd. Dryden.

This maggot has no ſooner ſet him agog, but he gets him a ſhip, freights her, builds caſtles in the air, and conceits both the Indies in his coffers. L' Eſtrange.

3. It has the particles on, or for, before the object of deſire.

On which the ſaints are all agog,
And all this for a bear and dog. Hudibras.

They generally ſtraggle into theſe parts about this time of the year; and ſet the heads of our ſervant-maids ſo agog for huſbands, that we do not expect to have any buſineſs done as it ſhould be, whilſt they are in the country. Addiſon, Spectator.

AGO'NE. adv. [agan, Sax.] Ago; paſt. See AGO.

Is he ſuch a princely one,
As you ſpeak him long agone? Ben Johnſon's Fairy Prince.

A'GONISM. n. ſ. [ἀγωνισμὸς Gr.] Contention for a prize. Dict.

AGO'ING. participial adj. [from a and going.] In action.

Their firſt movement, and impreſſed motions, demanded the impulſe of an almighty hand to ſet them firſt agoing. Tatler.

A'GONIST. n. ſ. [ἀγωνιστὴς, Gr.] A contender for prizes. Dict.

AGONI'STES. n. ſ. [ἀγωνίστης, Gr.] A prize-fighter; one that contends at any publick ſolemnity for a prize. Milton has ſo ſtiled his tragedy, becauſe Sampſon was called out to divert the Philiſtines with feats of ſtrength.

AGONI'STICAL. adj. [from agoniſtes.] Relating to prize-fighting. Dict.

To A'GONIZE. v. n. [from agonizo, low Latin, ἀγωνίζω, Gr. agoniſer, Fr.] To feel agonies; to be in exceſſive pain.

Doſt thou behold my poor diſtracted heart,
Thus rent with agonizing love and rage,
And aſk me what it means? Art thou not falſe? Rowe.

Or touch, if, tremblingly alive all o'er,
To ſmart and agonize at ev'ry pore? Pope's Eſſay on Man.

AGONOTHE'TICK. adj. [ἄγων and τίθημι, Gr.] Propoſing publick contentions for prizes; giving prizes; preſiding at publick games. Dict.

A'GONY. n. ſ. [ἀγὼν, Gr. agon, low Lat. agonie, Fr.]

1. The pangs of death; properly the laſt conteſt between life and death.

Never was there more pity in ſaving any than in ending me, becauſe therein my agony ſhall end. Sidney.

Thou who for me did feel ſuch pain,
Whoſe precious blood the croſs did ſtain,
Let not thoſe agonies be vain. Roſcommon.

2. Any violent or exceſſive pain of body or mind.

Betwixt them both, they have me done to dy,
Through wounds and ſtrokes, and ſtubborn handeling,
That death were better than ſuch agony,
As grief and fury unto me did bring. Fairy Queen.

Thee I have miſs'd, and thought it long, depriv'd
Thy preſence, agony of love! till now
Not felt, nor ſhall be twice. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. It is particularly uſed in devotions for our Redeemer's conflict in the garden.

To propoſe our deſires, which cannot take ſuch effect as we ſpecify, ſhall, notwithſtanding, otherwiſe procure us his heavenly grace, even as this very prayer of Chriſt obtained angels to be ſent him as comforters in his agony. Hooker.

AGO'OD. adv. [a and good.] In earneſt; not fictitiouſly.

At that time I made her weep agood,
For I did play a lamentable part. Shakeſpeare.

AGO'UTY. n. ſ. An animal of the Antilles of the bigneſs of a rabbet, with bright red hair, and a little tail without hair. He has but two teeth in each jaw, holds his meat in his fore-paws like a ſquirrel, and has a very remarkable cry. When he is angry, his hair ſtands on end, and he ſtrikes the earth with his hindfeet, and, when chaſed, he flies to a hollow tree, whence he is expelled by ſmoke. Trevoux.

To AGRA'CE. v. a. [from a and grace.] To grant favours to; to confer benefits upon; a word not now in uſe.

She granted, and that knight ſo much agrac'd,
That ſhe him taught celeſtial diſcipline. Fairy Queen.

AGRA'MMATIST. n. ſ. [α, priv. and γράμμα, Gr.] An illiterate man. Dict.

AGRA'RIAN. adj. [agrarius, Lat.] Relating to fields or grounds; a word ſeldom uſed but in the Roman hiſtory, where there is mention of the agrarian law.

To AGRE'ASE. v. a. [from a and greaſe.] To daub; to greaſe; to pollute with filth.

The waves thereof ſo ſlow and ſluggiſh were,
Engroſs'd with mud, which did them foul agreaſe. Fairy Q.

To AGRE'E. v. n. [agreer, Fr, from gré, liking or good-will; gratia and gratus, Lat.]

1. To be in concord; to live without contention; not to differ.

The more you agree together, the leſs hurt can your enemies do you. Pope's View of Epic Poetry.

2. To grant; to yield to; to admit; with the particles to or upon.

And perſuaded them to agree to all reaſonable conditions. 2 Maccabees, xi. 14.

We do not prove the origin of the earth from a chaos; ſeeing that is agreed on by all that give it any origin. Burnet's Theo.

3. To ſettle terms by ſtipulation; to accord.

Agree with thine adverſary quickly, whilſt thou art in the way with him; leſt at any time the adverſary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be caſt into priſon. Matt. v. 25.

4. To ſettle a price between buyer and ſeller.

Friend, I do thee no wrong: didſt not thou agree with me for a penny? Matt. xx. 13.

5. To be of the ſame mind or opinion.

He exceedingly provoked, or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing elſe. Clarendon.

Milton is a noble genius, and the world agrees to confeſs it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

6. To ſettle ſome point among many.

Strifes and troubles would be endleſs, except they gave their common conſent all to be ordered by ſome whom they ſhould agree upon. Hooker.

If judicious men, ſkilled in chymical affairs, ſhall agree to write clearly, and keep men from being ſtunned by dark or empty words, it is hoped, they will be reduced either to write nothing, or books that may teach us ſomething. Boyle.

7. To be conſiſtent; not to contradict.

For many bare falſe witneſs againſt him, but their witneſs agreed not together. Mark, xiv. 56.

They that ſtood by ſaid again to Peter, ſurely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy ſpeech agreeth thereto. Mark, xiv. 70.

Which teſtimony I the leſs ſcruple to allege, becauſe it agrees very well with what has been affirmed to me by a phyſician at Moſcow. Boyle's Hiſtory of Colours.

8. To ſuit with; to be accommodated to.

Thou feedeſt thine own people with angels food, and didſt ſend them from heaven bread agreeing to every taſte. Wiſdom.

His principles could not be made to agree with that conſtitution and order, which God hath ſettled in the world; and, therefore, muſt needs claſh with common ſenſe and experience. Locke.

9. To cauſe no diſturbance in the body.

I have often thought, that our preſcribing aſſes milk in ſuch ſmall quantities, is injudicious; for, undoubtedly, with ſuch as it agrees with, it would perform much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities. Arbuthnot.

To AGRE'E. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He ſaw from far, or ſeemed for to ſee,
Some troublous uprore, or contentious fray,
Whereto he drew in haſte it to agree. Fairy Queen.

2. To make friends; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whoſe deſtructive rage
Did the whole world in civil arms engage,
Are now agreed. Roſcommon.

AGRE'EABLE adj. [agreable, Fr.]

1. Suitable to; conſiſtent with. It has the particle to, or with.

What you do, is not at all agreeable either with ſo good a Chriſtian, or ſo reaſonable and ſo great a perſon. Temple.

That which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. L'Eſtrange.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reaſon, ſo is it likewiſe the intereſt both of private perſons and of publick ſocieties Tillotſon.

Agreeable hereunto, perhaps it might not be amiſs, to make children, as ſoon as they are capable of it, often to tell a ſtory. Locke on Education.

2. Pleaſing; that is ſuitable to the inclination, faculties, or temper. It is uſed in this ſenſe both of perſons and things.

And while the face of outward things we find
Pleaſing and fair, agreeable and ſweet,
Theſe things tranſport. Sir J. Davies.

I recollect in my mind the diſcourſes which have paſſed between us, and call to mind a thouſand agreeable remarks, which he has made on theſe occaſions. Addiſon, Spectator.

3. It has alſo the particle to.

The delight which men have in popularity, fame, ſubmiſſion, and ſubjection of other mens minds, ſeemeth to be a thing, in itſelf, without contemplation of conſequence, agreeable and grateful to the nature of man. Bacon.

AGRE'EABLENESS. n. ſ. [from agreeable.]

1. Conſiſtency with; ſuitableneſs to; with the particle to.

Pleaſant taſtes depend not on the things themſelves, but their agreeableneſs to this or that particular palate, wherein there is great variety. Locke.

2. The quality of pleaſing. It is uſed in an inferiour ſenſe, to mark the production of ſatisfaction, calm and laſting, but below rapture or admiration.

There will be occaſion for largeneſs of mind and agreeableneſs of temper. Collier of Friendſhip.

It is very much an image of that author's writing, who has an agreeableneſs that charms us, without correctneſs; like a miſtreſs, whoſe faults we ſee, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Reſemblance; likeneſs; ſometimes with the particle between.

This relation is likewiſe ſeen in the agreeableſs between man and the other parts of the univerſe; and that in ſundry reſpects. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra.

AGRE'EABLY. adv. [from agreeable.]

1. Conſiſtently with; in a manner ſuitable to.

They may look into the affairs of Judea and Jeruſalem, agreeably to that which is in the law of the Lord. 1 Eſd. xviii. 12.

2. Pleaſingly.

I did never imagine, that ſo many excellent rules could be produced ſo advantageouſly and agreeably. Swift.

AGRE'ED. participial adj. [from agree.] Settled by conſent.

When they had got known and agreed names, to ſignify thoſe internal operations of their own minds, they were ſufficiently furniſhed to make known by words all their ideas. Locke.

AGRE'EINGNESS, n. ſ. [from agrée.] Conſiſtence; ſuitableneſs.

AGRE'EMENT. n. ſ. [agrement, Fr. in law Latin agreamentum, which Coke would willingly derive from aggregatio mentium.]

1. Concord.

What agreement is there between the hyena and the dog? and what peace between the rich and the poor? Eccluſ. xiii. 18.

2. Reſemblance of one thing to another.

Expanſion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both conſidered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not ſeparable one from another. Locke.

3. Compact; bargain; concluſion of controverſy; ſtipulation.

And your covenant with death ſhall be diſannulled, and your agreement with hell ſhall not ſtand; when the overflowing ſcourge ſhall paſs through, then ye ſhall be trodden down by it. Iſaiah, xxviii. 18.

Make an agreement with me by a preſent, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his ciſtern. 2 Kings, xviii. 31.

Frog had given his word, that he would meet the above-mentioned company at the Salutation, to talk of this agreement. Arbuthnot.

AGRE'STICK, or AGRE'STICAL. adj. [from agreſtis, Lat.] Having relation to the country; rude; ruſtick. Dict.

AGRICOLA'TION. n. ſ. [from agricola, Lat.] Culture of the ground. Dict.

A'GRICULTURE. n. ſ. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground; tillage; huſbandry.

He ſtrictly adviſeth not to begin to ſow before the ſetting of the ſtars; which notwithſtanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be obſerved in England. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

That there was tillage beſtowed upon the ground, Moſes does indeed intimate in general; as alſo, what ſort of tillage that was, is not expreſſed: I hope to ſhew, that their agriculture was nothing near ſo laborious and troubleſome, nor did it take up ſo much time as ours doth. Woodward's Nat. Hiſtory.

The diſpoſition of Ulyſſes inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more ſecure, method of life, by agriculture and huſbandry. Pope's Odyſſey, Notes.

A'GRIMONY. n. ſ. [agrimonia, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are rough, hairy, pennated, and grow alternately on the branches; the flower-cup conſiſts of one leaf, which is divided into five ſegments; the flowers have five or ſix leaves, and are formed into a long ſpike, which expand in form of a roſe; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock; in each of which are contained two kernels.

The ſpecies are; 1. The common or medicinal agrimony. 2. The ſweet-ſmelling agrimony. 3. Leſſer agrimony, with a white flower.

The firſt is common in the hedges, in many parts, and is the ſort commonly uſed in medicine. It will grow in almoſt any ſoil or ſituation; and is increaſed by parting the roots in autumn, or by ſowing the ſeeds ſoon after they are ripe. Mill.

AGRO'UND. adv. [from a and ground.]

1. Stranded; hindered by the ground from paſſing farther.

With our great ſhips we durſt not approach the coaſt, we having been all of us aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Eſſays.

Say what you ſeek, and whether were you bound?
Were you, by ſtreſs of weather, caſt aground? Dryden.

2. It is likewiſe figuratively uſed, for being hindred in the progreſs of affairs; as, the negotiators were aground at that objection.

A'GUE. n. ſ. [aigu, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits ſucceeded by hot. The cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague, and the hot the fever.

Our caſtle's ſtrength
Will laugh a ſiege to ſcorn. Here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakeſpeare.

Though
He feels the heats of youth, and colds of age,
Yet neither tempers nor corrects the other;
As if there were an ague in his nature,
That ſtill inclines to one extreme. Denham's Sophy.

A'GUED. adj. [from ague.] Struck with an ague; ſhivering; chill; cold: a word in little uſe.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale,
With flight and agued fear! mind and charge home.
Shakeſpeare.

A'GUE FIT. n. ſ. [from ague and fit.] The paroxyſm of the ague.

This ague fit of fear is overblown;
An eaſy taſk it is to win our own. Shakeſpeare.

A'GUE PROOF. adj [from ague and proof.] Proof againſt agues; able to reſiſt the cauſes which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I ſmelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men o' their words; they told me I was every thing: 'tis a lie; I am not ague proof. Shakeſpeare.

A'GUE-TREE. n. ſ. [from ague and tree.] A name ſometimes given to ſaſſafras. Dict.

To AGU'ISE. v. a. [from a and guiſe. See GUISE.] To dreſs; to adorn; to deck: a word now not in uſe.

At other whiles ſhe would deviſe,
As her fantaſtick wit did moſt delight;
Sometimes her head ſhe fondly would aguiſe
With gaudy garlands, or freſh flowers dight
About her neck, or rings of ruſhes plight. Fairy Queen.

A'GUISH. adj. [from ague.] Having the qualities of an ague.

So calm, and ſo ſerene, but now,
What means this change on Myra's brow?
Her aguiſh love now glows and burns,
Then chills and ſhakes, and the cold fit returns. Granville.

A'GUISHNESS. n. ſ. [from aguiſh.] The quality of reſembling an ague.

AH. interjection.

1. A word noting ſometimes diſlike and cenſure.

Ah! ſinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a ſeed of evil doers, children that are corrupters, they have forſaken the Lord. Iſaiah, i. 4.

2. Sometimes contempt and exultation.

Let them not ſay in their hearts, Ah! ſo we would have it: let them not ſay, we have ſwallowed him up. Pſalm xxxv. 25.

3. Sometimes, and moſt frequently, compaſſion and complaint.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliſs is fugitive:
Diſcolour'd ſickneſs, anxious labour come,
And age and death's inexorable doom. Dryden.

Ah me! the blooming pride of May,
And that of beauty, are but one:
At morn both flouriſh bright and gay,
Both fade at evening, pale, and gone. Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expreſſes vehement deſire.

In goodneſs, as in greatneſs, they excell;
Ah! that we loved ourſelves but half ſo well. Dryden.

AHA', AHA'! interjection. A word intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide againſt me, and ſaid, Aha, aha! our eye hath ſeen it. Pſalm xxxv. 21.

AHE'AD. adv. [from a and head.]

1. Farther onward than another: a ſea term.

And now the mighty Centaur ſeems to lead,
And now the ſpeedy dolphin gets ahead. Dryden.

2. Headlong; precipitant: uſed of men.

It is mightily the fault of parents, guardians, tutors and governours, that ſo many men miſcarry. They ſuffer them at firſt to run ahead, and, when perverſe inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them. L'Eſtrange.

AHE'IGHT. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.

But have I fall'n or no?—
—From the dread ſummit of this chalky bourne!
Look up aheight, the ſhrill-gorg'd lark ſo far
Cannot be ſeen or heard. Shakeſpeare.

AHOU'AI. n. ſ. The name of a plant.

It hath funnel-ſhaped flowers of one leaf, divided into ſeveral parts at the top; the pointal, which riſes from the cup, is fixed, like a nail, to the inner part of the flower, and becomes a pear-ſhaped fleſhy fruit, incloſing a three-cornered nut.

There are two ſpecies of this plant abounding on the continent of South America: the firſt grows to the height of our common cherry-tree; its leaves are three or four inches long, and almoſt two inches broad; the wood of it ſtinks moſt abominably, and the kernel of the nut is a moſt deadly poiſon; to expel which, the Indians know no antidote, nor will they uſe the wood for fuel. The ſecond ſort, with an oleander leaf, and a yellow flower, does not grow higher than ten or twelve feet; its fruit is of a beautiful red colour when ripe, and equally poiſonous with the former. Both plants abound in every part with a milky juice. Miller.

To AID. v. a. [aider, Fr. from adjutare, Lat.] To help; to ſupport; to ſuccour.

Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid,
(So love the dread of danger doth deſpiſe)
And of him catching hold, him ſtrongly ſtaid
From drowning. Fairy Queen.

Neither ſhall they give any thing unto them that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ſhips. 1 Maccabees, viii. 26.

By the loud trumpet, which our courage aids,
We learn that ſound as well as ſenſe perſuades. Roſcommon.

AID. n. ſ. [from To aid.]

1. Help; ſupport.

The memory of uſeful things may receive conſiderable aid, if they are thrown into verſe. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Your patrimonial ſtores in peace poſſeſs;
Undoubted all your filial claim confeſs:
Your private right ſhould impious power invade,
The peers of Ithaca would arm in aid. Pope's Odyſſey.

2. The perſon that gives help or ſupport; a helper.

Thou haſt ſaid, it is not good that man ſhould be alone; let us make unto him an aid, like unto himſelf. Tobit, viii. 6.

3. [In law.]

A ſubſidy. Aid is alſo particularly uſed in matter of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another, that hath an intereſt in the cauſe in queſtion; and is likewiſe both to give ſtrength to the party that prays in aid of him, and alſo to avoid a prejudice accruing toward his own right, except it be prevented; as, when a tenant for term of life, courteſy, &c. being impleaded touching his eſtate, he may pray in aid of him in the reverſion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own. Cowell.

AIDANCE. n. ſ. [from aid.] Help; ſupport: a word little uſed.

Oft have I ſeen a timely parted ghoſt,
Of aſhy ſemblance, meagre, pale, and bloodleſs,
Being all deſcended to the lab'ring heart,
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the ſame for aidance 'gainſt the enemy. Sh. Hen. VI.

A'IDANT. adj. [aidant, Fr.] Helping; helpful.

All you unpubliſh'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate
In the good man's diſtreſs. Shakeſpeare.

A'IDER. n. ſ. [from aid.] He that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.

All along as he went, were puniſhed the adherents and aiders of the late rebels. Bacon's Henry VII.

A'IDLESS. a ſ. [from aid and leſs, an inſeparable particle.] Helpleſs; unſupported; undefended.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' the city, which he painted
With ſhunleſs deſtiny: aidleſs came off,
And with a ſudden re-enforcement, ſtruck
Corioli, like a planet. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

Had met
Already, ere my beſt ſpeed could prevent,
The aidleſs innocent lady, his wiſh'd prey. Milt. Comus.

A'IGUILET. n. ſ. [aigulet, Fr.] A point with tags; points of gold at the end of fringes.

Which all above beſprinkled was throughout
With golden aigulets that gliſter'd bright,
Like twinkling ſtars, and all the ſkirt about
Was hemm'd with golden fringes. Fairy Queen.

To AIL. v. a. [eglan, Sax. to be troubleſome.]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and ſaid unto her, what aileth thee, Hagar? fear not: for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is. Gen. xxi. 17.

2. It is uſed, in a ſenſe leſs determinate, for to affect in any manner; as, ſomething ails me that I cannot ſit ſtill; what ails the man that he laughs without reaſon?

Love ſmil'd, and thus ſaid, Want join'd to deſire is unhappy; but if he nought do deſire, what can Heraclitus ail? Sidney.

What ails me, that I cannot loſe thy thought!
Command the empreſs hither to be brought,
I, in her death, ſhall ſome diverſion find,
And rid my thoughts at once of woman-kind.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never uſed but with ſome indefinite term, or the word nothing; as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails ſomething; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never ſay, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever, or uſe definite terms with this verb.

AIL. n. ſ. [from the verb.] A diſeaſe.

Or heal, O Naiſes, thy obſcener ail. Pope.

A'ILMENT. n. ſ. [from ail.] Pain; diſeaſe.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Not decent for a huſband's eye or ear. Granville.

I am never ill, but I think of your ailments, and repine that they mutually hinder our being together. Swift.

A'ILING. participial adj. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

To AIM. v. a. [It is derived by Skinner from eſmer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour to ſtrike with a miſſive weapon; to direct towards; with the particle at.

Aim'ſt thou at princes, all amaz'd they ſaid,
The laſt of games? Pope's Odyſſey.

2. To point the view, or direct the ſteps towards any thing; to tend towards; to endeavour to reach or obtain; with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, here the world is bliſs; ſo here the end
To which all men do aim, rich to be made,
Such grace now to be happy is before thee laid. Fairy Q.

Another kind there is, which although we deſire for itſelf, as health, and virtue, and knowledge, nevertheleſs they are not the laſt mark whereat we aim, but have their further end whereunto they are referred. Hooker.

Swoln with applauſe, and aiming ſtill at more,
He now provokes the ſea gods from the ſhore. Dryden.

Religion tends to the eaſe and pleaſure, the peace and tranquillity of our minds, which all the wiſdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmoſt felicity of this life. Tillotſon.

3. To direct the miſſile weapon; more particularly taken for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye, before its diſmiſſion from the hand.

And proud Ideus, Priam's charioteer,
Who ſhakes his empty reins, and aims his airy ſpear. Dryd.

4. To gueſs.

AIM. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a miſſile weapon.

Aſcanius, young and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim;
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his parting ſides.
Dryden, Æneid.

2. The point to which the thing thrown is directed.

That

That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Shakespeare.

3. In a figurative sense, a purpose; a scheme; an intention; a design.

He trusted to have equall'd the most High,
If he oppos'd: and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne, and monarchy of God,
Rais'd impious war. Milton's Paradise Lost.

But see, how oft ambitious aims are crost,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is lost. Pope.

4. The object of a design; the thing after which any one endeavours.

The safest way is to suppose, that the epistle has but one aim, till, by a frequent perusal of it, you are forced to see there are distinct independent parts. Locke.

5. Conjecture; guess.

It is impossible, by aim, to tell it; and, for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that there was ever any of the particulars thereof. Spenser on Ireland.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things,
As yet not come to life, which, in their seeds
And weak beginnings, lie intreasur'd. Shakesp. Henry IV.

AIR. n. s. [air, Fr. aër, Lat.]

1. The element encompassing the terraqueous globe.

If I were to tell what I mean by the word air, I may say, it is that fine matter which we breathe in and breathe out continually; or it is that thin fluid body, in which the birds fly, a little above the earth; or it is that invisible matter, which fills all places near the earth, or which immediately encompasses the globe of earth and water. Watts's Logick.

2. The state of the air; or the air considered with regard to health.

There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs. Bacon.

3. Air in motion; a small gentle wind.

Fresh gales, and gentle airs,
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub
Disporting! Milton's Paradise Lost.

But safe repose, without an air of breath,
Dwells here, and a dumb quiet next to death. Dryden.

Let vernal airs through trembling osiers play,
And Albion's cliffs resound the rural lay. Pope.

4. Blast.

All the stor'd vengeancies of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness. Shakespeare.

5. Any thing light or uncertain; that is as light as air.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready, with ev'ry nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep. Shakespeare.

6. The open weather; air unconfined.

The garden was inclos'd within the square,
Where young Emilia took the morning air. Dryden.

7. Vent; utterance; emission into the air.

I would have ask'd you, if I durst for shame,
If still you lov'd? you gave it air before me.
But ah! why were we not both of a sex?
For then we might have lov'd without a crime. Dryden.

8. Publication; exposure to the publick view and knowledge.

I am sorry to find it has taken air, that I have some hand in these papers. Pope's Letters.

9. Intelligence; information.

It grew also from the airs, which the princes and states abroad received from their ambassadors and agents here; which were attending the court in great number. Bacon.

10. Poetry; a song.

And the repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet, had the pow'r
To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare. Parad. Regain.

11. Musick, whether light or serious.

This musick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both their fury and my passion,
With its sweet air. Shakespeare.

Call in some musick; I have heard, soft airs
Can charm our senses, and expel our cares. Denh. Sophy.

The same airs, which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are importune. Glanville.

Since we have such a treasury of words, so proper for the airs of musick, I wonder that persons should give so little attention. Addison, Spectator.

Born on the swelling notes, our souls aspire,
While solemn airs improve the sacred fire;
And angels lean from heav'n to hear! Pope.

—When the soul is sunk with cares,
Exalts her in enliv'ning airs. Pope.

12. The mien, or manner, of the person.

Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For the air of youth
Hopeful and chearful, in thy blood shall reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down; and last consume
The balm of life. Milton's Paradise Lost.

But, having the life before us, besides the experience of all they knew, it is no wonder to hit some airs and features, which they have missed. Dryden.

There is something wonderfully divine in the airs of this picture. Addison.

Yet should the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.

13. An affected or laboured manner or gesture; as, a lofty air, a gay air.

Whom Ancus follows, with a fawning air;
But vain within, and proudly popular. Dryden.

There are of these sort of beauties, which last but for a moment; as, the different airs of an assembly, upon the sight of an unexpected and uncommon object, some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thousand other such like things. Dryden.

Their whole lives were employed in intrigues of state, and they naturally give themselves airs of kings and princes, of which the ministers of other nations are only the representatives. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

To curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs. Pope.

He assumes and affects an entire set of very different airs; he conceives himself a being of a superior nature. Swift.

14. Appearance.

As it was communicated with the air of a secret, it soon found its way into the world. Pope.

15. [In horsemanship.] Airs denote the artificial or practised motions of a managed horse. Chambers.

To AIR. v. a. [from the noun air.]

1. To expose to the air.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture, or the chamber and bed-straw kept close, and not aired. Bacon.

We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice, when both the judges that sat upon the jail, and numbers of those that attended the business, or were present, sickened upon it, and died. Therefore it were good wisdom, that in such cases, the jail were aired, before they were brought forth. Bacon's Natural History.

As the ants were airing their provisions one winter, up comes a hungry grashopper to them, and begs a charity. L'Estrange.

Or wicker-baskets weave, or air the corn,
Or grinded grain, betwixt two marbles turn. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To take the air, or enjoy the open air, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Nay, stay a little——
Were you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such parting were too petty. Shakespeare.

I ascended the highest hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life. Addison.

3. To open to the air; as, clothes.

The others make it a matter of small commendation in itself, if they, who wear it, do nothing else but air the robes, which their place requireth. Hooker.

4. To air liquors; to warm them by the fire: a term used in conversation.

5. To make nests. In this sense, it is derived from aery, a nest. It is now out of use.

You may add their busy, dangerous, discourteous, yea, and sometimes despiteful stealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who, if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be store sufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good housewives chickens in a country. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

AIRBLADDER. n. s. [from air and bladder.]

1. Any cuticle or vesicle filled with air.

The pulmonary artery and vein pass along the surfaces of these airbladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The bladder in fishes, by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and rise or fall.

Though the airbladder in fishes seems necessary for swimming, yet some are so formed as to swim without it. Cudworth.

AIRBUILT. adj. [from air and build.] Built in the air, without any solid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The airbuilt castle, and the golden dream,

The maid's romantick wish, the chymist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame. Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

AIR-DRAWN. adj. [from air and drawn.] Drawn or painted in air.

This is the very painting of your fear,
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. Shakesp. Macbeth.

AIRER. n. s. [from to air.] He that exposes to the air.

AIRHOLE. n. s. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

AIRINESS. n. s. [from airy.]

1. Openness; exposure to the air.
2. Lightness; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains to make classick learning speak their language; if they have not succeeded, it must be imputed to a certain talkativeness and airiness represented in their tongue, which will never agree with the sedateness of the Romans, or the solemnity of the Greeks. Feton.

AIRING. n. s. [from air.] A short journey or ramble to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet serves only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give their ladies an airing in the summer season. Addison.

AIRLESS. adj. [from air.] Without communication with the free air.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit Shakesp. J. Cæsar.

AIRLING. n. s. [from air, for gaiety.] A young, light, thoughtless, gay person.

Some more there be, slight airlings, will be won
With dogs, and horses, and perhaps a whore. B. John. Catil.

AIRPUMP. n. s. [from air and pump.]

A machine by whose means the air is exhausted out of proper vessels. The principle on which it is built, is the elasticity of the air; as that on which the water pump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious instrument is ascribed to Otto de Guerick, consul of Magdebourg, who exhibited his first publick experiments before the emperour and the states of Germany, in 1654. But his machine laboured under several defects, in the force necessary to work it, which was very great, and the progress very slow; besides, it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of subjects for experiments. However, Mr. Boyle, with the assistance of Dr. Hooke, removed several of these inconveniencies; though, still, the working of this pump was laborious, by reason of the pressure of the atmosphere at every exsuction, after a vacuum was nearly obtained. This labour has been since removed by Mr. Hawksbee; who, by adding a second barrel and piston, to rise as the other fell, and fall as it rose, made the pressure of the atmosphere on the descending one, of as much service as it was of in the ascending one. Vream made a further improvement in Hawksbee's air-pump, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one. Chambers.

For the air that, in exhausted receivers of air-pumps, is exhaled from minerals, and flesh, and fruits, and liquors, is as true and genuine as to elasticity and density, or rarefaction, as that we respire in; and yet this factitious air is so far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even sooner than the very absence of all air, or a vacuum itself.

Bentley's Sermons.

AIRSHAFT. n. s. [from air and shaft.] A passage for the air into mines and subterraneous places.

By the sinking of an air shaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the steams both of the miners breath and the lamps, which would otherwise stagnate there. Ray.

AIRY. adj. [from air, aëreus, Lat.]

1. Composed of air.

The first is the transmission or emission, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections: and this is, of all the rest, the most corporeal. Bacon.

2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fishes that have wings, that are no strangers to the airy region.

3. High in air.

Whole rivers here forsake the fields below,
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channels flow.
Addison.

4. Light as air; thin; unsubstantial; without solidity.

I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train;
And, with her grisly lord, his lovely queen remain. Dry. Æn.

5. Without reality; without any steady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Nor think with wind
Of airy threats to awe whom yet with deeds
Thou can'st not. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Nor (to avoid such meanness) soaring high,
With empty sound, and airy notions, fly. Roscommon.

I have found a complaint concerning the scarcity of money, which occasioned many airy propositions for the remedy of it.

Temple's Miscellanies.

6. Fluttering; loose; as if to catch the air; full of levity.

But the epick poem is too stately to receive those little ornaments. The painters draw their nymphs in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reserved for queens and goddesses. Dryden's Æneid, Dedicat.

By this name of ladies, he means all young persons, slender, finely shaped, airy, and delicate; such as are nymphs and naiads. Dryden's Dufresny.

7. Gay; sprightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; spirited; light of heart.

He that is merry and airy at shore, when he sees a sad and a loud tempest on the sea, or dances briskly when God thunders from heaven, regards not when God speaks to all the world.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

AISLE. n. s. [Thus the word is written by Addison, but perhaps improperly; since it seems deducible only from either aile, a wing; or allée, a path; and is therefore to be written aile.] The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

The abbey is by no means so magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef, with a double aisle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addison.

AIT, or EYGHT. n. s. [supposed, by Skinner, to be corrupted from islet.] A small island in a river.

AJUTAGE. n. s. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to waterworks. Dict.

To AKE. v. n. [from ἄχος, Gr, and therefore more grammatically written ache. See ACHE.]

1. To feel a lasting pain, generally of the internal pains; distinguished from smart, which is commonly used of uneasiness in the external parts; but this is no accurate account.

To sue, and be deny'd, such common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Shakespeare's Timon.

Let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthful members with a sense
Of pain. Shakespeare's Othello.

Were the pleasure of drinking accompanied, the very moment, with that sick stomach and aking head, which, in some men, are sure to follow, I think, no body would ever let wine touch his lips. Locke.

His limbs must ake, with daily toils oppress,
Ere long-wish'd night brings necessary rest. Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper sense, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakespeare has used it, still more licentiously, of the soul.

Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails,
And each, by turns, his aking heart assails. Addis. Ov. Met.

My soul akes
To know when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

AKIN. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied to by blood; used of persons.

I do not envy thee, dear Pamela; only I could wish, that, being thy sister in nature, I were not so far off akin in fortune.

Sidney, b. ii.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the same properties; used of things.

The cankered passion of envy is nothing akin to the silly envy of the ass. L'Estrange, Fab.

Some limbs again in bulk or stature
Unlike, and not akin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends,
Because one serves the other's ends. Prior.

He separates it from questions with which it may have been complicated, and distinguishes it from questions which may be akin to it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

AL, ATTLE, ADLE, do all seem to be corruptions of the Saxon Æpel, noble, famous; as also, Alling and Adling, are corruptions of Æpeling, noble, splendid, famous. Gibson's Camden.

Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon Ealb, ancient; and so, oftentimes, the initial al, being melted by the Normans, from the Saxon ealb. Idem, ibid.

ALABASTER. n. s. [ἀλάβαστρον.]

A kind of soft marble, easier to cut, and less durable, than the other kind; some is white, which is most common; some of the colour of horn, and transparent; some yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients used it to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakesp. Othello.

ALABASTER. adj. Made of alabaster.

I cannot forbear reckoning part of an alabaster column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire, and may be seen over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the shape of a cross, in a hole of the wall; so that the light passing through it, makes it look to those in the church, like a huge transparent cross of amber. Addison on Italy.

ALA'CK. interject. [This word seems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expression of sorrow.

Alack! when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would and we would not.
Shakeſpeare's Meaſure for Meaſure.

At thunder now no more I ſtart,
Than at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay, what's incredible, alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

ALA'CADAY. interject. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting ſorrow and melancholy.

ALA'CRIOUSLY. adv. [from alacrious, ſuppoſed to be formed from alacris; but of alacrious I have found no example.]

Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriouſly expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had atchieved for his country. Government of the Tongue, § 4.

ALA'CRITY. n. ſ. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulneſs, expreſſed by ſome outward token; ſprightlineſs; gayety; livelineſs; cheerful willingneſs.

Wherefore, in the end, theſe orders were, on all ſides, aſſented unto with no leſs alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to ſhew when they take conditions, ſuch as it liketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow ſtraits of advantage. Hooker's Preface.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of ſpirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Sh. Rich. III.

But glad, that now his ſea ſhould find a ſhore,
With freſh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. ii. l. 1011.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or ſooner underſtood the ſign to fly:
With ſuch alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praiſe them all, the ſtates ſtood by. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

ALAMI'RE n. ſ. The loweſt note but one in Guido Aretine's ſcale of muſick.

ALAMO'DE adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the faſhion: a low word. It is uſed likewiſe by ſhopkeepers for a kind of thin ſilken manufacture.

ALA'ND. adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his couſin, were caſt aland, far off from the place whither their deſires would have guided them. Sidney, b. ii.

Three more, fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Daſh'd on the ſhallows of the moving ſand,
And, in mid ocean, left them moor'd aland. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

ALA'RM. n. ſ. [from the French, à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry by which men are ſummoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you ſhall blow, but you ſhall not ſound an alarm. Numbers, x. 7.

Behold, God himſelf is with us for our captain, and his prieſts with ſounding trumpets, to cry alarms againſt you. 2 Chron. xiii. 12.

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With ſhrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden's Cæcilia.

Taught by this ſtroke, renounce the wars alarms,
And learn to tremble at the name of arms. Pope's Iliad.

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or diſturbance.

Is it then true, as diſtant rumours run,
That crowds of rivals, for thy mothers charms,
Thy palace fill with inſults and alarms. Pope's Odyſſ. b. iii.

To ALA'RM. v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms; to diſturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The waſp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addiſon.

2. To ſurpriſe with the apprehenſion of any danger.

When rage miſguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain diſtreſſes, or when pleaſure charms. Tickell on Add.

3. To diſturb in general.

His ſon, Cupavo, bruſh'd the briny flood;
Upon his ſtern a brawny Centaur ſtood,
Who heav'd a rock, and threat'ning ſtill to throw,
With lifted hands alarm'd the ſeas below. Dryd. Æneid.

ALA'RMBELL. n. ſ. [from alarm and bell.] The bell that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

The alarmbell rings from our Alhambra walls,
And from the ſtreets, ſound drums and ataballes.
Dryden's Conqueſt of Granada.

ALA'RMING. particip. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; ſurpriſing; as, an alarming meſſage; an alarming pain.

ALA'RMPOST. n. ſ. [from alarm and poſt.] The poſt or place appointed to each body of men, to appear at, when an alarm ſhall happen.

ALA'RUM. n. ſ. [corrupted, as it ſeems, from alarm. See ALARM.]

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruiſed arms hung up for monuments,
Our ſtern alarums chang'd to merry meetings.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

Hence too, that ſhe might better hear,
She ſets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harſh or ſweet,
Are but the alarums which they beat. Prior.

To ALA'RUM. v. a. [corrupted from to alarm. See ALARM.]

Withered murder
(Alarum'd by his ſentinel the wolf,
Whoſe howl's his watch) thus with his ſtealthy pace,
With Tarquin's raviſhing ſtrides, tow'rds his deſign
Moves like a ghoſt. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

ALA'S. interject. [helas, Fr. eylacs, Dutch.]

1. A word expreſſing lamentation, when we uſe it of ourſelves.

But yet, alas! O but yet alas! our haps be but hard haps. Sidney, b. i.

Alas! how little from the grave we claim?
Thou but preſerv'ſt a form, and I a name. Pope's Epiſt.

2. A word of pity, when uſed of other perſons.

Alas! poor Protheus, thou haſt entertain'd
A fox to be the ſhepherd of thy lambs.
Shakeſpeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

3. A word of ſorrow and concern, when uſed of things.

Thus ſaith the Lord God, Smite with thine hand, and ſtamp with thy foot, and ſay, Alas! for all the evil abominations of the houſe of Iſrael. Ezekiel, vi. 11.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cauſe!
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. xi. l. 461.

Alas! for pity of this bloody field;
Piteous indeed muſt be, when I, a ſpirit,
Can have ſo ſoft a ſenſe of human woes. Dryd. K. Arthur.

ALAS THE DAY. interject. Ah, unhappy day!

Alas the day! I never gave him cauſe. Shakeſp. Othello.

Alas a day! you have ruined my poor miſtreſs: you have made a gap in her reputation; and can you blame her, if ſhe make it up with her huſband? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

ALAS THE WHILE. interject. Ah, unhappy time!

All as the ſheep, ſuch was the ſhepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was, (alas the while!)
May ſeem he loved, or elſe ſome care he took. Spenſ. Paſtor.

ALA'TE. adv. [from a and late.] Lately; no long time ago.

ALB. n. ſ. [album, Lat.] A ſurplice; a white linen veſtment worn by prieſts.

ALBE'IT. adv. [a coalition of the words all be it ſo. Skinner.] Although; notwithſtanding; though it ſhould be.

This very thing is cauſe ſufficient, why duties belonging to each kind of virtue, albeit the law of reaſon teach them, ſhould, notwithſtanding, be preſcribed even by human law. Hooker.

Of one, whoſe eyes,
Albeit unuſed to the melting mood,
Drop tears, as faſt as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

He, who has a probable belief, that he ſhall meet with thieves in ſuch a road, thinks himſelf to have reaſon enough to decline it, albeit he is ſure to ſuſtain ſome leſs, though yet conſiderable, inconvenience by his ſo doing. South's Sermons.

ALBUGI'NEOUS. adj. [albugo, Lat. the white of an egg.]

Eggs, I obſerve, will freeze in the albuginious part thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

I opened it by inciſion, giving vent firſt to an albugineous, then to white concocted matter: upon which the tumour ſunk. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ALCHY'MICAL. adj. [from alchymy.] Relating to alchymy; produced by alchymy.

The roſe noble, then current for ſix ſhillings and eight pence, the alchymiſts do affirm as an unwritten verity, was made by projection or multiplication alchymical of Raymond Lully in the tower of London. Camden's Remains.

ALCHY'MICALLY. adv. [from alchymical.] In the manner of an alchymiſt; by means of alchymy.

Raymond Lully would prove it alchymically. Camden.

A'LCHYMIST. n. ſ. [from alchymy.] One who purſues or profeſſes the ſcience of alchymy.

To ſolemnize this day, the glorious ſun
Stays in his courſe, and plays the alchymiſt,
Turning, with ſplendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glitt'ring gold. Shakeſp.

Every alchymiſt knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change; and that after it has been divided by corroſive liquors, into inviſible parts, yet may preſently be precipitated, ſo as to appear in its own form. Grew.

ALCHYMY. n. ſ. [of al, Arab. and χυμεια.]

1. The more ſublime and occult part of chymiſtry, which propoſes, for its object, the tranſmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous than this licentious and deluding art, which changeth the meaning of words, as alchymy doth, or would do, the ſubſtance of metals, maketh of any thing what it liſteth, and bringeth, in the end, all truth to nothing. Hooker.

O he ſits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richeſt alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthineſs. Shakeſp.

Princes do but play us; compared to this,
All honours mimick, all wealth alchymy. Donne.

2. A kind of mixed metal uſed for ſpoons, and kitchen utenſils.

The golden colour may be ſome mixture of orpiment, ſuch as they uſe to braſs in the yellow alchymy. Bacon.

White alchymy is made of pan-braſs one pound, and arſenicum three ounces; or alchymy is made of copper and auripigmentum. Bacon's Phyſical Remains.

They bid cry,
With trumpets regal ſound, the great reſult:
Tow'rds the four winds, four ſpeedy cherubim
Put to their mouths the ſounding alchymy,
By herald's voice explain'd. Milton.

ALCOHOL. n. ſ. An Arabick term uſed by chymiſts for a high rectified dephlegmated ſpirit of wine, or for any thing reduced into an impalpable powder. Quincy.

If the ſame ſalt ſhall be reduced into alcohol, as the chymiſts ſpeak, or an impalpable powder, the particles and intercepted ſpaces will be extremely leſſened. Boyle.

Sal volatile oleoſum will coagulate the ſerum on account of the alcohol, or rectified ſpirit which it contains. Arbuth.

ALCOHOLIZA'TION. n. ſ. [from alcoholize.] The act of alcoholizing or rectifying ſpirits; or of reducing bodies to an impalpable powder.

To ALCOHOLIZE. v. a. [from alcohol.]

1. To make an alcohol; that is, to rectify ſpirits till they are wholly dephlegmated.

2. To comminute powder till it is wholly without roughneſs.

ALCORAN. n. ſ [al and koran, Arab.] The book of the Mahometan precepts, and credenda.

If this would ſatisfy the conſcience, we might not only take the preſent covenant, but ſubſcribe to the council of Trent; yea, and to the Turkiſh alcoran; and ſwear to maintain and defend either of them. Saunderſon againſt the Covenant.

ALCO'VE. n. ſ. [alcoba, Span.]

A receſs, or part of a chamber, ſeparated by an eſtrade, or partition of a column, and other correſpondent ornaments; in which is placed a bed of ſtate, and ſometimes ſeats to entertain company. Trevoux.

The weary'd champion lulls in ſoft alcoves,
The nobleſt boaſt of thy romantick groves.
Oft, if the muſe preſage, ſhall he be ſeen
By Roſamonda fleeting o'er the green,
In dreams be hail'd by heroes' mighty ſhades,
And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades. Tickell.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And ſlept beneath the pompous colonnade. Pope.

ALDER. n. ſ. [alnus, Lat.] A tree having leaves reſembling thoſe of the hazel; the male flowers, or katkins, are produced at remote diſtances from the fruit, on the ſame tree; the fruit is ſquamoſe, and of a conical figure.

The ſpecies are; 1. The common or round-leaved alder. 2. The long-leaved alder. 3. The ſcarlet alder.

Theſe trees delight in a very moiſt ſoil, where few others will thrive, and are a great improvement to ſuch lands. They may be alſo planted on the ſides of brooks, and cut for poles every third or fourth year. The wood is uſed by turners, and will endure long under ground, or in water. Theſe trees are propagated either by planting layers, or truncheons, about three feet in length, in February or March. Millar.

Without the grot, a various ſilver ſcene
Appear'd around, and groves of living green;
Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cypreſs form'd a fragrant ſhade. Pope.

ALDERLI'EVEST. adj. ſuperl. [from ald, alder, old, elder, and lieve, dear, beloved.] Moſt beloved; which was held the longeſt poſſeſſion of the heart.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams,
In courtly company, or at my beads,
With you, mine alderlieveſt ſovereign;

Makes me the bolder to ſalute my king
With ruder terms. Shakeſpeare.

A'LDERMAN. n. ſ. [from ald, old, and man.]

1. The ſame as ſenator. Cowell. A governour or magiſtrate, originally, as the name imports, choſen on account of the experience which his age had given him.

Tell him, myſelf, the mayor, and aldermen,
Are come to have ſome conf'rence with his grace. Shak.

Though my own aldermen conferr'd my bays,
To me committing their eternal praiſe;
Their full-fed heroes, their pacifick may'rs,
Their annual trophies, and their monthly wars. Pope.

2. In the following paſſage it is, I think, improperly uſed.

But if the trumpet's clangour you abhor,
And dare not be an alderman of war,
Take to a ſhop, behind a counter lie. Dryd.

A'LDERMANLY. adv. [from alderman.] Like an alderman; belonging to an alderman.

Theſe, and many more, ſuffered death, in envy to their virtues and ſuperiour genius, which emboldened them, in exigencies (wanting an aldermanly diſcretion) to attempt ſervice out of the common forms. Swift's Miſcellanies.

A'LDERN. adj. [from alder.] Made of alder.

Then aldern boats firſt plow'd the ocean;
The ſailors number'd then, and nam'd each ſtar. May's Virg.

ALE. n. ſ. [eale, Sax.]

1. A liquor made by infuſing malt. [See MALT.] in hot water, and then fermenting the liquor.

I'll ſcratch your heads; you muſt be ſeeing chriſtenings. Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude raſcals? Shakeſpeare's Henry VIII.

The fertility of the ſoil in grain, and its being not proper for vines, put the Egyptians upon drinking ale, of which they were the inventors. Arbuthnot.

2. A merry meeting uſed in country places.

And all the neighbourhood, from old records
Of antick proverbs drawn from Whitſon lords,
And their authorities at wakes and ales,
With country precedents, and old wives tales,
We bring you now. Ben. Johnſon.

A'LEBERRY. n. ſ. [from ale and berry.] A beverage made by boiling ale with ſpice and ſugar, and ſops of bread: a word only uſed in converſation.

ALE BREWER. n. ſ. [from ale and brewer.] One that profeſſes to brew ale.

The ſummer-made malt brews ill, and is diſliked by moſt of our ale-brewers. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

A'LECONNER. n. ſ. [from ale and con.] An officer in the city of London, whoſe buſineſs is to inſpect the meaſures of publick houſes. Four of them are choſen or rechoſen annually by the common-hall of the city; and whatever might be their uſe formerly, their places are now regarded only as ſine-cures for decayed citizens.

A'LECOST. n. ſ. [perhaps from ale, and coſtus, Lat.] The name of an herb. Dict.

A'LECTRYOMANCY, or A'LECTOROMANCY. n. ſ. [ἀλεκτρυὼν and μαντις.] Divination by a cock. Dict.

A'LEGER. adj. [allegre, Fr. alacris, Lat.] Gay; chearful; ſprightly: a word not now uſed.

Certainly, this berrycoffee, the root and leaf betle, and leaf tobacco, of which the Turks are great takers, do all condenſe the ſpirits, and make them ſtrong and aleger. Bacon.

A'LEHOOF. n. ſ. [from ale and hoofed, head.] Groundivy, ſo called by our Saxon anceſtors, as being their chief ingredient in ale. See GROUNDIVY.

Alehoof, or groundivy, is, in my opinion, of the moſt excellent and moſt general uſe and virtue, of any plants we have among us. Temple.

A'LEHOUSE. n. ſ. [from ale and houſe.] A houſe where ale is publickly ſold; a tipling-houſe. It is diſtinguiſhed from a tavern, where they ſell wine.

Thou moſt beauteous inn,
Why ſhould hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alehouſe gueſt? Shakeſp.

One would think it ſhould be no eaſy matter to bring any man of ſenſe in love with an alehouſe; indeed of ſo much ſenſe, as ſeeing and ſmelling amounts to; there being ſuch ſtrong encounters of both, as would quickly ſend him packing, did not the love of good fellowſhip reconcile to theſe nuſances. South.

Thee ſhall each alehouſe, thee each gilhouſe mourn,
And anſw'ring ginſhops ſowrer ſighs return. Pope.

A'LEHOUSE KEEPER. n. ſ. [from alehouſe and keeper.] He that keeps ale publickly to ſell.

You reſemble perfectly the two alehouſe keepers in Holland, who were at the ſame time burgomaſters of the town, and taxed one another's bills alternately. Bolingbroke to Swift.

A'LEKNIGHT. n. ſ. [from ale and knight.] A pot companion; a tipler: a word now out of uſe.

The old aleknights of England were well depainted out of him, in the ale-houſe colours of that time, in this manner. Camden.

ALE'MBICK.

ALE'MBICK. n. ſ. A veſſel uſed in diſtilling, conſiſting of a veſſel placed over a fire in which is contained the ſubſtance to be diſtilled, and a concave cloſely fitted on, into which the fumes ariſe by the heat; this cover has a beak or ſpout, into which the vapours riſe, and by which they paſs into a ſerpentine pipe, which is kept cool by making many convolutions in a tub of water; here the vapours are condenſed, and what entered the pipe in fumes, comes out in drops.

Though water may be rarefied into inviſible vapours, yet it is not changed into air, but only ſcattered into minute parts; which meeting together in the alembick, or in the receiver, do preſently return into ſuch water as they conſtituted before. Boyle.

ALE'NGTH. adv. [from a for at, and length.] At full length; along; ſtretched along the ground.

ALERT. adj. [alerte, Fr. perhaps from alacris, but probably from à l'art, according to art or rule.]

1. In the military ſenſe, on guard; watchful; vigilant; ready at a call.
2. In the common ſenſe, briſk; pert; petulant; ſmart; implying ſome degree of cenſure and contempt.

I ſaw an alert young fellow, that cocked his hat upon a friend of his, and accoſted him after the following manner: Well, Jack, the old prig is dead at laſt. Addiſon's Spect.

ALE'RTNESS. n. ſ. [from alert.] The quality of being alert; ſprightlineſs; pertneſs.

That alertneſs and unconcern for matters of common life, which a campaign or two would infallibly have given him. Addiſon's Spectator.

ALETA'STER. n. ſ. [from ale and taſter.] An officer appointed in every courtleet, and ſworn to look to the aſſize and the goodneſs of bread and ale, or beer, within the precincts of that lordſhip. Cowell.

A'LEVAT. n. ſ. [from ale and vat.] The tub in which the ale is fermented.

A'LEWASHED. adj. [from ale and waſh.] Steeped or ſoaked in ale.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid ſuit of the camp, will do among foaming battles and alewaſhed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. Shakeſpeare.

ALEWI'FE. n. ſ. [from ale and wife. A woman that keeps an alehouſe.

Perhaps he will ſwagger and hector, and threaten to beat and butcher an alewife, or take the goods by force, and throw them the bad halfpence. Swift's Draper's Letters.

A'LEXANDERS. n. ſ. [Smyrnium, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The flowers are produced in umbels, conſiſting of ſeveral leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a roſe; theſe reſt upon the empalement, which afterward becomes an almoſt globular fruit, compoſed of two pretty thick ſeeds, ſometimes ſhaded like a creſcent, gibbous, and ſtreaked on one ſide, and plain on the other.

The ſpecies are; 1. Common Alexanders. 2. Foreign Alexanders, with a round leaf, &c.

The firſt of theſe ſorts, which is that ordered by the college for medicinal uſe, grows wild in divers parts of England, and may be propagated by ſowing their ſeeds upon an open ſpot of ground in Auguſt. Millar.

A'LEXANDER'S FOOT. n. ſ. The name of an herb.

ALEXA'NDRINE. n. ſ. A kind of verſe borrowed from the French, firſt uſed in a poem called Alexander. They conſiſt, among the French, of twelve and thirteen ſyllables, in alternate couplets; and, among us, of twelve.

Our numbers ſhould, for the moſt part, be lyrical. For variety, or rather where the majeſty of thought requires it, they may be ſtretched to the Engliſh heroick of five feet, and to the French Alexándrine of ſix. Dryden.

Then, at the laſt, and only couplet fraught
With ſome unmeaning thing they call a thought,
A needleſs Alexandrine ends the ſong,
That, like a wounded ſnake, drags it ſlow length along.
Pope's Eſſay on Criticiſm.

ALEXIPHA'RMICK. adj. [from ἀλεξέω and φάρμακον.] That which drives away poiſon; antidotal; that which oppoſes infection.

That ſome antidotal quality it may have, we have no reaſon to deny; for ſince elke's hoofs and horns are magnified for epilepſies, ſince not only the bone in the heart, but the horn of a deer, is alexipharmick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALEXITE'RICAL, or ALEXITE'RICK. adj. [from ἀλεξέω.] That which drives away poiſon; that which reſiſts in fevers.

A'LGATES. adv. [from all and gate. Skinner. Gate is the ſame as via; and ſtill uſed for way in the Scottiſh dialect.] On any terms; every way: now obſolete.

Nor had the boaſter ever riſen more,
But that Rinaldo's horſe ev'n then down fell,
And I with the fall his leg oppreſs'd ſo ſore,
That, for a ſpace, there muſt he algates dwell. Fairfax.

ALGEBRA. n. ſ. [an Arabick word of uncertain etymology; derived, by ſome, from Geber the philoſopher; by ſome, from jebr, parcement; by others from algebiſta, a bone-ſetter; by Almage, from algiabr, the reſtitution of things broken.]

This is a peculiar kind of arithmetick, which takes the quantity ſought, whether it be a number or a line, or any other quantity, as if it were granted, and, by means of one or more quantities given, proceeds by conſequence, till the quantity at firſt only ſuppoſed to be known, or at leaſt ſome power thereof, is found to be equal to ſome quantity or quantities which are known, and conſequently itſelf is known. The origin of this art is very obſcure. It was in uſe, however, among the Arabs, long before it came into this part of the world; and they are ſuppoſed to have borrowed it from the Perſians, and the Perſians from the Indians. The firſt Greek author of algebra was Diophantus, who, about the year 800, wrote thirteen books. In 1494, Lucas Pacciolus, or Lucas de Burgos, a cordelier, printed a treatiſe of algebra, in Italian, at Venice. He ſays, that algebra came originally from the Arabs, and never mentions Diophantus; which makes it probable, that that authour was not yet known in Europe; whoſe method was very different from that of the Arabs, obſerved by Pacciolus and his firſt European followers. His algebra goes no farther than ſimple and quadratick equations; and only ſome of the others advanced to the ſolution of cubick equations. After ſeveral improvements by Vieta, Oughtred, Harriot, Deſcartes, Sir Iſaac Newton brought this art to the height at which it ſtill continues. Trevoux. Chambers.

It would ſurely require no very profound ſkill in algebra, to reduce the difference of nine-pence in thirty ſhillings. Swift.

ALGEBRA'ICK. ALGEBRA'ICAL. adj. [from algebra.]

1. Relating to algebra; as, an algebraical treatiſe.
2. Containing operations of algebra; as, an algebraical computation.

ALGEBRA'IST. n. ſ. [from algebra.] A perſon that underſtands or practiſes the ſcience of algebra.

When any dead body is found in England, no algebraiſt or uncipherer can uſe more ſubtle ſuppoſitions, to find the demonſtration or cipher, than every unconcerned perſon doth to find the murderers. Graunt's Bill of Mortality.

Confining themſelves to deſcribe almoſt nothing elſe but the ſynthetick and analytick methods of geometricians and algebraiſts, they have too much narrowed the rules of method, as though every thing were to be treated in mathematical forms. Watts's Logick.

A'LGID. adj. [algidus, Lat.] Cold; chill. Dict.

ALGI'DITY. A'LGIDNESS. n. ſ. [from algid.] Chilneſs; cold. Dict.

ALGI'FIC. adj. [from algor, Lat.] That which produces cold. Dict.

A'LGOR. n. ſ. [Lat.] Extreme cold; chilneſs. Dict.

A'LGORISM. A'LGORITHM. n. ſ. Arabick words, which are uſed to imply the ſix operations of arithmetick, or the ſcience of numbers. Dict.

ALGO'SE. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Dict.

ALIAS. adv. A Latin word, ſignifying otherwiſe; often uſed in the trials of criminals, whoſe danger has obliged them to change their names; as, Simpſon alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwiſe Smith, otherwiſe Baker.

A'LIBLE. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nouriſhing; that which may be nouriſhed. Dict.

A'LIEN. adj. [alienus, Lat.]

1. Foreign, or not of the ſame family or land.

The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryden.

But who can tell, what pangs, what ſharp remorſe,
Torment the Boian prince? from native ſoil
Exil'd by fate, torn from the tender embrace
Of weeping conſort, and depriv'd the ſight
Of his young guiltleſs progeny, he ſeeks
Inglorious ſhelter in an alien land. Philips.

2. Eſtranged from; not allied to; adverſe to; with the particle from, and ſometimes to, but improperly.

To declare my mind to the diſciples of the fire, by a ſimili-tude not alien from their profeſſion. Boyle.

The ſentiment that ariſes, is a conviction of the deplorable ſtate of nature, to which ſin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature, alien from God and goodneſs, and a prey to the great deſtroyer. Rogers's Sermons.

They encouraged perſons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to ſtrengthen their faction. Swift's Miſcellanies.

A'LIEN. n. ſ. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a deniſon; a man of another country or family; not allied; a ſtranger.

In whomſoever theſe things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children; them only ſhe holdeth for aliens and ſtrangers, in whom theſe things are not found. Hooker.

If it be prov'd againſt an alien,
He ſeeks the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainſt the which he doth contrive,
Shall ſeize on half his goods. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.

The mere Iriſh were not only accounted aliens, but enemies, and altogether out of the protection of the law; ſo as it was no capital offence to kill them. Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou haſt rudely loſt,
Which by thy younger brother is ſupply'd,
And art almoſt an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood. Shakeſp.

Their famous lawgiver condemned the perſons, who ſat idle in diviſions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Addiſon.

2. In law.

An alien is one born in a ſtrange country, and never enfranchiſed. A man born out of the land, ſo it be within the limits beyond the ſeas, or of Engliſh parents out of the king's obedience, ſo the parents, at the time of the birth, be of the king's obedience, is not alien. If one born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, his children (if he beget any here) are not aliens, but denizens. Cowell.

To A'LIEN. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another.

If the ſon alien thoſe lands, and then repurchaſe them again in fee, now the rules of deſcents are to be obſerved, as if he were the original purchaſer. Hale.

2. To eſtrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averſe to; with from.

The king was wonderfully diſquieted, when he found, that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of, or inclination to, the marriage. Clarendon.

A'LIENABLE. adj. [from To alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred.

Land is alienable, and treaſure is tranſitory, and both muſt, at one time or other, paſs from him, either by his own voluntary act, or by the violence and injuſtice of others, or at leaſt by fate. Dennis.

To A'LIENATE. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To tranſfer the property of any thing to another.

The countries were once chriſtian, and members of the church, and where the golden candleſticks did ſtand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no chriſtians left. Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections; with the particle from, where the firſt poſſeſſor is mentioned.

The manner of mens writing muſt not alienate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never ſo true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a ſmall thing perſuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes ſurvey'd the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Milton.

Any thing that is apt to diſturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, ſuch as croſs and diſtaſteful humours, is, either expreſsly, or by clear conſequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Teſtament. Tillotſon.

Her mind was quite alienated from the honeſt Caſtilian, whom ſhe was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow. Addiſ.

A'LIENATE. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; ſtranger to; with the particle from.

They are moſt damnably wicked; impatient for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition and revenge, by all deſperate methods; wholly alienate from truth, law, religion, mercy, conſcience, or honour. Swift.

ALIENA'TION. n. ſ. [alienatio, Lat.]

1. The act of transferring property.

The beginning of this ordinance was for the maintenance of their lands in their poſterity, and for excluding all innovation or alienation thereof unto ſtrangers. Spenſer.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, towards the cloſe of her reign, to give a check to that ſacrilege. Her ſucceſſour paſſed a law, which prevented abſolutely all future alienations of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property, have created new and great dependencies. Swift.

2. The ſtate of being alienated; as, the eſtate was waſted during its alienation.

3. Change of affection.

It it left but in dark memory, what the caſe of this perſon was, and what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon.

4. Applied to the mind, it means diſorder of the faculties.

Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulſion, though not againſt, yet without their wills; as in alienation of mind, or any like inevitable utter abſence of wit and judgment. Hooker.

ALI'FEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.] Having wings. D.

ALI'GEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dict.

To ALI'GGE. v. a. [from a, and lig, to lie down.] To lay; to allay; to throw down; to ſubdue: an old word even in the time of Spenſer, now wholly forgotten.

Thomalin, why ſitten we ſo,
As weren overwent with woe:
Upon ſo fair a morrow,
The joyous time now nigheth faſt,
That ſhall aligge this bitter blaſt,
And ſlake the winter ſorrow. Spenſer.

To ALI'GHT. v. n. [alihtan, Sax af-lichten, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and ſtop. The word implies the idea of deſcending; as of a bird from the wing; a traveller from his horſe or carriage, and generally of reſting or ſtopping.

There ancient night arriving, did alight
From her high weary waine. Fairy Queen.

There is alighted at your gate
A young Venetian. Shakeſpeare's Merchant of Venice.

Slackneſs breeds worms; but the ſure traveller,
Though he alights ſometimes, ſtill goeth on. Herbert.

When marching with his foot he walks till night;
When with his horſe he never will alight. Denham.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan ſhore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;
The firſt that ſail'd in air, 'tis ſung by Fame,
To the Cumean coaſt at length he came,
And here alighting built this coſtly frame. Dryden.

When he was admoniſhed by his ſubject to deſcend, he came down gently and circling in the air, and ſinging to the ground. Like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her ſong till ſhe alights; ſtill preparing for a higher flight at her next ſally. Dryden.

When finiſh'd was the fight,
The victors from their luſty ſteeds alight;
Like them diſmounted all the ſtarry train. Dryd. Fables.

Should a ſpirit of ſuperiour rank, a ſtranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be? Addiſon.

2. It is uſed alſo of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon.

But ſtorms of ſtones from the proud temple's height,
Pour down, and on our batter'd helms alight. Dryden.

ALI'KE. adv. [from a and like.] With reſemblance; without difference; in the ſame manner; in the ſame form.

The darkneſs hideth not from thee; but the night ſhineth as the day: the darkneſs and the light are both alike to thee. Pſalms.

With thee converſing, I forget all time;
All ſeaſons, and their change, all pleaſe alike. Milton.

Riches cannot reſcue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the ſlave. Dryd. Juv.

Let us unite at leaſt in an equal zeal for thoſe capital doctrines, which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury.

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in place,
But diff'ring far in figure and in face. Pope.

A'LIMENT. n. ſ. [alimentum, Lat.] Nouriſhment; that which nouriſhes; nutriment; food.

New parts are added to our ſubſtance; and as we die, we are born daily; nor can we give an account, how the aliment is ſo prepared for nutrition, or by what mechaniſm is is diſtributed. Glanville.

All bodies which, by the animal faculties, can be changed into the fluids and ſolids of our bodies, are called aliments. But, to take it in the largeſt ſenſe, by aliment, I underſtand every thing which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink; and ſeaſoning, as ſalt, ſpice, vinegar. &c. Arbuthnot.

ALIME'NTAL. adj. [from aliment.] That which has the quality of aliment; that which nouriſhes; that which feeds.

The ſun, that light imparts to all, receives
From all his alimental recompenſe,
In humid exhalations. Milton.

Except they be water'd from higher regions, theſe weeds muſt loſe their alimental ſap, and wither themſelves. Brown.

Th' induſtrious, when the ſun in Leo rides,
And darts his ſultrieſt beams, portending drought,
Forget not, at the foot of ev'ry plant,
To ſink a circling trench, and daily pour
A juſt ſupply of alimental ſtreams,
Exhauſted ſap recruiting. Philips.

ALIME'NTARINESS. n. ſ. [from alimentary.] The quality of being alimentary, or of affording nouriſhment. Dict.

ALIMENTARY. adj. [from aliment.]

1. That which belongs or relates to aliment.

The ſolution of the aliment by maſtication is neceſſary; without it, the aliment could not be diſpoſed for the changes, which it receives as it paſſeth through the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That which has the quality of aliment, or the power of nouriſhing.

I do not think that water ſupplies animals, or even plants, with nouriſhment, but ſerves for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and diſtribute them to the ſeveral parts of the body. Ray.

Of alimentary roots, ſome are pulpy and very nutritious; as, turneps and carrots. Theſe have a fattening quality, which they manifeſt in feeding of cattle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ALIMENTA'TION. n. ſ. [from aliment.] The power of affording aliment; the quality of nouriſhing.

Plants do nouriſh; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Bacon.

ALIMO'NIOUS. adj. [from alimony.] That which nouriſhes: a word very little in uſe.

The plethora renders us lean, by ſuppreſſing our ſpirits, whereby they are incapacitated of digeſting the alimonious humours into the fleſh. Harvey.

A'LIMONY. n. ſ. [alimonia, Lat.]

Alimony ſignifies that legal proportion of the huſband's eſtate, which, by the ſentence of the eccleſiaſtical court, is allowed to the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any separation from him, provided it be not caused by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Before they settled hands and hearts,
Till alimony or death them parts. Hudibras.

A'LIQUANT. adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number, which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly; as 3 is an aliquant of 10, thrice 3 being 9, four times 3 making 12.

A'LIQUOT. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity, such as will exactly measure it without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12, because, being taken four times, it will just measure it.

A'LISH. adj. [from ale.] Resembling ale; having qualities of ale.

They let it stand five days before they put it into the cask, stirring it and beating down the yeast into it; this gives it the sweet alish taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A'LITURE. n. s. [alitura, Lat.] Nourishment. Dict.

ALI'VE. adj. [from a and live.]

1. In the state of life; not dead.

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead they were,
But some faint signs of feeble life appear. Dryden.
Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
Not scornful virgins who their charms survive. Pope.

2. In a figurative sense, unextinguished; undestroyed; active; in full force.

Those good and learned men had reason to wish, that their proceedings might be favoured, and the good affection of such as inclined toward them, kept alive. Hooker.

3. Chearful; sprightly; full of alacrity.

She was not so much alive the whole day, if she slept more than six hours. Clarissa.

4. In a popular sense, it is used only to add an emphasis, like the French du monde; as, the best man alive; that is, the best, with an emphasis.

And to those brethren said, rise, rise by-live,
And unto battle do yourselves address;
For yonder comes the proweſt knight alive,
Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobiless. Fairy Queen.

The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest man alive, could not look upon the destruction of monarchy with any pleasure. Clarendon.

John was quick and understood his business very well; but no man alive was more careless in looking into his accounts. Arbuthnot.

A'LKAHEST. n. s. A word used first by Paracelsus, and adopted by his followers, to signify an universal dissolvent, or liquour, which has the power of resolving all things into their first principles.

ALKALE'SCENT. adj. [from alkali.] That which has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alcalescent or anti-acid. Arbuthnot.

A'LKALI. n. s. [The word alkali comes from an herb, called by the Egyptians kali; by us glasswort.] This herb they burnt to ashes, boiled them in water, and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white salt; this they called sal kali, or alkali. It is corrosive, producing putrefaction in animal substances, to which it is applied. Arbuthnot.

Any substance, which, when mingled with acid, produces effervescence and fermentation. See ALKALIZATE.

A'LKALINE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquour will keep an animal from starving very long, by diluting the fluids, and consequently keeping them from this alkaline state, which is confirmed by experience; for people have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ALKA'LIZATE. v. a. [from alkali.] To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

ALKA'LIZATE. adj. [from alkali.] That which has the qualities of alkali; that which is impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that, which it discovers, being dissolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalizate salts. Boyle.

The colour of violets seems to be of that order, because their syrup, by acid liquours, turns red, and, by urinous and alkalizate, turns green. Newton.

ALKALIZA'TION. n. s. [from alkali.] The act of alkalizating, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

AL'KANET. n. s. [Anchusa, Lat.] The name of a plant.

This plant is a species of bugloss, with a red root, brought from the southern parts of France, and used in medicine. It will grow in almost any soil, and must be sown in March. Milton.

ALKEKE'NGI. n. s. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the same denomination; popularly also called winter-cherry; of considerable use as an astringent, dissolvent, and diuretick. The plant bears a near resemblance to Solanum, or Nightshade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of vesicarium. Chambers.

ALKE'RMES. n. s. In medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs, denoting a celebrated remedy, of the form and consistence of a confection; whereof the kermes berries are the basis. The other ingredients are pippin cyder, rose-water, sugar, ambergrease, musk, cinnamon, aloes-wood, pearls, and leaf gold; but the sweets are usually omitted. The confectio alkermes is chiefly made at Montpelier, which supplies most part of Europe therewith. The grain, which gives it the denomination, is no where found so plentiful as there. Chambers.

ALL. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come. Spenser.
Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight
Within Corioli gates. Shakespeare.
And swore so loud,
That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book. Shakesp.
They could call a comet a fixed star, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa. Cambden.
For a large conscience is all one,
And signifies the same with none. Hudibras.
Balm, from a silver box distilled around,
Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryd.
I do not remember he any where mentions expressly the title of the first-born, but all along keeps himself under the shelter of the indefinite term, heir. Locke.
Justice, indeed, may be furnished out of this element, as far as her sword goes; and courage may be all over a continued blaze, if the artist pleases. Addison.
If e'er the miser durst his farthings spare,
He thinly spreads them through the public square,
Where, all beside the rail, rang'd beggars lie,
And from each other catch the doleful cry. Gay.

2. Altogether; wholly; without any other consideration:

I am of the temper of most kings, who love to be in debt, are all for present money, no matter how they pay it afterward. Dryden.

3. Only; without admission of any thing else.

When I shall wed,
That lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty.
Sure I shall never marry, like my sister,
To love my father all. Shakespeare.

4. Although. This sense is truly Teutonick, but now obsolete.

Do you not think th'accomplishment of it
Sufficient work for one man's simple head,
All were it as the rest but simply writ. Spenser.

5. It is sometimes a word of emphasis; nearly the same with just.

A shepherd's swain, say, did thee bring,
All as his straying flock he fed;
And, when his honour hath thee read,
Crave pardon for thy hardy head. Spenser.

ALL. adj. [Æll, Æal, ealle, alle. Sax. oll, Welsh; al, Dutch; alle, Germ. ὅλος, Gr.]

1. The whole number; every one.

Brutus is an honourable man;
So are they all, all honourable men. Shakespeare.
To graze the herb all leaving,
Devour'd each other. Milton.
The great encouragement of all, is the assurance of a future reward. Tillotson.

2. The whole quantity; every part.

Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work. Deut.
Political power, I take to be a right of making laws with penalties, and of employing the force of the community in the execution of such laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this only for the public good. Locke.

3. The whole duration of time.

On whose pastures cheerful spring,
All the year doth sit and sing;
And, rejoicing, smiles to see,
Their green backs wear his livery. Crashaw.

4. The whole extent of place.

Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. Shakespeare.

ALL. n. s.

1. The whole; opposed to part, or nothing.

And will she yet abase her eyes on me;
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety?
On me that halt, and am misshapen thus? Shakespeare.
Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content. Shakes.
The youth shall study, and no more engage
Their flatt'ring wishes for uncertain age;
No more with fruitless care, and cheated strife,
Chace fleeting pleasure through the maze of life;
Finding the wretched all they here can have,
But present food, and but a future grave. Prior.
Our all is at stake, and irretrievably lost, if we fail of success. Addison.

2 Every thing.

Then shall we be news-cramm'd—All the better; we shall be the more remarkable. Shakespeare.

Up with my tent, here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that. Shakesp.

All the fitter, Lentulus: our coming
Is not for salutation; we have bus'ness. Ben Johnson.

That is, every thing is the better, the same, the fitter.

See, tre and pow'r, thy giving, I assume;
And glad her shall resign, when in the end
Thou shalt be all in all, and I in thee,
For ever; and in me all whom thou lov'st. Milton.

They all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground, nest, eagles, and all. L'Estrange.

They that do not keep up this indifferency for all but truth, put coloured spectacles before their eyes, and look thro' false glasses. Locke.

A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Addison.

All is much used in composition; but, in most instances, it is merely arbitrary; as, all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it, are fixed and classical; as, Almighty.

When it is connected with a participle, it seems to be a noun; as, all-surrounding: in other cases, an adverb; as, all-accomplished, or completely accomplished.

Of these compounds, a small part of those which may be found is inserted.

ALL-BEARING. adj. [from all and bear.] That which bears every thing; omniparous.

Thus while he spoke, the sovereign plant he drew,
Where on th' all-bearing earth unmark'd it grew. Pope.

ALL-CHEERING. adj. [from all and cheer.] That which gives gayety and cheerfulness to all

Soon as the all-cheering sun
Should, in the farthest east, begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed. Shakesp.

ALL-COMMANDING. adj. [from all and command.] Having the sovereignty over all.

He now sets before them the high and shining idol of glory, the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh.

ALL-COMPOSING. adj. [from all and compose.] That which quiets all men, or every thing.

Wrapt in embow'ring shades, Ulysses lies,
His woes forgot! but Pallas now address,
To break the bands of all-composing rest. Pope.

ALL-CONQUERING. adj. [from all and conquer.] That which subdues every thing.

Second of Satan sprung, all-conquering death!
What think'st thou of our empire now? Milton.

ALL-CONSUMING. adj. [from all and consume.] That which consumes every thing.

By age unbroke—but all-consuming care
Destroys perhaps the strength, that time would spare. Pope.

ALL-DEVOURING. adj. [from all and devour.] That which eats up every thing.

Secure from flames, from envy's fiercer rage,
Destructive war, and all-devouring age. Pope.

ALL FOURS. n. s. [from all and four.] A low game at cards, played by two; so named from the four particulars by which it is reckoned, and which, joined in the hand of either of the parties, are said to make all fours.

ALL HAIL. n. s. [from all, and hail, for health.] All health. This is therefore not a compound, though, perhaps usually reckoned among them.

All hail, ye fields, where constant peace attends!
All hail, ye sacred, solitary groves!
All hail, ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whose conversation pleases and improves. Walsh.

ALL-HALLOWN. n. s. [from all and hallow, to make holy.] The time about Allsaintsday.

Farewell, thou latter spring! farewell,
All-hallown summer. Shakespeare.

ALLHALLOWTIDE. n. s. [See ALLHALLOWN.] The term near Allsaints, or the first of November.

Cut off the bow about Allhallowtide, in the bare place, and set it in the ground, and it will grow to be a fair tree in one year. Bacon.

ALL-HEAL. n. s. [Panax, Lat.] A species of ironwort.

ALL-JUDGING. adj. [from all and judge.] That which has the sovereign right of judgment.

I look with horrour back,
That I detest my wretched self, and curse
My past polluted life. All-judging heav'n,
Who knows my crimes, has seen my sorrow for them.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

ALL-KNOWING. adj. [from all and know.] Omniscient; all-wise.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity, we, who could no way foresee the effect: when an all-knowing, all-wise Being, showers down every day his benefits on the unthankful and undeserving? Atterbury.

ALL-MAKING. adj. [from all and make.] That created all; omnifick. [See ALL-SEEING.]

ALL-POWERFUL. adj. [from all and powerful.] Almighty; omnipotent; possessed of infinite power.

O all-powerful Being, the least motion of whose will can create or destroy a world; pity us, the mournful friends of thy distressed servant. Swift.

ALL SAINTS DAY. n. s. The day on which there is a general celebration of the saints. The first of November.

ALL-SEER. n. s. [from all and see.] He that sees or beholds every thing; he whose view comprehends all things.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turned my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest. Shakesp.

ALL-SEEING. adj [from all and see.] That beholds every thing.

The same First Mover certain bounds has plac'd,
How long those perishable forms shall last;
Nor can they last beyond the time assign'd
By that all-seeing and all-making mind. Dryden.

ALL SOULS DAY. n. s. The day on which supplications are made for all souls by the church of Rome; the second of November.

This is all souls day, fellows, is it not?—
It is, my lord.—
Why then, all souls day is my body's doomsday. Shakesp.

ALL-SUFFICIENT. adj. [from all and sufficient.] Sufficient to every thing.

The testimonies of God are all-sufficient unto the end for which they were given. Hooker.

He can more than employ all our powers in their utmost elevation; for he is every way perfect and all-sufficient. Norris.

ALL-WISE. adj [from all and wise.] Possest of infinite wisdom.

There is an infinite, eternal, all-wise Mind governing the affairs of the world. South.

Supreme, all-wise, eternal, potentate!
Sole authour, sole disposer of our fate! Prior.

ALLANTOIS, or ALLANTOIDES. n. s. [from αλλας, a gut, and εἰδος, shape.] The urinary tunick placed between the amnion and chorion, which, by the navel and urachus, or passage by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb, receives the urine from the bladder. Quincy.

To ALLAY. v. a. [from alloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another in order to coinage; it is therefore derived by some from à la loi, according to law; the quantity of metals being mixed according to law; by others, from allier, to unite; perhaps from a locare, to put together.]

1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this sense, most authours preserve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See ALLOY.
2. To join any thing to another, so as to abate its predominant qualities.

Being brought into the open air,
I would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poison. Shakespeare.

No friendly offices shall alter or allay that rancour, that frets in some hellish breasts, which, upon all occasions, will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective. South.

3. To quiet; to pacify; to repress. The word, in this sense, I think not to be derived from the French alloyer, but to be the English word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.

If, by your art you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them. Shakespeare.

ALLAY. n. s. [alloy, Fr.]

1. The metal of a baser kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear less. Gold is allayed with silver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; silver with copper only, of which eighteen pennyweight is mixed with a pound. Cowel. thinks the allay is added, to countervail the charge of coining; which might have been done only by making the coin less.

For fools are stubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by th' allay. Hudibras.

2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the same manner as the admixture of baser metals allay the qualities of the first mass.

Dark colours easily suffer a sensible allay, by little scattering light. Newton's Opticks.

3. Allay being taken from baser metals, commonly implies something worse than that with which it is mixed.

The joy has no allay of jealousy, hope and fear. Roscom.

ALLAYER. n. s. [from allay.] The person or thing which has the power or quality of allaying.

Phlegm and pure blood are reputed allayers of acrimony; and, upon that account, Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies; because he esteems the blood a frænum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fierceness. Harvey on Consumptions.

ALLAYMENT. n. s. [from allay.] That which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.

If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment would I give my grief. Shakespeare.

ALLEGATION. n. s. [from allege.]

1. Affirmation; declaration.
2. The thing alleged or affirmed.

Hath he not twit our sovereign lady here
With ignominious words, though darkly coucht?

As if ſhe had ſuborned ſome to ſwear
Falſe allegations, to o'erthrow his ſtate. Shakeſpeare.

3. An excuſe; a plea.

I omitted no means in my power, to be informed of my errours; and I expect not to be excuſed in any negligence on account of youth, want of leiſure, or any other idle allegations. Pope.

To ALLE'GE. v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To affirm; to declare: to maintain.
2. To plead as an excuſe, or produce as an argument.

Surely the preſent form of church-government is ſuch, as no law of God, or reaſon of man, hath hitherto been alleged, of force ſufficient to prove they do ill, who, to the utmoſt of their power, withſtand the alteration thereof. Hooker.

If we forſake the ways of grace or goodneſs, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of inſtruction; we cannot ſay we have not learned them, or we could not. Sprat.

He hath a clear and full view, and there is no more to be alleged for his better information. Locke.

ALLE'GEABLE. adj. [from allege.] That which may be alleged.

Upon this interpretation all may be ſolved, that is allegeable againſt it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ALLE'GEMENT. n. ſ. [from allege.] The ſame with allegation. D.

ALLE'GER. n. ſ. [from allege.] He that alleges.

Which narrative, if we may believe it as confidently as the famous alleger of it, Pamphilio, appears to do, would ſeem to argue, that there is, ſometimes, no other principle requiſite, than what may reſult from the lucky mixture of the parts of ſeveral bodies. Boyle.

ALLE'GIANCE. n. ſ. [allegeance, Fr.] The duty of ſubjects to the government.

I did pluck allegiance from mens hearts,
Loud ſhouts and ſalutations from their mouths,
Even in the preſence of the crowned king. Shakeſpeare.

We charge you on allegiance to ourſelves,
To hold your ſlaught'ring hands, and keep the peace. Shakeſpeare.

The houſe of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the ſeveral counties of England, profeſſing all allegiance to them, govern abſolutely; the lords concurring, or rather ſubmitting to whatſoever is propoſed. Clarendon.

ALLE'GIANT. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of allegiance: a word not now uſed.

For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor undeſerver, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,
My pray'rs to heav'n for you. Shakeſpeare.

ALLEGO'RICK. adj. [from allegory.] After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal.

A kingdom they portend thee; but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I diſcern not. Milton.

ALLEGO'RICAL. adj. [from allegory.] In the form of an allegory; not real; not literal; myſtical.

When our Saviour ſaid, in an allegorical and myſtical ſenſe, Except ye eat the fleſh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; the hearers underſtood him literally and groſly. Bentley.

The epithet of Apollo for ſhooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in reſpect of the darts and bow, the enſigns of that god; the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the ſun. Pope.

ALLEGO'RICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Virgil often makes Iris the meſſenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the air. Peacham.

The place is to be underſtood allegorically; and what is thus ſpoken by a Phæacian with wiſdom, is, by the Poet, applied to the goddeſs of it. Pope.

ALLEGORICALNESS. n. ſ. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical. Dict.

To ALLEGORIZE. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a ſenſe not literal.

He hath very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his ſuppoſition of the tree itſelf to be true. Raleigh.

As ſome would allegorize theſe ſigns, which we noted before, ſo others would confine them to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

An alchymiſt ſhall reduce divinity to the maxims of his laboratory, explain morality by ſal, ſulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the ſcripture itſelf, and the ſacred myſteries thereof, into the philoſopher's ſtone. Locke.

ALLEGORY. n. ſ. [ἀλλεγορία.] A figurative diſcourſe, in which ſomething other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither muſt we draw out our allegory too long, leſt either we make ourſelves obſcure, or fall into affectation, which is childiſh. Ben Johnſon.

This word nympha meant nothing elſe but, by allegory, the vegetative humour or moiſture that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, whereby they grow. Peacham.

ALLE'GRO. n. ſ. A word, denoting one of the ſix diſtinctions of time. It expreſſes a ſprightly motion, the quickeſt of all, except Preſto. It originally means gay, as in Milton.

ALLELUJAH. n. ſ. [This word is falſely written for Hallelujah, הללו and יה.] A word of ſpiritual exultation, uſed in hymns; it ſignifies, Praiſe God.

He will ſet his tongue to thoſe pious divine ſtrains, which may be a proper præludium to thoſe allelujahs he hopes eternally to ſing. Government of the Tongue.

ALLEMA'NDE. n. ſ. [Ital.] A grave kind of muſick. Dict.

To ALLE'VIATE. v. a. [allevo, Lat.]

1. To make light; to eaſe; to ſoften.

Moſt of the diſtempers are the effects of abuſed plenty and luxury, and muſt not be charged upon our Maker; who, notwithſtanding, hath provided excellent medicines, to alleviate thoſe evils which we bring upon ourſelves. Bentley.

2. To extenuate, or ſoften; as, he alleviates his fault by an excuſe.

ALLEVIA'TION. n. ſ. [from alleviate.]

1. The act of making light; of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of faults, though they are the heights of humanity, yet they are not the favours, but the duties of friendſhip. South.

2. That by which any pain is eaſed, or fault extenuated.

This loſs of one fifth of their debts and income will ſit heavy on them who ſhall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit. Locke.

A'LLEY. n. ſ. [allée, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.

And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far. Fairy Queen.

It is common from experience, that where alleys are cloſe gravelled, the earth putteth forth the firſt year knotgraſs, and after ſpiregraſs. Bacon.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown. Milton.

Come, my fair love, our morning's taſk we loſe;
Some labour ev'n the eaſieſt life would chooſe:
Ours is not great: the dangling bows to crop,
Whoſe too luxuriant growth our alleys ſtop. Dryden.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomſticks made,
Now ſweep thoſe alleys they were born to ſhade. Pope.

2. A paſſage in towns narrower than a ſtreet.

A back friend, a ſhoulder clapper, one that commands
The paſſages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands.
Shakeſp. Comedy of Errours.

ALLI'ANCE. n. ſ. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The ſtate of connection with another by confederacy; a league. In this ſenſe, our hiſtories of Queen Anne mention the grand alliance.
2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen ſhall th' alliance join
Betwixt the Trojan and th' Auſonian line. Dryden.

3. Relation by any form of kindred.

For my father's ſake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And, for alliance' ſake, declare the cauſe
My father loſt his head. Shakeſp.

4. The act of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.

Dorſet, your ſon, that with a fearful ſoul
Leads diſcontented ſteps in foreign ſoil,
This fair alliance quickly ſhall call home
To high promotions. Shakeſ.

Adraſtus ſoon, with Gods averſe, ſhall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence ſtrife ſhall riſe, and mortal war ſucceed. Pope.

5. The perſons allied to each other.

I would not boaſt the greatneſs of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato.

ALLI'CIENCY. n. ſ. [allicio, Lat. to entice or draw] The power of attracting any thing; magnetiſm; attraction.

The feigned central alliciency is but a word, and the manner of it ſtill occult. Glanville.

To A'LLIGATE. v. a. [alligo, Lat.] To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLIGA'TION. n. ſ. [from alligate.]

1. The act of tying together; the ſtate of being ſo tied.
2. The arithmetical rule that teaches to adjuſt the price of compounds, formed of ſeveral ingredients of different value.

ALLIGA'TOR. n. ſ. The crocodile. This name is chiefly uſed for the crocodile of America, between which, and that of Africa, naturaliſts have laid down this difference, that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILE.

In his needy ſhop a tortoiſe hung,
An alligator ſtuff'd, and other ſkins
Of ill-ſhap'd fiſhes. Shakeſp.

Aloft in rows large poppy-heads were ſtrung,
And here a ſcaly alligator hung. Garth.

A'LLIGATURE. n. ſ. [from alligate.] The link, or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Dict.

ALLI'SION.

ALLI'SION. n. f. [allido, allisum, Lat.] The act of ſtriking one thing againſt another.

There have not been any iſlands of note, or conſiderable extent, torn and cut off from the continent by earthquakes, or ſevered from it by the boiſterous aliſion of the ſea. Woodward.

ALLOCA'TION. n. f. [allocо, Lat.]

1. The act of putting one thing to another.
2. The admiſſion of an article in reckoning, and addition of it to the account.
3. An allowance made upon an account; a term uſed in the exchequer. Chambers.

ALLOCU'TION. n. f. [allocutio, Lat.] The act of ſpeaking to another.

ALLO'DIAL adj. [from allodium.] Held without any acknowledgment of ſuperiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLO'DIUM. n. f. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but moſt probably of German original.] A poſſeſſion held in abſolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount. It is oppoſed to fee, or feudum, which intimates ſome kind of dependance. There are no allodial lands in England, all being held either mediately or immediately of the king.

ALLO'NGE. n. f. [allonge, Fr.] A paſs or thruſt with a rapier, ſo called from the lengthening of the ſpace taken up by the fencer.

To ALLO'O. v. a. [This word is generally ſpoke halloo, and is uſed to dogs, when they are incited to the chaſe or battle; it is commonly imagined to come from the French allons; perhaps from all lo, look all; ſhewing the object.] To ſet on; to incite a dog, by crying allo'o.

Alloo thy furious maſtiff; bid him vex
The noxious herd, and print upon their ears
A ſad memorial of their paſt offence. Philips.

ALLO'QUY. n. f. [alloquium, Lat.] The act of ſpeaking to another; converſe; converſation. Dict.

To ALLOT. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To diſtribute by lot.
2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee for proviſion,
To ſhield thee from diſaſters of the world;
And, on the ſixth, to turn thy hated back
Upon our kingdom. Shakeſp. King Lear.

I ſhall deſerve my fate, if I refuſe
That happy hour, which heav'n allots to peace. Dryd.

3. To diſtribute; to parcel out; to give each his ſhare.

Since fame was the only end of all their new enterprizes and ſtudies, a man cannot be too ſcrupulous in allotting them their due portion of it. Tatler.

ALLO'TMENT. n. f. [from allot.] That which is allotted to any one; the part; the ſhare; the portion granted.

There can be no thought of ſecurity or quiet in this world, but in a reſignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Eſt.

Though it is our duty to ſubmit with patience to more ſcanty allotments, yet thus much we may reaſonably and lawfully aſk of God. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLO'TTERY. n. f. [from allot.] That which is granted to any particular perſon in a diſtribution. See ALLO'TMENT.

Allow me ſuch exerciſes as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by teſtament.
Shakeſpeare, As you Like it.

To ALLO'W. v. a. [allouer, Fr. from allaudare.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a poſition; not to contradict; not to oppoſe.

The principles, which all mankind allow for true, are innate; thoſe, that men of right reaſon admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind. Locke.

The pow'r of muſick all our hearts allow;
And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope.

As to what is alledged, that ſome of the preſbyterians declared openly againſt the king's murder, I allow it to be true. Swift.

2. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow too much ſincerity to the profeſſions of moſt men; but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

I will help you to enough of them, and ſhall be ready to allow the pope as little power here as you pleaſe. Swift.

3. To grant licence to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the beldam
To lead him where he would; his roguiſh madneſs
Allows itſelf to any thing. Shakeſp. King Lear.

But as we were allowed of God to be put in truſt with the goſpel, even ſo we ſpeak, not as pleaſing men, but God, which trieth our hearts. Theſſ.

They referred all laws, that were to be paſſed in Ireland, to be conſidered, corrected, and allowed firſt by the ſtate of England. Davies on Ireland.

4. To give a ſanction to; to authorize.

There is no ſlander in an allow'd fool. Shakeſp.

5. To give to; to pay to.

Ungrateful then! if we no tears allow
To him that gave us peace and empire too. Waller.

6. To appoint for; to ſet out to a certain uſe; as, he allowed his ſon the third part of his income.

7. To make abatement, or proviſion; or to ſettle any thing, with ſome conceſſions or cautions, regarding ſomething elſe.

If we conſider the different occaſions of ancient and modern medals, we ſhall find they both agree in recording the great actions and ſucceſſes in war; allowing ſtill for the different ways of making it, and the circumſtances that attended it. Addiſon.

ALLO'WABLE. adj. [from allow.]

1. That which may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is obſervable in many pieces of Raphael, where Magdalen is repreſented, before our Saviour, waſhing his feet, on her knees; which will not conſiſt with the text. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. That which is permitted or licenſed; lawful; not forbidden.

In actions of this ſort, the very light of nature alone may diſcover that which is ſo far forth in the ſight of God allowable. Hooker.

I was, by the freedom allowable among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence. Boyle.

Reputation becomes a ſignal and a very peculiar bleſſing to magiſtrates; and their purſuit of it is not only allowable, but laudable. Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLO'WABLENESS. n. f. [from allowable.] The quality of being allowable; lawfulneſs; exemption from prohibition.

I cannot think myſelf engaged to diſcourſe of lots, as to their nature, uſe, and allowableneſs, in matters of recreation; which is indeed impugned by ſome, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

ALLO'WANCE. n. f. [from allow.]

1. Admiſſion without contradiction.

Without the notion and allowance of ſpirits, our philoſophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke.

2. Sanction; licence; authority.

That which wiſdom did firſt begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challengeth allowance of them that ſucceed, although it plead for itſelf nothing. Hooker.

You ſent a large commiſſion
To Gregory de Caſſado, to conclude,
Without the king's will, or the ſtate's allowance,
A league between his highneſs and Ferrara. Shakeſp.

3. Permiſſion; freedom from reſtraint.

They ſhould therefore be accuſtomed betimes to conſult and make uſe of their reaſon, before they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke.

4. A ſettled rate; or appointment for any uſe.

The victual in plantations ought to be expended almoſt as in a beſieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Bacon.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a daily rate for every day all his life. Kings.

5. Abatement from the ſtrict rigour of a law, or demand.

The whole poem, though written in that which they call heroick verſe, is of the Pindarick nature, as well in the thought as the expreſſion; and, as ſuch, requires the ſame grains of allowance for it. Dryden.

Parents never give allowances for an innocent paſſion. Swift.

6. Eſtabliſhed character; reputation.

His bark is ſtoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very expert and approved allowance;
Therefore my hopes, not ſurfeited to death,
Stand in bold awe. Shakeſp. Othello.

ALLO'Y. n. f. [See ALLAY.]

1. Baſer metal mixed in coinage.

That preciſe weight and fineneſs, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the ſtandard. Fine ſilver is ſilver without the mixture of any baſer metal. Alloy is baſer metal mixed with it. Locke.

For let another piece be coined of the ſame weight, wherein half the ſilver is taken out, and copper, or other alloy, put into the place, every one knows it will be worth but half as much; for the value of the alloy is ſo inconſiderable as not to be reckoned. Locke.

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleaſures of ſenſe are probably reliſhed by beaſts in a more exquiſite degree, than they are by men; for they taſte them ſincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy.
Atterbury's Sermons.

ALLUBE'SCENCY. n. f. [allubeſcentia, Lat.] Willingneſs; content. Dict.

To ALLU'DE. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have ſome reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to inſinuate. It is uſed of perſons; as, he alludes to an old ſtory; or of things, as, the lampoon alludes to his mother's faults.

Theſe ſpeeches of Jerom and Chryſoſtom do ſeem plainly to allude unto ſuch miniſterial garments as were then in uſe.
Hooker.

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yea, many things declared. Hooker.

Then juſt proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and meaſure: and this I doubt not was that artificial ſtructure here alluded to. Burnet.

ALLU'MINOR. n. f. [alluminer, Fr. to light.] One who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; becauſe he gives graces, light and ornament, to the letters or figures coloured. Cowell.

To ALLU'RE. v. a [leoren, Fr. looren, Dutch,, 'belæren, Sax.] To entice to any thing whether good or bad; to draw towards any thing by enticement.

Unto laws that men make for the benefit of men, it hath ſeemed always needful to add rewards, which may more allure unto good, than any hardneſs deterreth from it, and puniſhments, which may more deter from evil, than any ſweetneſs thereto alureth. Hooker.

Above them all
The golden ſun, in ſplendour likeſt heav'n,
Allur'd his eye. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

Each flatt'ring hope, and each alluring joy. Lyttleton.

ALLURE n. ſ. [from the verb allure.] Something ſet up to entice birds, or other things, to it. We now write lure.

The rather to train them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen. Hayward.

ALLU'REMENT. n. ſ. [from allure.]

That which allures, or has the force of alluring; enticement; temptation of pleaſure.

Againſt allurement, cuſtom, and a world
Offended; fearleſs of reproach, and ſcorn,
Or violence. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

——Adam, by his wife's allurement, fell. Par. Reg.

To ſhun th' allurement is not hard
To minds reſolv'd, forewarn'd, and well prepar'd;
But 'tond'rous difficult, when once beſet,
To ſtruggle through the ſtraits, and break th'involving net. Dryden.

ALLU'RER. n. ſ. [from allure.] The perſon that allures; enticer; enveigler.

ALLU'RINGLY. adv. [from allure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

ALLU'RINGNESS. n. ſ. [from alluring.] The quality of alluring or enticing; incitation; temptation by propoſing pleaſure.

ALLU'SION. n. ſ. [alluſio, Lat.] That which is ſpoken with reference to ſomething ſuppoſed to be already known, and therefore not expreſſed; a hint; an implication. It has the particle to.

Here are manifeſt alluſions and footſteps of the diſſolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in its laſt ruin. Burnet's Theory.

This laſt alluſion gall'd the Panther more,
Becauſe indeed it rubb'd upon the ſore. Dryd.

Expreſſions now out of uſe, alluſions to cuſtoms loſt to us, and various particularities, muſt needs continue ſeveral paſſages in the dark. Locke.

ALLU'SIVE. adj. [alludo, alluſum, Lat.] Hinting at ſomething not fully expreſſed.

Where the expreſſion in one place is plain, and the ſenſe affixed to it agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it; and the expreſſion, in the other, is figurative or alluſive, and the doctrine, deduced from it, liable to great objections; it is reaſonable, in this latter place, to reſtrain the extent of the figure and alluſion, to a conſiſtency with the former. Rogers's Sermons.

ALLU'SIVELY. adv. [from alluſive.] In an alluſive manner; by implication; by inſinuation.

The Jewiſh nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compaſs of one generation, were, according to his prediction, deſtroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by thoſe eagles, (Matt. xxiv 28) by which, alluſively, are noted the Roman armies, whoſe enſign was the eagle Hammond.

ALLU'SIVENESS. n. ſ. [from alluſive.] The quality of being alluſive.

ALLU'VION. n. ſ. [alluvio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to ſomething elſe by the motion of the water.
2. The thing carried by water to ſomething elſe.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increaſe which ariſes from alluvion, which is defined an inſenſible increment, brought by the water.

ALLU'VIOUS. adj. [from alluvion.] That which is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon ſomething elſe.

To ALL'Y. v. a: [allier, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendſhip, or confederacy.

All theſe ſepts are allied to the inhabitanrs of the North, ſo as there is no hope that they will ever ſerve faithfully againſt them. Spenſer on Ireland.

Wants, frailties, paſſions, cloſer ſtill ally
The common int'reſt, or endear the tye. Pope.

To the ſun ally'd,
From him they draw the animating fire. Thomſon.

2. To make a relation between two things, by ſimilitude, or reſemblance, or any other means.

Two lines I cannot excuſe: they are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's ſenſe; but they are too like the tenderneſs of Ovid. Dryden.

ALL'Y. n. ſ. [allie, Fr.] One united by ſome means of connexion; as, marriage; friendſhip; confederacy.

We could hinder the acceſſion of Holland to France, either as ſubjects, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade, or as an inferiour and dependent ally under their protection. Temple.

ALMACA'NTAR. n. ſ. [An Arabick word, written variouſly by various authours; by D'Herbelot, almucantar; by others, almucantar.] A circle drawn paralel to the horizon. It is generally uſed in the plural, and means a ſeries of parallel circles drawn through the ſeveral degrees of the meridian.

ALMACA'NTAR'S STAFF. n. ſ. An inſtrument commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees, uſed to take obſervations of the ſun, about the time of its riſing and ſetting, in order to find the amplitude, and conſequently the variation of the compaſs. Chambers.

A'LMANACK. n. ſ. [Derived, by ſome, from the Arabick, al, and manah, Heb. to count, or conjecture; but others, from a', Arabick, and μήν, a month, or μανακὸς, the courſe of the months; by others, from a Teutonick original, al, and maan, the moon, an account of every moon, or month: all of them are probable.]

A calendar; a book in which the revolutions of the ſeaſons, with the return of feaſts and faſts, is noted for the enſuing year.

It will be ſaid, this is an almanack for the old year; all hath been well: Spain hath not aſſailed this kingdom. Bacon.

This aſtrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inverſion of the common prognoſticators. Government of the Tongue.

Beware the woman too, and ſhun her ſight,
Who in theſe ſtudies does herſelf delight;
By whom a greaſy almanack is born,
With often handling like chaſt amber worn. Dryd.

I'll have a faſting almanack printed on purpoſe for her uſe. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

A'LMANDINE. n ſ. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby coarſer and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the granate. Dict.

ALM'IGHTINESS. n. ſ. [from almighty.] Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It ſerveth to the world for a witneſs of his almightineſs, whom we outwardly honour with the chieſeſt of outward things. Hooker.

In creating and making exiſtent the world univerſal, by the abſolute act of his own word, his power and almightineſs. Sir Walter Raleigh.

In the wilderneſs, the bittern and the ſtork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his proviſions, and revere his power, and feel the force of his almightineſs. Taylor.

ALMI'GHTY. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abram, and ſaid unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. Geneſis.

He wills you in the name of God almighty,
That you diveſt yourſelf, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heav'n,
By law of nature and of nations 'long
To him and to his heirs. Shakeſpeare.

A'LMOND. n. ſ. [amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandala, a word in low Latin; by others, from Allemand, a German; ſuppoſing that almonds come to France from Germany.] The nut of the almond-tree, either ſweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the ſweet taſte into an oily one. Locke.

A'LMOND TREE. n. ſ. [amygdalus, Lat.]

It has leaves and flowers very like thoſe of the peach tree, but the fruit is longer and more compreſſed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the ſhell is not ſo rugged.

The ſpecies are, 1. The common large almond. 2. The ſweet almond, with tender ſhells. 3. The bitter almond. 4. The white flowering almond.

The three firſt ſorts are chiefly cultivated in England, for the beauty of their flowers; and the firſt ſort yields large quantities of fruit yearly, little inferiour to what we receive from abroad, if not kept too long. They are propagated in July, by inoculating a bud into a plum ſtock, for wet ground, or an almond or peach ſtock for dry. The fourth is a greater curioſity; it will not ſucceed on a plum, but muſt be budded on a peach or almond. Millar.

Like to an almond tree, you're mounted high
On top of green Selinis, all alone,
With bloſſoms brave bedecked daintily,
Whoſe tender locks do tremble every one,
At every little breath that under heav'n is blown. Fairy Q.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will anſwer to the ſylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

A'LMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, called improperly Almonds of the ears; are two round glands placed on the ſides of the baſis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces; each of them has a large oval ſinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it are a great number of leſſer ones, which diſcharge themſelves through the great ſinus of a mucous and flippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and œſophagus, for the moiſtening and lubricating thoſe parts. When the œſophagus muſcle acts, it compreſſes the almonds, and they frequently are the occaſion of a ſore throat. Quincy.

The tonſils, or Almonds of the Ears, are alſo frequently ſwelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a ſpecies of it Wiſeman's Surgery.

A'LMOND-FURNACE, or A'LMAN-FURNACE, called alſo the Stove, is a peculiar kind of furnaces uſed in refining, to ſeparate metals from cinders and other foreign ſubſtances. Chambers.

A'LMONER, or ALMNER n. ſ. [eleemoſynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other perſon, employed in the diſtribution of charity.

I enquired among the Jacobins for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed out your reverence as the worthieſt man. Dryden's Spaniſh Friar.

A'LMONRY. n. ſ. [from almoner.] The place where the almoner reſides, or where the alms are diſtributed.

ALMO'ST. adv. [from all and moſt; that is, moſt part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree to the whole, or to univerſality.

Who is there almoſt, whoſe mind, at ſome time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not faſtened to ſome clog, that it could not turn itſelf to any other object. Locke.

There can be no ſuch thing or notion, as an almoſt infinite; there can be nothing next or ſecond to an omnipotent God. Bentley's Sermons.

Atlas becon es unequal to his freight,
And almoſt faints beneath the glowing weight. Addiſ. Ovid.

ALMS. n ſ. [in Saxon, elmeſ, from eleemoſyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitouſly in relief of the poor. It has no ſingular.

My arm'd knees,
Which bow'd but in my ſtirrup, bend like his
Tha hath received an alms. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

The poor beggar hath a juſt demand of an alms from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injuſtice and oppreſſion, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities. Swift.

A'LMS-BASKET. n. ſ. [from alms and baſket.] The baſket in which proviſions are put to be given away.

There ſweepings do as well,
As the beſt order'd meal;
For who the reliſh of theſe gueſts will fit,
Needs ſet them but the alms-baſket of wit. Ben Johnſon.

We'll ſtand up for our properties, was the begger's ſong that lived upon the alms-baſket. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

A'LMSDEED. n. ſ. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds which ſhe did. Acts, ix. 36.

Hard favour'd Richard, where art thou?
Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed;
Petitioner for blood thou ne'er put'ſt back.
Shakeſpeare's Henry VI.

A'LMS-GIVER. n. ſ. [from alms and giver.] He that gives alms; he that ſupports others by his charity.

He built and endowed many religious foundations, beſides his memorable hoſpital of the Savoy. And yet was he a great alms-giver in ſecret, which ſhewed that his works in publick were dedicated rather to God's glory than his own. Bacon.

ALMS-HOUSE. n. ſ. [from alms and houſe.] A houſe devoted to the reception and ſupport of the poor; an hoſpital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of almshouſes for the poor, and the ſorting out of the people into their ſeveral pariſhes, are manifeſt unto men of underſtanding. Hooker's Preface.

And to relief of lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint ſouls, paſt corporal toil,
A hundred almshouſes right well ſupplied. Shakeſp. Henry V.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples, and other violences of rapine, build an hoſpital, or ſome alms-houſe, out of the ruins of the church, and the ſpoils of widows and orphans. L'Eſtrange's Fables.

Behold yon almshouſe, neat, but void of ſtate,
Where age and want ſit ſmiling at the gate. Pope.

ALMS-MAN, n. ſ. [from alms and man.] A man who lives upon alms; who is ſupported by charity.

I'll give my jewels for a ſet of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown. Shakeſp. Rich. II.

A'LMUG-TREE. n. ſ. A tree mentioned in ſcripture.

Of its wood were made muſical inſtruments, and it was uſed alſo in rails, or in a ſtaircaſe. The Rabbins generally render it coral, others ebony, brazil, or pine. In the Septuagint it is tranſlated wrought wood; and in the Vulgate, Ligna Thyina. But coral could never anſwer the purpoſes of the almugim; the pine-tree is too common in Judea to be imported from Ophir; and the thyinum, or citron-tree, much eſteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the wood almugim, or algumim, or, ſimply, gummim, taking al for a kind of article, may be underſtood oily and gummy ſorts of wood, and particularly the trees which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabick; and is, perhaps, the ſame with the ſhittim-wood mentioned by Moſes. Calmet.

And the navy alſo of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees. 1 Kings, x. 11.

A'LNAGAR, A'LNAGER, or A'LNEGER. n. ſ. [from aulnage.] A meaſurer by the ell; a ſworn officer, whoſe buſineſs formerly was to inſpect the aſſize of woolen cloth, and to fix the ſeals upon it appointed for that purpoſe; but there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures, the ſearcher, meaſurer, and alneger. Dict.

A'LNAGE. n. ſ. [from aunage, or aunage, Fr.] Ell-meaſure, or rather the meaſuring by the ell or yard. Dict.

A'LNIGHT. n. ſ. [from all and night.]

There is a ſervice which they call alnights, which is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midſt; whereby it cometh to paſs, that the wick fetcheth the nouriſhment farther off. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory, N° 372.

ALOES. n. ſ. [אהלים, as it is ſuppoſed.] A term applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood uſed, in the Eaſt, for perfumes, of which the beſt ſort is of higher price than gold, and was the moſt valuable preſent given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France. It is called Tambac, and is the heart, or innermoſt part of the aloetree; the next part of which is called Calambac; which is ſometimes imported into Europe, and, though of inferiour value to the Tambac, is much eſteemed: the part next the bark is termed, by the Portugueſe, Pao d' aquila, or eagle-wood; but ſome account the eagle wood not the outer part of the Tambac, but another ſpecies. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect. Savary.

2. Aloes is a tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.

The leaves are thick, ſucculent, and generally beſet with ſpines on the edges; the flower conſiſts of one leaf, is tubulous, and cut into ſix ſegments at the top, like the hyacinth; the fruit is oblong and cylindrical, divided into three cells, containing flat, and, for the moſt part, ſemicircular ſeeds.

The ſpecies are 39: 1. The common large American aloe. 2. The narrow-leaved aloe, from Vera Cruz. 3. The American aloe, which produces young plants out of the flower ſtems, &c.

Many of theſe plants, in Engliſh gardens, are natives of the Eaſt and Weſt Indies; but the moſt curious are brought from the Cape of Good Hope.

The firſt of theſe aloes is very hardy, and has endured the air, in mild winters, in a very dry ſoil, and under a ſouth wall; but they may be kept in a common greenhouſe, giving them very little moiſture in winter. The other ſorts are preſerved in an airy glaſs-caſe, with a ſtove. The aloes are all increaſed by off-ſets.

Moſt of the African ſpecies, after the ſecond, third, or fourth year's growth, produce flowers with us annually; but the American aloes flower but once during the life of the plant, producing the flower-ſtems from the centre of the plant, of a conſiderable ſize, and ſometimes fifteen feet in height.

A common errour, relating to the firſt ſpecies, is, that it never flowers till it be an hundred years old; but experience has proved, that ſome have flowered in fifty years. Another errour is, that, when the flower opens, it makes a report like a gun. Millar.

3. Aloes is a medicinal juice extracted not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree, by cutting the leaves and expoſing the juice that drops from them to the ſun. It is diſtinguiſhed into Socotorine and Cabaline, or horſe aloes; the firſt is ſo called from Socotora; the ſecond, becauſe, being coarſer, it ought to be confined to the uſe of farriers. It is a warm and ſtrong cathartick, and uſed in moſt purgative compoſitions.

ALOE'TICAL. adj. [from aloes.] Conſiſting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited by aloetical, ſcammoniate, or acrimonious medicines. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ALO'ETICK. n. ſ. [from aloes.] Any medicine is ſo called, which chiefly conſiſts of aloes. Quincy.

ALO'FT. adv. [loffter, to lift up, Dan. Loft air, Icelandiſh; ſo that aloft is, into the air.] On high; above; in the air: a word uſed chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in ſtories oft,
That love has wings, and ſoars aloft. Suckling.

Upright he ſtood, and bore aloft his ſhield,
Conſpicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field. Dryd. Fab.

The great luminary
Aloft the vulgar conſtellations thick,
That from his lordly eye keep diſtance due,
Diſpenſes light from far. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. iii.

A'LOGY. n. ſ. [αλογια] Unreaſonableneſs; abſurdity. Dict.

ALO'NE. adj. [alleen, Dutch; from al and een, or one, that is, ſingle.]

1. Without another.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourſelves let us decide it then. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

If by a mortal hand my father's throne
Could be defended, 'twas by mine alone. Dryden, Æneid ii.

God, by whoſe alone power and converſation, we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company; ſolitary.

Eagles we ſee fly alone, and they are but ſheep which always herd together. Sidney, b. i.

Alone,

Alone, for other creature in this place
Living, or lifeless, to be found was none. Paradise Lost.
I never durst in darkness be alone. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

ALO'NE. adv.

1. This word is seldom used but with the verb let, if even then it be an adverb, and implies sometimes an ironical prohibition, to help a man who is able to manage the affair himself.

Let us alone to guard Corioli,
If they set down before's; 'fore they remove,
Bring up your army. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Let you alone, cunning artificer;
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Johns. Catil.

2. To let alone; to forbear; to leave unfinished.

His client stole it, but he had better have let it alone; for he lost his cause by the jest. Addison, Spectator.

ALO'NG. adv. [au long, Fr.]

1. At length.

Some rowl a mighty stone; some laid along,
And, bound with burning wire, on spokes of wheels are hung.
Dryden, Æneid vi.

2. Through any space measured lengthwise.

A firebrand carried along, leaveth a train of light behind it.
Bacon's Natural History, N° 274.
Where Usens glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pomptina stands. Dryden, Æneid vii.

3. Throughout; in the whole; with all prefixed.

They were all along a cross, untoward sort of people. South.
Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man. Tillotson.

4. Joined with the particle with; in company; joined with.

I your commission will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Hence then! and evil go with thee along,
Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell;
Thou and thy wicked crew! Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
Religious zeal is subject to an excess, and to a defect, when something is mingled with it, which it should not have; or when it wants something that ought to go along with it. Sprat.

5. Sometimes with is understood.

Command thy slaves: my free-born soul disdains
A tyrant's curb; and restive breaks the reins.
Take this along; and no dispute shall rise
(Though mine the woman) for my ravish'd prize. Dryden.

6. Forward; onward. In this sense it is derived from allons, French.

Come then, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet and the song. Pope.

ALO'NGST. adv. [a corruption, as it seems, from along.] Along; through the length.

The Turks did keep strait watch and ward in all their ports thereabout alongst sea coast. Knolles's Hist of the Turks.

ALO'OF. adv. [all off, that is, quite off.]

1. At a distance; with the particle from. It generally implies a small distance, such as is within view or observation.

Then bad the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdrew aside,
From whence she might behold the battle's proof,
And else be safe from danger far descried. Fairy Queen, b. i.
As next in worth,
Came singly where he stood, on the bare strand,
While the promiscuous croud stood yet aloof. Parad. Lost.
The noise approaches, though our palace stood
Aloof from streets, encompass'd with a wood. Dryden.

2. Applied to persons, it often insinuates caution and circumspection.

Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay. Shak. Henry VI.
Going northwards, aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued, at last when they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain. Bacon.
The king would not, by any means, enter the city, until he had aloof seen the cross set upon the greater tower of Granada, whereby it became Christian ground. Bacon's Henry VII.
Two pots stood by a river, one of brass, the other of clay. The water carried them away; the earthen vessel kept aloof from t'other. L'Estrange's Fables.
The strong may fight aloof; Ancæus try'd
His force too near, and by presuming dy'd. Dryd. Fables.

3. In a figurative sense, it is used to import art or cunning in conversation, by which a man holds the principal question at a distance.

Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;
But with a crafty madness keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. It is used metaphorically of persons that will not be seen in a design.

It is necessary the queen join; for, if she stand aloof, there will be still suspicions: it being a received opinion in the world, that she hath a great interest in the king's favour and power. Suckling.

5. It is applied to things not properly belonging to each other.

Love's not love,
When it is mingled with regards that stand
Aloof from th' entire. Shakespeare's King Lear.

ALOU'D. adv. [from a and loud.] Loudly; with a strong voice; with a great noise.

Strangled he lies! yet seems to cry aloud,
To warn the mighty, and instruct the proud;
That of the great, neglecting to be just,
Heav'n in a moment makes an heap of dust. Waller.
Then heav'n's high monarch thund'red thrice aloud,
And thrice he shook aloft a golden cloud. Dryden, Æneid vii.

ALO'W. adv. [from a and low.] In a low place; not aloft.

And now alow, and now aloft they fly,
As born through air, and seem to touch the sky. Dryden.

A'LPHA. n. s. The first letter in the Greek alphabet, answering to our A; therefore used to signify the first.

I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Revelations.

A'LPHABET. n. s. [from ἄλφα, alpha, and βῆτα, beta, the two first letters of the Greeks.] The order of the letters, or elements of speech.

Thou shalt not sigh,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of these will rest an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning.
Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

The letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth, and the great variety of syllables composed of letters, and formed with almost equal velocity, and the endless number of words capable of being framed out of the alphabet, either of more syllables, or of one. Holder.

Taught by their nurses, little children get
This saying, sooner than their alphabet. Dryd. jun Juv.

To A'LPHABET. v. a. [from alphabet, noun.] To range in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABE'TICAL. } adj. [from alphabet; alphabetique, Fr.] In the ALPHABE'TICK. } order of the alphabet; according to the series of letters.

ALPHABE'TICALLY. adv. [from alphabetical.] In an alphabetical manner; according to the order of the letters.

I had once in my thoughts to contrive a grammar, more than I can now comprise in short hints; and a dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language, which the deaf person is to learn. Holder's Elements of Speech.

ALRE'ADY. adv. [from all and ready.] At this present time, or at some time past; opposed to futurity; as, Will he come soon? He is come already. Will it be done? It is done already.

Touching our uniformity, that which hath been already answered, may serve for answer to that exception. Hooker.
You warn'd me still of loving two;
Can I love him, already loving you? Dryd. Indian Emp.
See, the guards, from yon far eastern hill
Already move, no longer stay afford;
High in the air, they wave the flaming sword,
Your signal to depart. Dryden's State of Innocence.
I confine myself to methods for the advancement of piety, which are in the power of a prince limited like ours, by a strict execution of the laws already in force. Swift.
Methinks, already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say,
Already see you a degraded toast,
And all your honour in a whisper lost! Pope.

ALS. adv. [als, Dutch] Also; likewise: a word now out of use.

The golden sun his glistering head gan shew,
And sad remembrance now the prince amoves
With fresh desire his voyage to pursue;
Als Una earn'd her travel to renew. Fairy Queen. b. i.

A'LSO. adv. [from all and so.]

1. In the same manner; likewise.

In these two, no doubt, are contained the causes of the great deluge, as according to Moses, so also according to necessity; for our world affords no other treasures of water. Burnet's Thes.

2. Also is sometimes nearly the same with and, and only conjoins the member, of the sentence.

God do so to me, and more also. 1 Samuel, xiv. 44.

A'LTAR. n. s. [altare, Lat. It is observed by Junius, that the word a'tar is received, with Christianity, in all the European languages; and that altare is used by one of the fathers, as appropriated to the Christian worship, in opposition to the aræ of gentilism.]

1. The place where offerings to heaven are laid.

The goddess of the nuptial bed,
Tir'd with her vain devotions for the dead,
Resolv'd the tainted hand should be repell'd,
Which incense offer'd, and her altar held. Dryd. Fab.

2. The table in Christian churches where the communion is administered.

Her

Her grace roſe, and, with modeſt paces,
Came to the altar, where ſhe kneel'd, and, ſaintlike,
Caſt her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.
Shakeſpeare.

A'LTERANT. adj. [alterant, Fr.] That which has the power of producing changes in any thing.

And whether the body be alterant or altered, evermore a perception precedeth operation; for elſe all bodies would be alike one to another. Bacon.

ALTERA'TION. n. ſ. [from alter; alteration, Fr.]

1. The act of altering or changing.

Alteration, though it be from worſe to better, hath in it inconveniencies and thoſe weighty. Hooker.

2. The change made.

Why may we not preſume, that God doth even call for ſuch change or alteration, as the very condition of things themſelves doth make neceſſary. Hooker.

So he, with difficulty and labour hard,
Mov'd on:
But he once paſt, ſoon after, when man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin, and death, amain
Following his track (ſuch was the will of heav'n!)
Pav'd after him a broad and beaten way. Milton.

No other alteration will ſatisfy; nor this neither, very long, without an utter abolition of all order. South.

Appius Claudius admitted to the ſenate the ſons of thoſe who had been ſlaves; by which, and ſucceeding alterations, that council degenerated into a moſt corrupt body. Swift.

A'LTERATIVE. adj. [from alter.]

Medicines called alterative, are ſuch as have no immediate ſenſible operation, but gradually gain upon the conſtitution, by changing the humours from a ſtate of diſtemperature to health. They are oppoſed to evacuants. Quincy.

When there is an eruption of humour in any part, it is not cured merely by outward applications, but by ſuch alterative medicines as purify the blood. Government of the Tongue.

ALTERCA'TION. n. ſ. [altercation, Fr. from altercor, Lat.] Debate; controverſy; wrangle.

By this hot purſuit of lower controverſies amongſt men profeſſing religion, and agreeing in the principal foundations thereof, they conceive hope, that, about the higher principles themſelves, time will cauſe altercation to grow. Hooker.

Their whole life was, in a manner, little elſe than a perpetual wrangling and altercation; and that, many times, rather for victory and oſtentation of wit, than a ſober and ſerious ſearch of truth. Hakewell.

ALTE'RN. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Acting by turns, in ſucceſſion each to the other.

And God made two great lights, great for their uſe
To man; the greater to have rule by day,
The leſs by night, altern. Milton.

ALTE'RNACY. n. ſ. [from alternate.] Action performed by turns.

ALTE'RNATE. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Being by turns; one after another; reciprocal.

It is in vain to ſpeak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till they be altogether ſubdued. Spenſer.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to ſuffer for his conſcience, or to die for his religion; it being altogether as abſurd to imagine a man obliged to ſuffer, as to do impoſſibilities. South.

I do not altogether diſapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of ſcripture through the ſtyle of your ſermon. Swift.

2. Conjunctly; in company. This is rather all together.

Couſin of Somerſet, join you with me,
And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
We'll quickly hoiſt duke Humphry from his ſeat.
Shakeſpeare.

A'LUDEL. n. ſ. [from a and lutum; that is, without lute.]

Aludels are ſubliming pots uſed in chemiſtry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occaſion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be ſublimed; and, at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that riſe up. Quincy.

A'LUM. n. ſ. [alumen, Lat.]

A kind of mineral ſalt, of an acid taſte, leaving in the mouth a ſenſe of ſweetneſs, accompanied with a conſiderable degree of aſtringency. The ancient naturaliſts allow of two ſorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the iſland of Milo, being a kind of whitiſh ſtone, very light, friable, and porous, and ſtreaked with filaments reſembling ſilver. The factitious alum is prepared in different manners, according to the different materials of which it is made. Hence ariſe red, Roman, and citron alums; alſo plumoſe, ſaccharine, and burnt alums. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the Engliſh roche-alum is made from a bluiſh mineral ſtone, frequent in the hills of Yorkſhire and Lancaſhire. Alum is uſed in medicine as an abſorbent, but being apt to excite vomiting, it is ſeldom preſcribed inwardly. It is uſed outwardly in aſtringent lotions, and is an ingredient in ſeveral dentifrices and coſmeticks. It is a principal ingredient in dying and colouring; neither of which can be well performed without it. It ſerves to bind the colour upon the ſtuffs, and has the ſame uſes there, that gum water and glutinous oils have in painting. It alſo diſpoſes ſtuffs to take the colour, and adds a degree of briſkneſs and delicacy to it. This effect of alum ſeems to proceed from its ſtyptick or aſtringent quality, by which it binds the finer parts of colours together, and prevents their exhaling. Hence alſo it preſerves paper, that has been dipped in its water, from ſinking when wrote upon.

Saccharine alum bears a near reſemblance to ſugar, and is a compoſition of common alum, with roſe-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the conſiſtence of a paſte, and thus moulded at pleaſure. As it cools, it grows hard as a ſtone, and is uſed as a coſmetick.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire, and thus rendered whiter, more light, and more eaſily pulverized.

Plumoſe or plume alum is a ſort of ſaline mineral ſtone, of various colours, moſt commonly white, bordering on green, reſembling Venetian talc, except that, inſtead of ſcales, it riſes in threads or fibres, reſembling thoſe of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Some will have this to be the lapis amianthus of the ancients. Chambers.

By long beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the moſt part, into white curds. Boyle.

ALUM STONE. n. ſ. A ſtone or calx uſed in ſurgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corroſive.

She gargled with oxycrate, and was in few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum ſtones. Wiſeman.

ALU'MINOUS. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or conſiſting of alum.

Nor do we reaſonably conclude, becauſe, by a cold and aluminous moiſture, it is able a while to reſiſt the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it ſubſiſteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mixture with it, to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature. Wiſeman.

A'LWAYS. adv. [It is ſometimes written alway, compounded of all and way; ealleþæga, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time; oppoſed to ſometime, or to never.

That, which ſometime is expedient, doth not always ſo continue. Hooker.

Man never is, but always to be bleſt. Pope.

2. Conſtantly; without variation; oppoſed to ſometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when ſome great occaſion is preſented to him. Dryden.

A. M. Stands for artium magiſter, or maſter of arts; the ſecond degree of our univerſities, which, in ſome foreign countries, is called doctor of philoſophy.

AM. The firſt perſon of the verb to be. [See To BE.]

And God ſaid unto Moſes, I am that I am: and he ſaid, thus ſhalt thou ſay unto the children of Iſrael, I am hath ſent me unto you. Exodus, iii. 14.

Come then, my ſoul: I call thee by that name,
Thou buſy thing, from whence I know I am:
For knowing what I am, I know thou art;
Since that muſt needs exiſt, which can impart. Prior.

AMABI'LITY. n. ſ. [from amabilis, Lat.] Lovelineſs; the power of pleaſing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehenſions make that; and ſo is our felicity. Taylor.

AMADETTO. n. ſ. A ſort of pear [See PEAR.] ſo called, ſays Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

A'MADOT. n. ſ. A ſort of pear. [See PEAR.]

AMA'IN. adv. [from maine, or maigne, old Fr. derived from magnus, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is uſed of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
To ſignify that rebels there are up,
And put the Engliſhmen unto the ſword. Shakeſpeare.

What! when we fled amain, purſued, and ſtruck
With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and beſought
The deep to ſhelter us? Milton.

The hills, to their ſupply,
Vapour and exhalation duſk and moiſt,
Sent up amain. Milton.

From hence the boar was rous'd, and ſprung amain,
Like light'ning ſudden, on the warriour train,
Beats down the trees before him, ſhakes the ground;
The foreſt echoes to the crackling ſound,
Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around. Dry.

AMA'LGAM. } n. ſ. [ἅμα and γαμεῖν.] The mixture of me-
AMA'LGAMA. } tals procured by amalgamation. See AMALGAMATION.

The induration of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture reſulting fron the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

To AMA'LGAMATE. v. a. [from amalgam.]

To unite metals with quickſilver, which may be practiſed upon all metals, except iron and copper. The uſe of this operation is, to make the metal ſoft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

AMALGAMA'TION. n. ſ. [from amalgamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the reſt are anſwerable: Take ſix parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible; ſtir theſe well that they may incorporate; then caſt the maſs into cold water, and waſh it. Bacon.

AMANDA'TION. n. ſ. [from amando, Lat.] The act of ſending on a meſſage, or employment.

AMANUE'NSIS. n. ſ. [Lat.] A perſon who writes what another dictates.

A'MARANTH. n. ſ. [amaranthus, Lat. from α and μαραίνω.] The name of a plant.

The flowers have no petals; the cup of the flower is dry and multifid; the ſeeds are included in membranaceous veſſels, which, when come to maturity, burſt open tranſverſely or horizontally, like purſlane, each of which contains one or more roundiſh ſeeds.

Among the many ſpecies, the moſt beautiful are, 1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long pendulous amaranth, with reddiſh coloured ſeeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding. All theſe plants muſt be ſown on a good hot bed in February, or the beginning ginning of March. They produce large beautiful flowers, and perfect their seed in September. Millar.

2. In poetry, it is sometimes an imaginary flower, supposed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amarantb! a flower which once
In paradise, fast by the tree of life,
Began to bloom; but soon, for man's offence,
To heav'n remov'd, where first it grew, there grows,
And flow'rs aloft, shading the fount of life;
And where the river of bliss, thro' midst of heav'n,
Rowls o'er Elysian flow'rs her amber stream:
With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks, inwreath'd with beams.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

AMARA'NTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; consisting of amaranths.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the Elysian flow'rs,
By those happy souls who dwell
In yellow meads of Asphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs. Pope.

AMA'RITUDE. n. s. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bodies. Harvey.

AMA'RULENCE. n. s. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness. Dict.

AMA'SMENT. n. s. [from amass.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now in the subject, is but an amasment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impostures. Glanville.

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amasser, Fr.]

1. To collect together into one heap or mass.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made use of any unlawful means to amass riches, as having thriven by fraud and injustice. Atterbury.

When we would think of infinite space, or duration, we, at first step, usually make some very large idea, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which possibly we double and multiply several times. All that we thus amass together in our thoughts, is positive, and the assemblage of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense, to add one thing to another, generally with some share of reproach, either of eagerness or indiscrimination.

Such as amass all relations, must err in some, and be unbelieved in many. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, lest your improvements only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amassing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order to tell a story of him to the world. Pope.

To AMA'TE. v. n. [from a and mate. See MATE.]

1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. It is now obsolete.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sate,
Courted of many a jolly paramour,
The which did them immodest way amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Queen.

2. To terrify; to strike with horrour. In this sense, it is derived from the old French, matter, to crush or subdue.

AMATO'RCULIST. n. s. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little insignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

AMA'TORY. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; causing love.

It is the same thing whether one ravish Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions, not only allure her, but necessitate her to satisfy his lust, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably to follow him spontaneously.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

AMAUROSIS. n. s. [ἀμαυρόω.] A dimness of sight, not from any visible defect in the eye, but from some distemperature of the inner parts, occasioning the representations of flies and dust floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compressed by the blood-vessels being too much distended; so that, in many of its parts, all sense is lost; and therefore no images can be painted upon them, whereby the eyes, continually rolling round, many parts of objects falling successively upon them, are obscure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the stagnations in the extremities of those arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To AMA'ZE. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.]

1. To confuse with terrour.

Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them, and they shall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezek.

2. To put into confusion with wonder.

Go, heav'nly pair, and with your dazling virtues,
Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

3. To put into perplexity.

That cannot choose but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakespeare.

AMA'ZE. n. s. [from the verb amaze.] Astonishment; confusion, either of fear or wonder.

Fairfax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud. Milton.

Meantime the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage thro' the curling sea,
Then casting back his eyes with dire amaze,
Sees, on the Punick shore, the mounting blaze. Dryden.

AMA'ZEDLY. adv. [from amazed.] Confusedly; with amazement; with confusion.

I speak amazedly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my message. Shakespeare.

Why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly!
Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights. Macbeth.

AMA'ZEDNESS. n. s. [from amazed.] The state of being amazed; astonishment; wonder; confusion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazedness, we were all commanded out of the chamber.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

AMA'ZEMENT. n. s. [from amaze.]

1. Such a confused apprehension as does not leave reason its full force; extreme fear; horrour.

He answer'd nought at all; but adding new
Fear to his first amazement, staring wide,
With stony eyes, and heartless hollow hue,
Astonish'd stood, as one that had espy'd
Infernal furies, with their chains unty'd. Fairy Queen.

But look! amazement on thy mother sits;
O step between her and her fighting soul:
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works. Shakespeare.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impression left
Of much amazement to th' infernal crew,
Distracted and surpris'd with deep dismay
At these sad tidings. Milton.

3. Height of admiration.

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory
Run, with amazement we should read your story;
But living virtue, all atchievements past,
Meets envy still to grapple with at last. Waller.

4. Astonishment; wonder at an unexpected event.

They knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Acts.

AMA'ZING. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; astonishing.

It is indeed an amazing thing to see the present desolation of Italy, when one considers what incredible multitudes of people it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperors.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

AMA'ZINGLY. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite astonishment; wonderfully.

If we arise to the world of spirits, our knowledge of them must be amazingly imperfect, when there is not the least grain of sand but has too many difficulties belonging to it, for the wisest philosopher to answer. Watts.

A'MAZON. n. s. [α and μαζὸς.] The amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucasus; they are so called from their cutting off their breasts, to use their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the sword. Shakespeare.

AMBAGES. n. s. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of speech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expression.

They gave those complex ideas names, that they might the more easily record and discourse of things they were daily conversant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the things, they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.

AMBA'GIOUS. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious. Dict.

AMBASSA'DE. n. s. [ambassade, Fr.] Embassy; character or business of an ambassador: a word not now in use.

When you disgraced me in my ambassade,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shakespeare.

AMBA'SSADOUR. n. s. [ambassadeur, Fr. embaxador, Span. It is written differently, as it is supposed to come from the French or Spanish language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not easy to settle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew בשר to tell, and מבשר a messenger; others from ambactus, which, in the old Gaulish, signified a servant; whence ambascia, in low Latin, is found to signify service, and ambasciator, a servant; others deduce it from ambacht, in old Teutonick,

A M B

Teutonick, ſignifying a government, and Junius mentions a poſſibility of its deſcent from ἀνὰ βάσιν; and others from am for ad, and baſſus, low, as ſuppoſing the act of ſending an ambaſſadour, to be in ſome ſort an act of ſubmiſſion. All theſe derivations lead to write ambaſſadour, not embaſſadour.] A perſon ſent in a publick manner from one ſovereign power to another, and ſuppoſed to repreſent the power from which he is ſent. The perſon of an ambaſſadour is inviolable.

Ambaſſador is, in popular language, the general name of a meſſenger from a ſovereign power, and ſometimes, ludicrouſly, from common perſons. In the juridical and formal language, it ſignifies particularly a miniſter of the higheſt rank reſiding in another country, and is diſtinguiſhed from an envoy, who is of leſs dignity.

Give firſt admittance to th' ambaſſadours. Shakeſpeare.

Rais'd by theſe hopes, I ſent no news before,
Nor aſk'd you leave, nor did your faith implore;
But come, without a pledge, my own ambaſſador. Dryden.

Oft have their black ambaſſadors appear'd
Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama. Addiſon.

AMBA'SSADRESS. n. ſ. [ambaſſadrice, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambaſſadour.
2. In ludicrous language, a woman ſent on a meſſage.

Well, my ambaſſadreſs ———
Come you to menace war, and loud defiance?
Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow? Rowe.

A'MBASSAGE. n. ſ. [from ambaſſadour.] An embaſſy; the buſineſs of an ambaſſadour.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory anſwers; ſo as the formal part of their ambaſſage might well warrant their further ſtay. Bacon.

A'MBER. n. ſ. [from ambar, Arab. whence the lower writers formed amba'um.]

A yellow tranſparent ſubſtance of a gummous or bituminous conſiſtence, but reſinous taſte, and a ſmell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltick ſea, along the coaſts of Pruſſia. Some naturaliſts refer it to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and ſome even to the animal kingdom. Pliny deſcribes it as a reſinous juice, oozing from aged pines and firs, and diſcharged thence into the ſea; where, undergoing ſome alteration, it is thrown, in this form, upon the ſhores of Pruſſia, which lie very low. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of ſuccinum, from ſuccus, juice. This opinion of the ancient naturaliſt is confirmed by the obſervation of many of the moderns, particularly Father Camelli. Philoſ. Tranſact. N° 290. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beaſt; others, the ſcum of the lake Cephiſis, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in ſome fountains, where it is found ſwimming like pitch. Others ſuppoſe it a bitumen trickling into the ſea from ſubterraneous ſources; but this opinion is alſo diſcarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a conſiderable diſtance from the ſea, as that gathered on the coaſt. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatick plants, elaborated by heat into a cryſtalline form. Amber aſſumes all figures in the ground; that of a pear, an almond, a pea; and, among others, there have been found letters very well formed, and even Hebrew and Arabick characters. Within ſome pieces of amber have been found leaves, and inſects included; which ſeems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid ſtate, or, that having been expoſed to the ſun, it was ſoftened, and rendered ſuſceptible of the leaves and inſects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiouſly in the dark. Some diſtinguiſh amber into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are ſuppoſed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. The white is moſt valued for medicinal uſes, and the yellow for being wrought into beads and toys, becauſe of its tranſparency. Trev. Chamb.

Liquid amber, is a kind of native balſam or reſin, like turpentine; clear, reddiſh, or yellowiſh; of a pleaſant ſmell, almoſt like ambergris. It flows from an inciſion made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives oſoſol; but it hardens, as it grows older, into a ſolid form, and is brought to us in barrels. It is reputed an excellent balſam. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body, that is coloured, as painted glaſs, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar ſhade;
But poplar wreathes around his temples ſpread,
And tears of amber trickled down his head. Addiſon.

The ſpoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And ſtudded amber darts a golden ray. Pope.

A'MBER. adj. Conſiſting of amber.

With ſcarfs, and fans, and double charge of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knav'ry.
Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMBER DRINK. n. ſ. Drink of the colour of amber, or reſembling amber in colour and tranſparency.

All your clear amber drink is flat. Bacon.

A'MBERGRIS. n. ſ. [from amber and gris, or grey; that is, grey amber.]

A fragrant drug, that melts almoſt like wax, commonly of a greyiſh or aſh colour, uſed both as a perfume and a cordial. It is found on the ſea coaſts of ſeveral warm countries, and on the weſtern coaſts of Ireland. Some imagine it to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the ſun, and waſhed off the ſhore by the waves, is ſwallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fiſh, becauſe ſometimes found in the inteſtines of ſuch animals. But we have no inſtance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it ſhould rather be found where theſe animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which diſtils from trees, and drops into the ſea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it ſprings out of the ſea, as naphtha does out of ſome fountains. Others ſuppoſe it a ſea muſhroom, torn up from the bottom by the violence of tempeſts. Others aſſert it to be a vegetable production, iſſuing out of the root of a tree, whoſe roots always ſhoot toward the ſea, and diſcharge themſelves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the ſea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their neſts; ſeveral perſons having ſeen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Some affirm it to be a true animal concrete, formed in balls in the body of the male ſpermaceti whale, and lodged in a large oval bag over the teſticles. But, beſides that it is not one ſpermaceti whale in a hundred, that is found to have ambergris, Neumann, chemiſt to the king of Pruſſia, abſolutely denies it to be an animal ſubſtance, as not yielding in the analyſis, any one animal principle. It may indeed be found in whales, but it muſt have been ſwallowed by them. He concludes it to be a bitumen iſſuing out of the earth into the ſea; at firſt of a viſcous conſiſtence, but hardening, by its mixture with ſome liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Bermudas wall'd with rocks, who does not know
That happy iſland, where huge lemons grow,
Where ſhining pearl, coral, and many a pound,
On the rich ſhore, of ambergris is found. Waller.

AMBER SEED, or muſk ſeed, reſembles millet, is of a bitteriſh taſter, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. The Egyptians uſe it internally as a cordial. It gives a grateful ſcent to the breath after eating. Chambers.

AMBER TREE. n. ſ. [frutex Africanus ambram ſpirans.] A ſhrub whoſe beauty is in its ſmall evergreen leaves, which grow as cloſe as heath, and, being bruiſed between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Miller.

AMBIDE'XTER. n. ſ. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the uſe of both his hands.

Rhodiginus, undertaking to give a reaſon of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either ſide, in party diſputes. This ſenſe is ludicrous.

AMBIDE'XTERITY. n. ſ. [from ambidexter.]

1. The quality of being able equally to uſe both hands.
2. Double dealing.

AMBIDE'XTROUS. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.]

1. Double dealing; practiſing on both ſides.

Æſop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all falſe, ſhuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Eſtrange.

2. Having, with equal facility, the uſe of either hand.

Others, not conſidering ambidextrous and left-handed men, do totally ſubmit unto the efficacy of the liver. Vulgar Err.

AMBIDE'XTROUSNESS. n. ſ. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Dict.

A'MBIENT. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompaſſing; inveſting.

This which yields or fills
All ſpace, the ambient air wide-interfus'd. Milton.

The thickneſs of a plate requiſite to produce any colour, depends only on the denſity of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton.

Around him dance the roſy hours,
And damaſking the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient ſweets perfume the morn. Fenton to L. Gower.

Illuſtrious virtues, who by turns have roſe,
With happy laws her empire to ſuſtain,
And with full pow'r aſſert her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient æther is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodig ous celerity. Bentley.

A'MBIGU. n. ſ. [French.] An entertainment, conſiſting not of regular courſes, but of a medley of diſhes ſet on together.

When ſtraiten'd in your time, and ſervants few,
You'd richly then compoſe an ambigu;
Where firſt and ſecond courſe, and your deſert,
All in our ſingle table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGU'ITY. n. ſ. [from ambiguous.] Doubtfulneſs of meaning; uncertainty of ſignification; double meaning.

Ambiguities

A M B

With ambiguities they often entangle themselves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itself, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hooker.

We can clear these ambiguities,
And know their spring, their head, their true descent.
Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

The words are of single signification, without any ambiguity; and therefore I shall not trouble you, by straining for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or distinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBIGUOUS. adj [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain signification.

But what have been thy answers, what but dark,
Ambiguous, and with doubtful sense deluding. Par. Reg.

Some expressions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left so; because the persons who framed them, were not all of one mind. Clarendon.

2. Applied to persons using doubtful expressions. It is applied to expressions, or those that use them, not to a dubious, or suspended state of mind.

Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her lab'ring breast,
In these mysterious words his mind exprest;
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. } Dryd.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,
Constrain'd a smile, and thus ambiguous spoke. Pope Odyss.

AMBI'GUOUSLY. adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBI'GUOUSNESS. n. s. [from ambiguous.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of signification.

AMBI'LOGY. n s. [from ambo, Lat. and λογος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful signification. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUOUS adj. [from ambo and loquor, Lat.] Using ambiguous and doubtful expressions. Dict.

AMBI'LOQUY. n s. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The use of doubful and indeterminate expressions; discourse of doubtful meaning. D.

A'MBIT. n. s. [ambitus, Lat.] The compass or circuit of any thing; the line that encompasses any thing.

The tusk of a wild boar winds about almost into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little writhen. In measuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its basis an inch over. Grew's Musæum.

AMBI'TION. n. s. [ambitio, Lat.] The desire of something higher than is possessed at present.

1. The desire of preferment or honour.

Who would think, without having such a mind as Antiphilos, that so great goodness could not have bound gratefulness? and so high advancement not have satisfied his ambition? Sid.

2. The desire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would be, and so would rest;
The sense would not be only, but be well:
But wit's ambition longeth to the best,
For it desires in endless bliss to dwell. Daniel.

Urge them, while their souls
Are capable of this ambition;
Lest zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was. Shakespeare.

3. It is used with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambition to recommend myself to your Lordship's patronage. Addison.

There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety. Pope's Preface to his Letters.

AMBI'TIOUS. adj. [ambitiosus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; desirous of advancement; eager of honours; aspiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition.

The neighb'ring monarchs, by thy beauty led,
Content in crouds, ambitious of thy bed:
The world is at thy choice, except but one,
Except but him thou canst not choose alone. Dryd. Fab.

You have been pleased not to suffer an old man to go discontented out of the world, for want of that protection, of which he had been so long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, descended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, seeing a vessel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of outdoing Alexander. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Eager to grow bigger; aspiring.

I have seen
Th' ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threatening clouds. Shakesp.

AMBI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from ambitious.] In an ambitious manner; with eagerness of advancement or preference.

With such glad hearts did our despairing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;
And each ambitiously would claim the ken,
That with first eyes did distant safety meet. Dryd.

Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known,
Ambitiously design'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryd.

AMBI'TIOUSNESS. n. s. [from ambitious.] The quality of being ambitious.

AMBI'TUDE. n. s. [ambio, Lat.] Compass; circuit; circumference

To A'MBLE. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. [See AMPLE.]

It is good, on some occasions, to enjoy as much of the present, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourselves of the virtuoso's saddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.

2. To move easily, without hard shocks, or shaking.

Who ambles time withal? —A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, because he feels no pain; knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury: him time ambles withal. Shakespeare's As you like it.

3. In a ludicrous sense, to move with submission, and by direction; as, a horse that ambles, uses a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, w' imparting she,
Shall make him amble on a gossip's message,
And take the distaff with a hand as patient,
As ere did Hercules. Rowe's Jane Shore.

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am rudely stampt, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shakesp.

A'MBLE. n. s. [from to amble.] A pace or movement in which the horse removes both his legs on one side; as, on the far side, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the same side at one time, whilst the legs on the near side stand still; and when the far legs are upon the ground, the near side removes the fore leg and hinder leg, and the legs on the far side stand still. An amble is the first pace of young colts, but when they have strength to trot they quit it. There is no amble in the manege; riding-masters allow only of a walk, trot, and gallop. A horse may be put from a trot to a gallop without stopping; but cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a stop, which interrupts the justness of the manege. Farrier's Dict.

A'MBLER. n. s. [from to amble.] A horse that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

A'MBLINGLY. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBRO'SIA. n. s. [αμβροσία.]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleasing to the smell or taste, is called ambrosia.

2. The name of a plant.

It has male flosculous flowers produced on separate parts of the same plant from the fruit, having no visible petals; the fruit which succeeds the female flowers, is shaped like a club, and is prickly, containing one oblong seed in each.

The species are, 1. The marine or sea ambrosia. 2. Taller unsavoury sea ambrosia. 3. The tallest Canada ambrosia, with rough plane tree leaves. The first sort should be sown early in the spring, under a warm wall. The second and third are common American weeds, which should be sown upon a gentle hotbed in the spring. None of them have much beauty to recommend them. Miller.

AMBRO'SIAL. adj. [from ambrosia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambrosia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.

Thus while God spake, ambrosial fragrance fill'd
All heaven, and in the blessed spirits elect
Sense of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton.

The gifts of heaven my following song pursues,
Aerial honey, and ambrosial dews. Dryden.

To farthest shores th' ambrosial spirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies. Pope.

A'MBRY. n. s. [a word corrupted from almonry.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are distributed.

2. The place where plate and utensils for housekeeping are kept; also a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word still used in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBS ACE. n. s. [from ambo, Lat. and ace.] A double ace; so called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambs ace for my life. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

This will be yet clearer, by considering his own instance of casting ambs ace, though it partake more of contingency than of freedom. Supposing the posture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves, supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Bramh. against Hobbes.

AMBULA'TION. n. s. [ambulatio, Lat.] The act of walking.

From the occult and invisible motion of the muscles in station, proceed more offensive lassitudes, than from ambulation. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MBULATORY. adj. [ambulo, Lat.]

1. That which has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are such as require some basis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions: such were those strange inventions, commonly attributed to Dædalus, or self-moving statues, which, unless violently detained, would of themselves run away. Wilkins's Mathematick Magick.

2. That

A M E

2. That which happens during a paſſage or walk.

He was ſent to conduce hither the princeſs Henrietta Maria, of whom his majeſty had an ambulatory view in his travels. Wotton.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exerciſe of its juriſdiction.

A'MBURY. n. ſ. A bloody wart on any part of a horſe's body.

AMBUSCA'DE. n. ſ. [embuſcade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private ſtation in which men lie to ſurpriſe others; ambuſh.

Then waving high her torch, the ſignal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambuſcade. Dryden.

When I behold a faſhionable table ſet out, I fancy that gouts, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable diſtempers, lie in ambuſcade among the diſhes. Addiſon.

AMBUSCA'DO. n. ſ. [emboſcada, Span.] A private poſt, in order to ſurpriſe an enemy.

Sometimes ſhe driveth o'er a ſoldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuſcados, Spaniſh blades,
Of healths five fathom deep. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.

A'MBUSH. n. ſ. [embuſche, Fr. from bois a wood; whence embuſcher, to hide in woods, ambuſhes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick foreſts.]

1. The poſt where ſoldiers or aſſaſſins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy.

Charge, charge, their ground the faint Taxallans yield,
Bold in cloſe ambuſh, baſe in open field.
Dryden's Indian Emperour.

2. The act of ſurpriſing another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a ſecret poſt.

Nor ſhall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whoſe high walls fear no aſſault or ſiege,
Or ambuſh from the deep. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. The ſtate of being poſted privately, in order to ſurpriſe; the ſtate of lying in wait.

The reſidue retired deceitfully towards the place of their ambuſh, whence iſſued more. Then the earl gathered his ſmall company about him, and maintained the fight. But the enemy, whether perceiving ſome ſuccours advancing, or whether intending to draw the Engliſh further into their ambuſh, turned away at an eaſy pace. Hayward.

4. Perhaps the perſons placed in private ſtations.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaſter,
Once did I lay an ambuſh for your life. Shakeſp. Richard II.

A'MBUSHED. adj. [from ambuſh.] Placed in ambuſh; lying in wait.

Thick as the ſhades, there iſſue ſwarming bands
Of ambuſh'd men, whom, by their arms and dreſs,
To be Taxallan enemies I gueſs. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

AMBU'SHMENT. n. ſ. [from ambuſh; which ſee.] Ambuſh; ſurprize: a word now not uſed.

Like as a wily fox, that having ſpied
Where on a ſunny bank the lambs do play,
Full cloſely creeping by the hinder ſide,
Lies in ambuſhment of his hoped prey. Spenſer's Muiopotmos.

AMBU'ST, adj. [ambuſtus, Lat.] Burnt; ſcalded. Dict.

AMBU'STION. n. ſ. [ambuſtio, Lat.] A burn; a ſcald.

A'MEL. n. ſ. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glaſs melted with calcined tin, compoſe an undiaphanous body. This white amel is the baſis of all thoſe fine concretes that goldſmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AME'N. adv. [A word of which the original has given riſe to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, ſignifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word ſeems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, ſignifies firmneſs, certainty, fidelity.] A term uſed in devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean ſo be it, at the end of a creed, ſo it is.

One cried, God bleſs us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had ſeen me with theſe hangman's hands.
Liſtening their fear, I could not ſay Amen,
When they did ſay God bleſs us. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, from everlaſting and to everlaſting, Amen and amen. Pſalm xli. 13.

AME'NABLE. adj. [ameſnable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, ſignifies, to oblige one to appear to anſwer a charge exhibited againſt him.] Reſponſible; ſubject ſo as to be liable to enquiries or accounts.

Again, becauſe the inferiour ſort were looſe and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the beſt and eldeſt perſons of every ſept, ſhould bring in all the idle perſons of their ſurname, to be juſtified by the law. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'MENANCE. n. ſ. [It ſeems to come from amener, Fr.] Conduct; behaviour; mien: a word diſuſed.

For he is fit to uſe in all aſſays.
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or elſe for wiſe and civil governance. Spenſ. Hubb. Tale.

Well kend him ſo far ſpace,
Th' enchanter by his arms an amenance,
When under him he ſaw his Lybian ſteed to prance.
Fairy Queen, b. ii. c. vi.

To AME'ND. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.]

1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to ſomething better.

2. To reform the life, or leave wickedneſs. In theſe two caſes we uſually write mend. See MEND.

Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cauſe you to dwell in this place. Jerem. vii. 3.

3. To reſtore paſſages in writers which the copiers are ſuppoſed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve ſuppoſes, or not denies, that the thing is well already, but to amend implies ſomething wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

At his touch,
Such ſanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They preſently amend. Shakeſpeare's Macbeth.

AME'NDE. n. ſ. [French.] This word in French, ſignifies a fine, by which recompenſe is ſuppoſed to be made for the fault committed. We uſe in a cognate ſignification, the word amends.

AME'NDMENT. n. ſ. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.

Before it was preſented on the ſtage, ſome things in it have paſſed your approbation and amendment. Dryd. Aureng. Pref.

Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature obſerves the ſame tenour, becauſe her works are ſo perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be reprehended. Ray on the Creation.

There are many natural defects in the underſtanding, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the teſtimony which Moſes and the prophets have given, concerning the miſeries that follow ſinners after death, were not likely to be perſuaded by other means, although God from the dead ſhould have raiſed them up preachers. Hooker.

Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguiſh, are ſent as ſcourges for amendment. Eſdras.

Though a ſerious purpoſe of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no ſure judgment whether this purpoſe be ſerious, or theſe acts true acts of contrition. Hammond's Practical Catechiſm.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honours players hearing your amendment,
Are come to play a pleaſant comedy. Shakeſp. Tam. Shrew.

AME'NDMENT. [emendatio, Lat.] It ſignifies, in law, the correction of an errour committed in a proceſs, and eſpied before or after judgment; and ſometimes after the party's ſeeking advantage by the errour. Blount.

AME'NDER. n. ſ. [from amend.] The perſon that amends any thing.

AME'NDS. n. ſ. [amende, Fr. from which it ſeems to be accidentally corupted.] Recompenſe; compenſation; attonement.

If I have too auſterely puniſhed you,
Your compenſation makes amends. Shakeſpeare's Tempeſt.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to thoſe that had ſuffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

Where I a priſ'ner chain'd, ſcarce freely draw
The air impriſon'd alſo, cloſe and damp,
Unwholeſome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heaven freſh blowing, pure and ſweet,
With day-ſpring born; here leave me to reſpire.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes.

Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I make the world ſome part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroick poem. Dryden, Aureng. Pref.

If our ſouls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compenſation for the frailties of life, and ſufferings of this ſtate. Tillotſon.

It is a ſtrong argument for retribution hereafter, that virtuous perſons are very often unfortunate, and vicious perſons proſperous; which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wiſe and good in all his works; unleſs we may ſuppoſe that ſuch a promiſcuous diſtribution, which was neceſſary for carrying on the deſigns of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spectator.

AME'NITY. n. ſ. [amenité, Fr. amœnitas, Lat.] Pleaſantneſs; agreeableneſs of ſituation.

If the ſituation of Babylon was ſuch at firſt, as it was in the days of Herodotus, it was rather a ſeat of amenity and pleaſure, than conducing unto this intention. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

To AME'RCE. v. a. [amercier, Fr. Ὀφθάλμων μὲν ἄμερζις, ſeems to give the original.]

1. To puniſh with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to inflict fict a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers.

But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine,
That you shall all repent the loss of mine.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

All the suitors were considerably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for those mischiefs. Hale.

2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel. Deut.

3. Sometimes it is used, in imitation of the Greek construction, with the particle of.

Millions of spirits, for his fault amerc'd
Of heav'n, and from eternal splendours flung,
For his revolt. Milton.

AME'RCER. n. f. [from amerce.] He that sets a fine upon any misdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary punishment or forfeiture.

AME'RCEMENT. } n. f. [from amerce.] The pecuniary punish-AME'RCIAMENT. } ment of an offender, who stands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All amercements and fines that shall be imposed upon them, shall come unto themselves. Spenser.

AMES ACE. n. f. [a corruption of the word ambs ace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early softened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dext'rously to throw the lucky sice:
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

A'MESS. n. f. [corrupted from amice.] A priest's vestment. Dict.

AMETHO'DICAL. adj. [from a and method.] Out of method; without method; irregular.

A'METHYST. n. f. ἀμέθυστος, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenness; so called, either because it is not quite of the colour of wine, or because it was imagined to prevent inebriation.]

A precious stone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyst is the hardest, scarcest, and most valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though some are purple, and others white like the diamond. The german is of a violet colour, and the Spanish are of three sorts; the best are the blackest or deepest violet; others are almost quite white, and some few tinctured with yellow. They are found in a hill named St. Sigminont, in Catalonia, by following the vein of reddish or black earth, or a vein in a rock so coloured, and are all hexangular, and pointed like crystal. Sometimes a great number is found sticking together, like the Bristol diamonds; but the best are found loose in the chinks of the rock. Beautiful ones are also found in the Pyreneans, and in the mountains of Auvergne. The amethyst is not extremely hard, but easy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Savary. Chambers.

I observed some stones that nearly approached the granate complection; and several very nearly resembling the amethyst.
Woodward on Fossils.

A'METHYST. [in heraldry] signifies the same colour in a nobleman's coat, that purpure does in a gentleman's.

AMETHY'STINE. adj. [from amethyst.] Resembling an amethyst in colour.

A'MIABLE. adj. [aimable, Fr.]

1. Lovely; pleasing.

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable also. Hooker.

She told her, while she kept it,
'Twould make her amiable, subdue my father
Intirely to her love; but if she lost it,
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
Should hold her loathed. Shakespeare.

2. Pretending love; shewing love.

Spend all, only give me so much time in exchange, as to lay amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife; use your art of wooing. Shakespeare.

A'MIABLENESS. n. f. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable; loveliness; power of raising love.

As soon as the natural gaiety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuse of the species. Addison.

A'MIABLY. adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in such a manner as to excite love.

A'MICABLE. adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly used of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we seldom say, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be so used in this passage.

O grace serene! oh virtue heav'nly fair,
Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky!
And faith, our early immortality!
Enter each mild, each amicable guest;
Receive and wrap me in eternal rest. Pope.

A'MICABLENESS. n. f. [from amicable.] The quality of being amicable; friendliness; goodwill.

A'MICABLY. adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with goodwill and concord.

They see
Through the dun mist, in blooming beauty fresh,
Two lovely youths, that amicably walkt
O'er verdant meads, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd
Anna's late conquests. Philips.

I found my subjects amicabl join,
To lessen their defects, by citing mine. Prior.

In Holland itself, where it is pretended that the variety of sects live so amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Arminians, did attempt to destroy the republick. Swift.

A'MICE. n. f. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex sex indumentis epi copo & presbyteriis communibus sunt, amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, & planeta. Du Cange. Amictus quo collum stringitur, & pectus tegitur, castitatem interioris hominis designat; tegit enim cor, ne vanitates cogitet, stringit autem collum, ne inde ad linguam transeat mendacium. Bruno.] The first or undermost part of a priest's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus pass'd the night so foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice grey. Milton.

On some a priest, succinct in amice white,
Attends. Pope.

AMI'D.
AMI'DST. } prep. [from a and mid, or midst.]

1. In the midst; equally distant from either extremity.

Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree, amidst
The garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat. Milton.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatelli's statue of the great duke, amidst the four slaves, chained to his pedestal, are very noble sights. Addison.

2. Mingled with; surrounded by; in the ambit of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,
And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would moan? Sidney.

So hills amid the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro, with jaculation dire. Milton.

What have I done, to name that wealthy swain,
The boar amidst my crystal streams I bring;
And southern winds to blast my flow'ry spring. Dryden.

Amata's breast the fury thus invades,
And fires with rage amid the sylvan shades. Dryden.

3. Amongst; conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor sound
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever singing, as they shine,
"The hand that made us in divine." Addison.

AMI'SS. adv. [from a, which, in this form of composition, often signifies according to, and miss, the English particle, which shews any thing, like the Greek παρά, to be wrong; as, to miscount, to count erroneously; to misdo, to commit a crime: amiss therefore signifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty; criminal.

For that which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is yet amiss when it is truly done. Shakespeare.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourselves, if at any time we have done amiss, is not to sever ourselves from the church we were of before. Hooker.

O ye powers that search
The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,
If I have done amiss, impute it not. Addison.

3. In an ill sense.

She sigh'd withal, they construe all amiss,
And thought she wish'd to kill who long'd to kiss. Fairfax.

4. Wrong; improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counsels only and persuasions, not amiss to be followed by them, whose case is the like. Hooker.

Methinks, though a man had all science, and all principles, yet it might not be amiss to have some conscience. Tillotson.

5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amiss, 'tis true;
Yet I am somewhat better born than you. Dryden.

I built a wall, and when the masons plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me so much as to stand by, while my servants threw down what was amiss. Swift.

6. Reproachful; irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghil; because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort.
Daniel, iii. 29.

7. Impaired in health; as, I was somewhat amiss yesterday, but am well to day.

8. Amiss is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially rendered; because it always follows the substantive to which

which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in English; and though we say the action was amiss, we never say an amiss action.

9. Amiss is used by Shakespeare as a noun substantive.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss. Hamlet.

AMI'SSION. n. s. [amissio, Lat.] Loss.

To AMI'T. v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To lose: a word little in use.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffluency, and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MITY. n. s. [amitie, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendship, whether publick between nations, opposed to war, or among the people, opposed to discord, or between private persons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Davies on Ireland.

You have a noble and a true conceit
Of godlike amity; which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord. Shakesp.

And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate
Pursue this race, this service dedicate
To my deplored ashes; let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

AMMONI'AC. n. s. The name of a drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the East Indies, and is supposed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the juice of a kind of ferula growing in Barbary, and the plant is called agasyllis. Pliny call the tree metopion, which, he says, grows near the temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry drops, white within, yellowish without, easily fusible, resinous, somewhat bitter, and of a very sharp taste and smell, somewhat like garlick. This gum is said to have served the ancients for incense, in their sacrifices. It enters several medicinal compositions, as an attenuant and detergent; and, outwardly applied, it is resolutive and suppurative. Savary. Trevoux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile salt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient sort, described by Pliny and Dioscorides, was a native salt, generated in those large inns or caravanseras, where the croud of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, used to lodge; who, in those parts, travelling upon camels, and those creatures when in Cyrene, a province of Egypt, where that celebrated temple stood, urining in the stables, or, say some, in the parched sands, out of this urine, which is remarkably strong, arose a kind of salt, denominated sometimes from the temple, Ammoniac, and sometimes from the country, Cyreniac. Since the cessation of these pilgrimages, no more of this salt is produced there; and, from this deficiency, some suspect there never was any such thing: but this suspicion is removed, by the large quantities of a salt, nearly of the same nature, thrown out by mount Ætna. The characters of the ancient sal ammoniac are, that it cools water, turns aqua fortis into aqua regia, and consequently dissolves gold.

The modern sal ammoniac is entirely factitious, and made in Egypt; where several long-necked glass bottles, being filled with soot, a little sea salt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouth luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, contrived for the purpose, in a thick bed of ashes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual strong fire. The steam swells up the cotton, and forms a paste at the vent-hole, hindering the salts from evaporating; which, being confined, stick to the top of the bottle, and are, upon breaking it, taken out in those large cakes, which they send to England. Only soot exhaled from dung, is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the strongest and best.

Our chymists imitate the Egyptian sal ammoniac, by adding one part of common salt to five of urine; with which some mix that quantity of soot, and putting the whole in a vessel, they raise from it, by sublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous substance, which they call sal ammoniac. There are various preparations of this salt used in pharmacy; as, sublimate of sal ammoniac, and flowers of sal ammoniac, used as sudorificks, diureticks, and good aperients; volatile sal ammoniac, used against malignant fevers, as a sudorifick, and in pocket bottles; spirit of sal ammoniac, of various kinds. Chambers.

AMMONI'ACAL. adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac salt.

Human blood calcin'd, yields no fixed salt; nor is it a sal ammoniack; for that remains immutable after repeated distillations; and distillation destroys the ammoniacal quality of animal salts, and turns them alkaline: so that it is a salt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniacal; but soft and benign, approaching nearest to the nature of sal ammoniac. Arbuthnot.

AMMUNI'TION. n. s. [supposed by some to come from amonitio, which, in the barbarous ages, seems to have signified supply of provision; but it, surely may be more reasonably derived from munitio, fortification; choses à munitions, things for the fortresses.] Military stores.

They must make themselves defensible against strangers; and must have the assistance of some able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel staid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon.

All the rich mines of learning ransackt are,
To furnish ammunition for this war. Denham.

But now his stores of ammunition spent,
His naked valour is his only guard:
Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon sent,
And solitary guns are scarcely heard. Dryden.

AMMUNI'TION BREAD. n. s. Bread for the supply of the armies or garrisons.

A'MNESTY. n. s. [ἀμνηστία, Gr.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes against the government, to a certain time, are so obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may safely commit upon the last of June, what he would infallibly be hanged for, if he committed it on the first of July: by which the greatest criminals may escape, provided they continue long enough in power, to antiquate their crimes, and, by stifling them a while, deceive the legislature into an amnesty. Swift.

ANNI'COLIST. n. s. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. D.

AMNI'GENOUS. n. s. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river. Dict.

A'MNION. A'MNIOS. n. s. [Lat. perhaps from ἄμνος.]

The innermost membrane with which the fœtus in the womb is most immediately covered, and with which the rest of the secundines, the chorion, and alantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It also contains a nutritious humour, separated by glands for that purpose, with which the fœtus is preserved. It is outwardly cloathed with the urinary membrane, and the chorion, which sometimes stick so close to one another, that they can scarce be separated. It has also its vessels from the same origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMO'MUM. n. s. [Lat.] A sort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioscorides differ about the ancient amomum; but the generality of them suppose it to be a fruit different from ours. Scaliger is confident, that the amomum was no fruit; but the wood, which bore some resemblance to a bunch of grapes, and was used in embalming of bodies; whence the name mummy was given to bodies embalmed with it. The modern amomum appears to be the sison, or sium, of the ancients, or bastard stone-parsley. It resembles the muscat grape, grows in clusters, and is about the thickness of a pea, round, membranous, and divided into three cells, that contain several brown angular grains, of a very strong aromatick taste and smell. This fruit is brought from the East Indies, and makes part of the composition of treacle. It is of a hot spicy taste and smell. There is likewise another paler seed, named amomum; but neither are in much repute in physick. Trevoux. Chambers.

AMO'NG. AMONGST. prep. [amang, gemang, Saxon.]

1. Mingled with; placed with other persons or things; on every side.

Amongst strawberries sow here and there some borage-seed; and you shall find the strawberries under those leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by soft winds
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard,
And from his presence hid themselves, among,
The thickest trees, both man and wife. Milton.

2. Conjoined with others, so as to make part of the number.

I have then, as you see, observed the failings of many great wits amongst the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden.

There were, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Addison.

A'MORIST. n. s. [from amour.] An inamorato; a galant; a man professing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds; though casualties should spare them, age brings in a necessity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white, perplexed by incertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and her beauty, both which are necessary to the amorist's joys and quiet. Boyle.

AMORO'SO. n. s. [Ital.] A man enamoured. Dict.

A'MOROUS. adj. [amoroso, Ital.]

1. In love; enamoured; with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakespeare, on.

Sure, my brother is amorous on Hero; and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it.
Shakespeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Apes, as soon as they have brought forth their young, keep eyes fattened on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty: so amorous is nature of whatsoever she produces.

A M P

Dryden's Dufresney.

2. Naturally inclined to love; disposed to fondness; fond.
The am'rous master own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembl'd as he drew;
Each flowing line confirm'd his first surprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the passion grew. Prior.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.
I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass,
I, that am rudely stampt. Shakesp. Rich. III.
And into all things from her air inspir'd
The spirit of love, and amorous delight. Paradise Lost.
In the amorous net
First caught they lik'd; and each his liking chose.
Milton's Paradise Lost.
O! how I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantane's shade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain,
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein! Waller.

A'MOROUSLY. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.
When thou wilt swim in that live-bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will amorously to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Donne.

A'MOROUSNESS. n. s. [from amorous.] The quality of being amorous; fondness; lovingness; love.
All Gynecia's actions were interpreted by Basilius, as proceeding from jealousy of his amorousness. Sidney.
I can readily believe that Lindamor has wit, and amorousness enough, to make him find it more easy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himself against them. Boyle.

A-MORT. adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the state of the dead; dejected; depressed; spiritless.
How fares my Kate? what, sweeting, all amort?
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

AMORTIZA'TION. } n. s. [amortissement, amortissable, Fr.] The AMO'RTIZEMENT. } right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to some community, that never is to cease.
Every one of the religious orders was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an especial provision for them, after the laws of amortization were devised and put in use by princes.
Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

To AMO'RTIZE. v. a. [amortir, Fr.] To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild or fraternity, and their successors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blount.
This did concern the kingdom to have farms sufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the yeomanry, or middle part of the people.
Bacon's Henry VII.

To AMO'VE. v. a. [amoveo, Lat.]
1. To remove from a post or station: a juridical sense.
2. To remove; to move; to alter: a sense now out of use.
Therewith, amoved from his sober mood,
And lives he yet, said he, that wrought this act?
And do the heavens afford him vital food? Fairy Queen.

To AMO'UNT. v. n. [monter, Fr.]
1. To rise to in the accumulative quantity; to compose in the whole; with the particle to. It is used of several sums in quantities added together.
Let us compute a little more particularly how much this will amount to, or how many oceans of water would be necessary to compose this great ocean rowling in the air, without bounds or banks. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. It is used, figuratively, of the consequence rising from any thing taken altogether.
The errours of young men are the ruin of business; but the errours of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner. Bacon.
Judgments that are made on the wrong side of the danger, amount to no more than an affectation of skill, without either credit or effect. L'Estrange.

AMO'UNT. n. s. [from To amount.] The sum total; the result of several sums or quantities accumulated.
And now, ye lying vanities of life,
Where are you now, and what is your amount?
Vexation, disappointment, and remorse. Thomson.

AMO'UR. n. s. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry; an intrigue: generally used of vicious love. The ou sounds like oo in poor.
No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never so outrageously, yet the impure flame will either die of itself, or consume the body that harbours it. South.
The restless youth search'd all the world around;
But how can Jove in his amours be found?
Addison's Ovid's Metam.

A'MPER. n. s. [ampne, Sax.] A tumour, with inflammation; bile: a word said, by Skinner, to be much in use in Essex; but, perhaps, not found in books.

AMPHI'BIOUS. adj. [ἀμφὶ and βίος.] That which partakes of two natures, so as to live in two elements; as, in air and water.
A creature of amphibious nature,
On land a beast, a fish in water. Hudibras.
Those are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are observed to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of those creatures that live at that ease, and by choice, a good while, or at any time upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.
Fishes contain much oil, and amphibious animals participate somewhat of the nature of fishes, and are oily. Arbuthnot.

AMPHI'BIOUSNESS. n. s. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLO'GICAL. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLO'GICALLY. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBO'LOGY. n. s. [ἀμφιβολογία.] Discourse of uncertain meaning. It is distinguished from equivocation, which means the double signification of a single word; as, nolite regem occidere, timere bonum est, is amphibology; captare lepores, meaning by lepores, either hares or jests, is equivocation.
Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themselves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real; of the verbal, and such as conclude from mistakes of the word, there are but two worthy our notation; the fallacy of equivocation and amphibology. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
In defining obvious appearances, we are to use what is most plain and easy; that the mind be not misled by amphibologies, or ill conceived notions, into fallacious deductions.
Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

AMPHI'BOLOUS. adj. [ἄμφι and βάλλω.] Tossed from one to another; striking each way.
Never was there such an amphibolous quarrel, both parties declaring themselves for the king, and making use of his name in all their remonstrances, to justify their actions. Howel.

AMPHI'LOGY. n. s. [ἀμφὶ and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity. Dict.

AMPHISBÆ'NA. n. s. [Lat. ἀμφισβαίνη.] A serpent supposed to have two heads.
That the amphisbæna, that is, a smaller kind of serpent, which moveth forward and backward, hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirmed by Nicander, and others.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and ellops drear,
And dipsas. Milton's Paradise Lost.

AMPHI'SCII. n. s. [Lat. ἀμφίσκιοι, of ἀμφὶ and σκία, a shadow.]
Those people dwelling in climates, wherein the shadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways; to the north pole, when the sun is in the southern signs, and to the south pole, when he is in the northern signs. These are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHE'ATRE. n. s. [of ἀμφιθέατρον, of ἀμφὶ and θεάομαι.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompassed with rows of seats one above another; where spectators might behold spectacles, as stage-plays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a semicircle, only exceeding a just semicircle by one fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; so that the longest diameter of the amphitheatre, was to the shortest, as one and a half to one.
Within, an amphitheatre appear'd
Rais'd in degrees; to sixty paces rear'd,
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.
Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, amid the insults and mockeries of a crouded amphitheatre, and still keeping his seat; or stretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his soul, among the exquisite suffering of such a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaspheme his Saviour. Addison.

A'MPLE. adj. [amplus, Lat.]
1. Large; wide; extended.
Heav'n descends
In universal bounty, shedding herbs,
And fruits, and flowers, on nature's ample lap. Thomson.
2. Great in bulk.
Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?——
She took 'em, and read 'em in my presence,
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheeks. Shakesp. King Lear.
3. Unlimited; without restriction.
Have what you ask, your presents I receive;
Land where, and when you please, with ample leave. Dryd.
4. Liberal; large; without parsimony.
If we speak of strict justice, God could no way have been bound to require man's labours in so large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceedeth so far the other's value. Hooker.

5. Large; splendid; without reservation.

To dispose the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within so many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Clarendon.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative; that is, not an epitome.

A'MPLENESS. n. s. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeness; splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you represent, or of the places you bear. South.

To A'MPLIATE. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall solemnly look upon it, not only to destroy ours, but to establish his own; not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and dilucidate, to add and ampliate, according to the custom of the ancients. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AMPLIA'TION. n. s. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extension.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Ayliffe.

2. Diffuseness; enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any ampliations or repetitions that may be found, whilst I labour to express myself plain and full. Holder.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.] To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Dict.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. s. [amplification, Fr. amplificatio, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall summarily, without any amplification at all, shew in what manner defects have been supplied. Davies.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagances into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unpardonable; but they suit well with the character of Alcinous. Pope.

A'MPLIFIER. n. s. [from To amplify.] One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances; it being usually taken in a good sense.

Dorillaus could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney.

To A'MPLIFY. v. a. [amplifier, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to encrease any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his chests, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was: and therefore a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon's Essays.

All concaves that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify the sound at the coming out. Bacon.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

For as the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in these blind ages, so grew up in them withal a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces as mens opinions have formed them in spiritual matters. Raleigh.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of representation.

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errours of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servitours that have laboured in this vineyard. Davies.

Thy general is my lover; I have been
The book of his good acts; whence men have read
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

I feel age advancing, and my health is insufficient to increase and amplify these remarks, to confirm and improve these rules, and to illuminate the several pages. Watts.

To A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words; to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design. Watts's Logick.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here where the subject is so fruitful, that the harvest overcomes the reaper, I am shortened by my chain. Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, so they might be men of great stature, or giants. Pope's Odyssey.

A'MPLITUDE. n. s. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance. Glanville.

2. Largeness; greatness.

Men should learn how severe a thing the true inquisition of nature is, and accustom themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their minds. Bacon.

3. Capacity.

With more than human gifts from heaven adorn'd,
Perfections absolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds. Milton.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or estates, to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms. Bacon's Essays.

5. Copiousness; abundance.

You should say every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulness of your discourse, to your great design; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers. Watts's Logick.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line subtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in astronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true east and west point thereof, and the centre of the sun or star at its rising or setting. It is eastern or ortive, when the star rises, and western or occiduous, when the star sets. The eastern or western amplitude, are also called northern or southern, as they fall in the northern or southern quarters of the horizon.

8. Magnetical amplitude, is an arch of the horizon, contained between the sun at his rising, and the east or west point of the compass; or, it is the difference of the rising or setting of the sun, from the east or west parts of the compass. Chambers.

A'MPLY. adv. [amplè, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whose well-being,
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them; but they were resolved not to be convinced: and to those, who are resolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments are equal. Atterbury.

2. At large; without reserve.

At return
Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,
The woman's seed; obscurely then foretold,
Now amplier known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord. Milton.

3. At large; copiously; with a diffusive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words; others must be cast into shadows; that is, passed over in silence, or but faintly touched. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To A'MPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.] To cut off a limb: a word used only in chirurgery.

Amongst the cruizers in private frigates from Dunkirk, it was complained, that their surgeons were too active in amputating those fractured members. Wiseman.

AMPUTA'TION. n. s. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body, with an instrument of steel. The usual method of performing it, in the instance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the skin and flesh are first to be drawn very tight upwards, and secured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another loose one is passed, for the gripe; which being twisted by means of a stick, may be straitened to any degree at pleasure. Then the patient being conveniently situated, and the operator placed to the inside of the limb, which is to be held by one assistant above, and another below the part designed for the operation, and the gripe sufficiently twisted, to prevent too large an hæmorrhage, the flesh is, with a stroke or two, to be separated from the bone with the dismembering knife. Then the periosteum being also divided from the bone with the back of the knife, saw the bone asunder, with as few strokes as possible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flesh that grows between them must likewise be separated before the use of the saw. This being done, the gripe may be slackened, to give an opportunity of searching for the large blood vessels, and securing the hæmorrhage at their mouths. After making proper applications to the stump, loosen the first ligature, and pull both the skin and the flesh, as far as conveniently may be, over the stump, to cover it; and secure them with the cross stitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the skin. Then apply pledgets, astringents, plaisters, and other necessaries. Chambers.

The Amazons, by the amputation of their right breast, had the freer use of their bow. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A'MULET. n. s. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, Lat.] An appended remedy, remedy, or preſervative: a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of ſome particular diſeaſes.

A N A

That ſpirits are corporeal, ſeems at firſt view a conceit derogative unto himſelf; yet herein he eſtabliſheth the doctrine of luſtrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

They do not certainly know the falſity of what they report; and their ignorance muſt ſerve you as an amulet againſt the guilt both of deceit and malice. Government of the Tongue.

AMURCOSITY. n. ſ. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing.

To AMU'SE. v. a. [amuſer, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without diſtracting it. To divert implies ſomething more lively, and to pleaſe, ſomething more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a ſenſe bordering on contempt.

They think they ſee viſions, and are arrived to ſome extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuſe themſelves with the fantaſtick ideas of a buſy imagination. Decay of Piety.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuſe himſelf with trifles. Walſh.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amuſed his followers with idle promiſes.

AMU'SEMENT. n. ſ. [amuſement, Fr.] That which amuſes; entertainment.

Every intereſt or pleaſure of life, even the moſt trifling amuſement, is ſuffered to poſtpone the one thing neceſſary. Rogers.

During his confinement, his amuſement was to give poiſon to dogs and cats, and ſee them expire by ſlower or quicker torments. Pope.

I was left to ſtand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleaſant amuſement to look on with ſafety, whilſt another was giving them diverſion, at the hazard of his liberty. Swift.

AMU'SER. n. ſ. [amuſeur, Fr.] He that amuſes, as with falſe promiſes. The French word is always taken in an ill ſenſe.

AMU'SIVE. adj. [from amuſe.] That which has the power of amuſing.

But amaz'd,
Beholds th' amuſive arch before him fly,
Then vaniſh quite away. Thomſon.

AMY'GDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Made of almonds.

AMY'GDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.] Relating to almonds; reſembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon. een, Dutch, eine, German.] The article indefinite, uſed before a vowel, or h mute. See A.

1. One, but with leſs emphaſis; as, there ſtands a houſe.

Since he cannot be always employed in ſtudy, reading, and converſation, there will be many an hour, beſides what his exerciſes will take up. Locke.

2. Any, or ſome; as, an elephant might ſwim in this water.

He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the leaſt at a loſs concerning any branch of it. Locke.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honeſt man's the nobleſt work of God. Pope.

3. Sometimes it ſignifies, like a, ſome particular ſtate; but this is now diſuſed.

It is certain, that odours do, in a ſmall degree, nouriſh; eſpecially the odour of wine; and we ſee men an hungred do love to ſmell hot bread. Bacon.

4. An is ſometimes, in old authours, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honeſt mind and plain, he muſt ſpeak truth;
An they will take it ſo; if not, he's plain. Shakeſpeare.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it.
——He will an' if he live to be a man.
Shakeſpeare's M. of Venice.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correſpondent, like Shakeſpeare's lion in Pyramus and Thiſbe, roars an' it were any nightingale. Addiſon.

ANA. adv. [ἄνα.] A word uſed in the preſcriptions of phyſick, importing the like quantity; as, wine and honey, ā or ana ℥ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the ſame weight prudence and innocence take,
Ana of each does the juſt mixture make. Cowley.
He'll bring an apothecary, with a chargeable long bill of anas. Dryden.

ANA. n. ſ. Books ſo called from the laſt ſyllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are looſe thoughts, or caſual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACA'MPTICK. adj. [ἀναϰάμπτω.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamptick ſound, an echo; an anacamptick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACA'MPTICKS. n. ſ. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no ſingular.

ANACATHA'RTICK. n. ſ. [See CATHARTICK.] Any medicine that works upwards. Quincy.

ANACEPHALÆO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀνϰεφαλαίωσις.] Recapitulation; or ſummary of the principal heads of a diſcourſe. Dict.

ANA'CHORETE. } n. ſ. [ſometimes viciouſly written anchorite;
ANA'CHORITE. } ἀναχωρητής.] A monk, who, with the leave of his ſuperiour, leaves the convent for a more auſtere and ſolitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth ſit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anachorite. Donne.

ANA'CHRONISM. n. ſ. [from ἀνά and χρόνος.] An errour in computing time, by which events are miſplaced with regard to each other. It ſeems properly to ſignify an errour by which an event is placed too early; but is generally uſed for any errour in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachroniſm, in making Æneas and Dido cotemporaries: for it is certain, that the hero lived almoſt two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden.

ANACLA'STICKS. n. ſ. [ἀνά and ϰλάω.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no ſingular.

ANADIPLO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀναδίπλωσις.] Redupl ication; a figure in rhetorick, in which the laſt word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the firſt of the following; as, he retained his virtues amidſt all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtue brought upon him.

ANAGOGE'TICAL. adj. [ἀναγωγή.] That which contributes or relates to ſpiritual elevation, or religious raptures; myſterious; elevated above humanity. Dict.

ANAGO'GICAL. adj. [anagogique, Fr.] Myſterious; elevated; religiouſly exalted. Dict.

ANAGO'GICALLY. adv. [from anagogical.] Myſteriouſly; with religious elevation.

A'NAGRAM. n. ſ. [ἀνά and γράμμα.] A conceit ariſing from the letters of a name tranſpoſed; as this, of W, i, l, l, i, a, m, N, o, r, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' uſual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face:
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words, what could we ſay? Donne.
Thy genius calls thee not to purchaſe fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

ANAGRA'MMATISM. n. ſ. [from anagram.] The act or practice of making anagrams.

The only quinteſſence, that hitherto the alchymy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatiſm, or metagrammatiſm, which is a diſſolution of a name truly written into his letters, as his elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial tranſpoſition, without addition, ſubſtraction, or change of any letter, into different words, making ſome perfect ſenſe appliable to the perſon named. Camden.

ANAGRA'MMATIST. n. ſ. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To ANAGRA'MMATIZE. v. n. [anagramatiſer, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALE'PTICK. adj. [ἀναλήπτιϰος.] Comforting; corroborating; a term of phyſick.

Analeptick medicines cheriſh the nerves, and renew the ſpirits and ſtrength. Quincy.

ANALO'GICAL. adj. [from analogy.]

1. Uſed by way of analogy. It ſeems properly diſtinguiſhed from analogous, as words from things; analogous ſignifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of repreſenting relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeneſs, but by analogical repreſentation. Stillingfleet's Def. of Diſc. on Rom. Idolatry.

When a word, which originally ſignifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to ſeveral other objects, not by way of reſemblance, but on the account of ſome evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; ſo a ſound or healthy pulſe, a ſound digeſtion, ſound ſleep, are ſo called, with reference to a ſound and healthy conſtitution; but if you ſpeak of ſound doctrine, or ſound ſpeech, this is by way of reſemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logick.

2. Analogous; having reſemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating ſomething analogical to either. Hales's Origin of Mankind.

ANALO'GICALLY. adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the ſimplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is ſome one univerſal principle, running through the whole ſyſtem of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures. Cheyne.

ANALO'GICALNESS. n. ſ. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical; fitneſs to be applied for the illuſtration of ſome analogy.

ANA'LOGISM. n. ſ. [ἀναλογισμός.] An argument from the cauſe to the effect.

To ANA'LOGIZE. v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy; analogy; to form ſome reſemblance between different things; to conſider ſomething with regard to its analogy with ſomewhat elſe.

We have ſyſtems of material bodies, diverſly figured and ſituated, if ſeparately conſidered; they repreſent the object of the deſire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation. Cheyne's Philoſ. Principles.

ANA'LOGOUS. adj. [ἀνα and λόγος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing ſome reſemblance or proportion; having ſomething parallel.

Exerciſe makes things eaſy, that would be otherwiſe very hard; as in labour, watchings, heats, and colds; and then there is ſomething analogous in the exerciſe of the mind, to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and froward. L'Eſtrange.

Many important conſequences may be drawn from the obſervation of the moſt common things, and analogous reaſonings from the cauſes of them. Arbuthnot.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the reſemblance is noted.

This incorporeal ſubſtance may have ſome ſort of exiſtence, analogous to corporeal extenſion: though we have no adequate conception hereof. Locke.

ANA'LOGY. n. ſ. [ἀναλογία.]

1. Reſemblance between things with regard to ſome circumſtances or effects; as, learning is ſaid to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to diſcover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a preſcript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the ſame, yet, for the moſt part, retaining the ſame analogy. Hooker.

What I here obſerve of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to thoſe communications of God's will, that are requiſite to ſalvation. South.

2. When the thing to which the analogy is ſuppoſed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is uſed.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were neceſſary in a hot diſtemper'd ſtate. Dryden.

By analogy with all other liquors and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the ſame with that of the preſent earth. Burnet.

If we make him expreſs the cuſtoms of our country, rather than of Rome, it is either when there was ſome analogy betwixt the cuſtoms, or to make him more eaſy to vulgar underſtanding. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

3. By grammarians, it is uſed to ſignify the agreement of ſeveral words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved, from hate, hated, from grieve, grieved.

ANA'LYSIS. n. ſ. [ἀνάλυσις.]

1. A ſeparation of a compound body into the ſeveral parts of which it conſiſts.

There is an account of dew falling, in ſome places, in the form of butter, or greaſe, which grows extremely fetid; ſo that the analyſis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the beſt method of finding ſuch contents of the ſoil as are within the reach of the ſun. Arbuthnot.

2. A conſideration of any thing in parts, ſo as that one particular is firſt conſidered, then another.

Analyſis conſiſts in making experiments and obſervations, and in drawing general concluſions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections againſt the concluſions, but ſuch as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths. Newton's Opticks.

2. A ſolution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its firſt elements; as, of a ſentence to the ſingle words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune to ſingle notes; of an argument, to ſimple propoſitions.

We cannot know any thing of nature, but by an analyſis of its true initial cauſes; till we know the firſt ſprings of natural motions, we are ſtill but ignorants. Glanville.

ANALY'TICAL. adj. [from analyſis.]

1. That which reſolves any thing into firſt principles; that which ſeparates any compound. See ANALYSIS.

Either may be properly maintained againſt the inaccurateneſs of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

2. That which proceeds by analyſis, or by taking the parts of a compound into diſtinct and particular conſideration.

Deſcartes hath here infinitely outdone all the philoſophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the univerſal fabrick: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheſes. Glanville.

ANALY'TICALLY. adv. [from analytical.] In ſuch a manner as ſeparates compounds into ſimples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALY'TICK. adj. [ἀναλυτικός.] The manner of reſolving compounds into the ſimple conſtituent or component parts applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logick a great critick,
Profoundly ſkill'd in analytick. Hudibras.

Analytick method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a ſpecies or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by reſolving into its firſt principles, or parts, its generick nature, and its ſpecial properties; and therefore it is called the method of reſolution. Watts's Logick.

To A'NALYZE. v. a. [ἀναλύω.] To reſolve a compound into its firſt principles. See ANALYSIS.

Chymiſtry enabling us to depurate bodies, and, in ſome meaſure, to analyze them, and take aſunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more ſimple or uncompounded, than nature alone is wont to preſent them us. Boyle.

To analyze the immorality of any action into its laſt principles; if it be inquired, why ſuch an action is to be avoided, the immediate anſwer is, becauſe it is ſin. Norris's Miſcell.

When the ſentence is diſtinguiſhed into ſubject and predicate, propoſition, argument, act, object, cauſe, effect, adjunct, oppoſite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphyſically. This laſt is what is chiefly meant in the theological ſchools, when they ſpeak of analyzing a text of ſcripture. Watts's Logick.

A'NALYZER. n. ſ. [from To analyze.] That which has the power of analyzing.

Particular reaſons incline me to doubt, whether the fire be the true and univerſal analyzer of mixt bodies. Boyle.

ANAMORPHO'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀνὰ and μορφόω.] Deformation; a perſpective projection of any thing, ſo that to the eye, at one point of view, it ſhall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular repreſentation. Sometimes it is made to appear confuſed to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirrour of a certain form.

ANA'NAS. n. ſ. The pine apple.

It has a flower conſiſting of one leaf, divided into three parts, and funnel-ſhaped; the embryos produced in the tubercles, afterwards become fruit; the ſeeds in the tubercles are ſmall, and almoſt kidney-ſhaped.

The ſpecies are, 1. Oval-ſhaped pine apple, with a whitiſh fleſh. 2. Pyramidal pine apple, with a yellow fleſh. 3. Pine apple, with ſmooth leaves. 4. Pine apple, with ſhining green leaves, and ſcarce any ſpines on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine.

The firſt ſort is moſt common in Europe, but the fruit of the ſecond is larger, better flavoured, and its juice not ſo aſtringent. The fifth ſort is the moſt rare in Europe, but eſteemed above all the reſt. Theſe plants are propagated by ſuckers; and from the crowns which grow on the top of the fruit. Mill.

Witneſs thou beſt anana, thou the pride
Of vegetable life, beyond whate'er
The poets imag'd in the golden age. Thomſ. Summer.

ANA'NAS, wild. The ſame with penguin. See PENGUIN.

ANAPHORA. n. ſ. [ἀναφορὰ.] A figure, when ſeveral clauſes of a ſentence are begun with the ſame word, or ſound; as,—Where is the wiſe? Where is the ſcribe? Where is the diſputer of this world?

ANAPLERO'TICK. adj. [ἀναπληρόω.] That which fills up any vacuity; uſed of applications which promote fleſh.

A'NARCH. n. ſ. [See ANARCHY.] An authour of confuſion.

Him thus the anarch old,
With fault'ring ſpeech, and viſage incompos'd,
Anſwer'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

ANA'RCHICAL. adj. [from anarchy.] Confuſed; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious ſtate of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world preſume to determine the nature of ſubjects belonging to the ſupreme Spirit. Cheyne's Philoſophical Principles.

A'NARCHY. n. ſ. [ἀναρχία.] Want of government; a ſtate in which every man is unaccountable; a ſtate without magiſtracy.

Where eldeſt night
And chaos, anceſtors of nature, hold
Eternal anarchy, amidſt the noiſe
Of endleſs wars, and by confuſion ſtand. Paradiſe Loſt.

Arbitrary power is but the firſt natural ſtep from anarchy, or the ſavage life; the adjuſting power and freedom being an effect and conſequence of maturer thinking. Swift.

ANASA'RCA. n. ſ. [from ἀνὰ and σαρξ.] A ſort of dropſy, where the whole ſubſtance is ſtuffed with pituitous humours. Quincy.

When the lympha ſtagnates, or is extravaſated under the ſkin, it is called an anſarca. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANASA'RCOUS. adj. [from anaſarca.] Relating to an anaſarca; partaking of the nature of an anaſarca.

A gentlewoman laboured of an aſcites, with an anaſarcous ſwelling on her belly, thighs, and legs. Wiſeman.

ANASTOMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] That which has the quality of opening the veſſels, or of removing obſtructions.

ANASTOMO'SIS. n. ſ. [from ἀνὰ and στόμα.] The inoſculation of veſſels, or the opening of one veſſel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANASTROPHE. n. f. [ἀναστροφή, a prepoſterous placing, from ἀναστρέφω.] A figure whereby words which ſhould have been ſooner ſpoken, are poſtponed.

ANATHEMA. n. f. [ἀνάθημα.]

1. A curſe pronounced by eccleſiaſtical authority; excommunication.

Her bare anathemas fall but like ſo many brutæ fulmina upon the ſchoolmen; who think themſelves ſhrewdly hurt, forſooth, by being cut off from the body, which they chooſe not to be of. South's Sermons.

2. The object of the curſe, or perſon curſed. This ſeems the original meaning, though now little uſed.

ANATHEMA'TICAL. adj. [from anathema.] That which has the properties of an anathema; that which relates to an anathema.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

To ANATHE'MATIZE. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accurſed by eccleſiaſtical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized after this manner, and, with deteſtation, branded and baniſhed out of the church. Hammond.

ANATIFE'ROUS. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks.

If there be anatiferous trees, whoſe corruption breaks forth into barnacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

ANATO'CISM. n. f. [anatociſmus, Lat. ἀνατοκισμὸς.] The accumulation of intereſt upon intereſt; the addition of the intereſt due for money lent, to the original ſum. A ſpecies of uſury generally forbidden.

ANATO'MICAL. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

When we are taught by logick to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of diviſion, it has the uſe of an anatomical knife, which diſſects an animal body, and ſeparates the veins, arteries, nerves, muſcles, membranes, &c. and ſhews us the ſeveral parts which go to the compoſition of a complete animal. Watts.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; conſidered as the object of anatomy.

There is a natural, involuntary diſtortion of the muſcles, which is the anatomical cauſe of laughter; but there is another cauſe of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

3. Anatomized; diſſected; ſeparated.

The continuation of ſolidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little different from, hardneſs. Locke.

ANATO'MICALLY. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the ſenſe of an anatomiſt; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While ſome affirmed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have conſtrued anatomically, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANA'TOMIST. n. f. [ἀνατομὸς.] He that ſtudies the ſtructure of animal bodies, by means of diſſection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to diſcover the various parts.

Anatomiſts adjudged, that if nature had been ſuffered to run her own courſe, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age. Howel.

Hence when anatomiſts diſcourſe,
How like brutes organs are to ours;
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
A bear might ſoon be made a wit;
And, that for any thing in nature,
Pigs might ſqueak love odes, dogs bark ſatire. Prior.

To ANA'TOMIZE. v. a. [ἀνατέμνω.]

1. To diſſect an animal; to divide the body into its component or conſtituent parts.

Our induſtry muſt even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold. Hooker.

2. To lay any thing open diſtinctly, and by minute parts.

I ſpeak but brotherly of him, but ſhould I anatomize him to thee as he is, I muſt bluſh and weep, and then muſt look pale and wonder. Shakeſpeare.

Then dark diſtinctions reaſon's light diſguis'd,
And into atoms truth anatomiz'd. Denham.

ANATOMY. n. f. [ἀνατομία.]

1. The art of diſſecting the body.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by ſtudying too much ſuch finer nerves and veſſels, as will for ever eſcape our obſervation. Pope.

2. The doctrine of the ſtructure of the body, learned by diſſection.

Let the muſcles be well inſerted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden.

3. The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

When a moneyed man hath divided his cheſts, he ſeemeth to himſelf richer than he was; therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in ſeveral parts. Bacon.

4. The body ſtripp'd of its integuments; a ſkeleton.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
Then with a paſſion I would ſhake the world,
And rouſe from ſleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shakeſpeare.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre perſon.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A meer anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy hollow-ey'd, ſharp-looking wretch,
A living dead man. Shakeſpeare.

A'NATRON. n. f. The ſcum which ſwims upon the molten glaſs in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common ſalt. It is likewiſe that ſalt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'NBURY. n. f. See AMBURY.

A'NCESTOR. n. f. [anceſtor, Lat. anceſtre, Fr.] One from whom a perſon deſcends, either by the father or the mother. It is diſtinguiſhed from predeceſſor; which is not, like anceſtor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch ſucceeds to his anceſtors; an elective, to his predeceſſors.

And ſhe lies buried with her anceſtors,
O, in a tomb where never ſcandal ſlept,
Save this of hers. Shakeſp.

Cham was the paternal anceſtor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whoſe ſon was Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh.

Obſcure! why pr'ythee what am I? I know
My father, grandſire, and great grandſire too:
If farther I derive my pedigree,
I can but gueſs beyond the fourth degree.
The reſt of my forgotten anceſtors,
Were ſons of earth like him, or ſons of whores.
Dryden's Perſius.

A'NCESTREL. adj. [from anceſtor.] Claimed from anceſtors; relating to anceſtors: a term of law.

Limitation in actions anceſtrel, was anciently ſo here in England. Hale.

A'NCESTRY. n. f. [from anceſtor.]

1. Lineage; a ſeries of anceſtors, or progenitors; the perſons who compoſe the lineage.

Phedon I hight, quoth he; and do advance
Mine anceſtry from famous Coradin,
Who firſt to raiſe our houſe to honour did begin. Spenſer.

A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties tranſmitted from a wiſe and virtuous anceſtry, public ſpirit, and a love of one's country, are the ſupport and ornaments of government. Addiſon.

Say from what ſcepter'd anceſtry ye claim,
Recorded eminent in deathleſs fame? Pope.

2. The honour of deſcent; birth.

Title and anceſtry render a good man more illuſtrious, but an ill one, more contemptible. Addiſon.

A'NCHENTRY. n. f. [from antient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance of proof of antiquity.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a meaſure and a cinque pace; the firſt ſuit is hot and haſty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantaſtical; the wedding mannerly modeſt, as a meaſure full of ſtate and anchentry; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faſter and faſter, till he ſinks into his grave.
Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

A'NCHOR. n. f. [ancho·a, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, compoſed of a long ſhank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is faſtened, and at the other, branching out into two arms or flooks, tending upwards, with barbs or edges on each ſide. Its uſe is to hold the ſhip, by being fixed to the ground.

He ſaid, and wept; then ſpread his ſails before
The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman ſhore:
Their anchors dropt, his crew the veſſels moor. Dryden.

2. It is uſed, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers ſtability or ſecurity.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the ſoul, both ſure and ſtedfaſt, and which entereth not into that within the veil.
Hebrews.

3. The forms of ſpeech in which it is moſt commonly uſed, are, to caſt anchor, to lye or ride at anchor,

The Turkiſh general, deceived of his expectations, and perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at ſea, withdrew his fleet, when caſting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the corn. Knolles.

Ent'ring with the tide,
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd:
Furl'd every ſail, and drawing down the maſt,
His veſſel moor'd, and made with haulſers faſt. Dryden.

Far from your capital my ſhip reſides
At Reithrus, and ſecure at anchor rides. Pope.

To A'NCHOR. v. n. [from anchor.]

1. To caſt anchor; to lie at anchor.

The fiſhermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark
Diminiſh'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almoſt too ſmall for ſight. Shakeſpeare.

Near Calais the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-forces, which came not. Bacon.

Or the ſtrait courſe to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimos' ſhaggy brow. Pope.

2. To ſtop at; to reſt on.

My intention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Iſabel. Shakeſpeare.

My tongue ſhould to my ears not name my boys,
'Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes. Shakeſp.

A'NCHOR. n. ſ. Shakeſpeare ſeems to have uſed this word for anchoret, or an abſtemious recluſe perſon.

To deſperation turn my truſt and hope!
An anchor's cheer in priſon be my ſcope! Shakeſp.

A'NCHOR-HOLD. n. ſ. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or faſtneſs of the anchor; and, figuratively, ſecurity.

The old Engliſh could expreſs moſt aply all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any; as for example: the holy ſervice of God, which the Latins called religion, becauſe it knitted the minds of men together, and moſt people of Europe have borrowed the ſame from them, they called moſt ſignificantly ean-faſtneſs, as the one and only aſſurance and faſt anchor-hold of our ſouls health. Camden.

A'NCHOR-SMITH. n. ſ. [from anchor and ſmith.] The maker or forger of anchors.

Smithing comprehends all trades which uſe either forge or file, from the anchor-ſmith to the watchmaker; they all working by the ſame rules, though not with equal exactneſs, and all uſing the ſame tools; though of ſeveral ſizes.
Moxon's Mechanical Exerciſes.

A'NCHORAGE. n. ſ. [from anchor.]

1. The hold of the anchor.

Let me reſolve whether there be indeed ſuch efficacy in nurture and firſt production; for if that ſuppoſal ſhould fail us, all our anchorage were looſe, and we ſhould but wander in a wild ſea. Wotton.

2. The ſet of anchors belonging to a ſhip.

Lo as the bark that hath diſcharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at firſt ſhe weigh'd her anchorage;
Cometh Andronicus. Shakeſpeare.

3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.

A'NCHORED. participial adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.

Like a well twiſted cable, holding faſt
The anchor'd veſſel in the loudeſt blaſt. Waller.

A'NCHORET. } n. ſ. [contracted from anachoret, ἀναχωρητης.]
A'NCHORITE. } A recluſe; a hermit; one that retires to the more ſevere duties of religion.

His poetry indeed he took along with him; but he made that an anchorite as well as himſelf. Sprat.

You deſcribe ſo well your hermitical ſtate of life, that none of the antient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine ſpring, or any of the accommodations that befit a ſolitary life. Pope.

ANCHO'VY. n. ſ. [from anchova, Span. or anchioe, Ital. of the ſame ſignification.] A little ſea fiſh, much uſed by way of ſauce, or ſeaſoning. Scaliger deſcribes the anchovy as of the herring kind, about the length of a finger, having a pointed ſnout, a wide mouth, no teeth, but gums as rough as a ſaw. Others make it a ſort of ſardine, or pilchard; but others, with better reaſon, hold it a peculiar ſpecies, very different from either. It is caught in the months of May, June, and July, on the coaſts of Catalonia, Provence, &c. when it conſtantly repairs up the Straits of Gibraltar into the Mediterranean. The fiſhing is chiefly in the night time; when a light being put on the ſtern of their little fiſhing veſſels, the anchovies flock round, and are caught in nets. When the fiſhery is over, they cut off the heads, take out the galls and guts, then lay them in barrels, and ſalt them. Savary.

We invent new ſauces and pickles, which reſemble the animal ferment in taſte and virtue, as the ſalſo-acid gravies of meat; the ſalt pickles of fiſh, anchovies, oyſters.
Floyer on the Humours.

A'NCIENT. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]

1. Old; that happened long ſince; of old time; not modern. Ancient and old are diſtinguiſh'd; old relates to the duration of the thing itſelf, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dreſs, a habit uſed in former times. But this is not always obſerved; for we mention old cuſtoms; but though old be ſometimes oppoſed to modern, ancient is ſeldom oppoſed to new.

Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conqueror's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as allothers belonging to common perſons, he cauſed to be written in a book, after a ſurvey made of them, now remaining in the exchequer, and called Doomſday book; and ſuch as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demeſnes. Cowell.

2. Old; that has been of long duration.

With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of days underſtanding. Job.

Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the moſt ancient, becauſe he never had any beginning. Raleigh.

Induſtry
Gave the tall ancient foreſt to his axe. Thompſon.

3. Paſt; former.

I ſee thy fury: If I longer ſtay,
We ſhall begin our ancient bickerings. Shakeſpeare.

A'NCIENT. n. ſ. [from ancient, adj.] Thoſe that lived in old time were called ancients, oppoſed to the moderns.

And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings diſpenſe with laws themſelves have made;
Moderns, beware! or if you muſt offend
Againſt the precept, ne'er tranſgreſs its end. Pope.

A'NCIENT n. ſ. The flag or ſtreamer of a ſhip, and, formerly, of a regiment.

A'NCIENT. n. ſ. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Piſtol; whence in preſent uſe, enſign.

A'NCIENTLY. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.

Not far from this is the great city of Trebiſond, which, with the territory about it, anciently pertained unto this crown; now unjuſtly poſſeſſed; and as unjuſtly abuſed, by thoſe who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it. Sidney.

The colewort is not an enemy, though they were anciently received, to the vine only; but it is an enemy to any other plant, becauſe it draweth ſtrongly the fatteſt juice of the earth. Bacon.

A'NCIENTNESS. n. ſ. [from ancient.] Antiquity; exiſtence from old times.

The Feſcenine and Saturnian were the ſame; they were called Saturnian from their ancientneſs, when Saturn reigned in Italy. Dryden.

A'NCIENTRY. n. ſ. [from ancient.] The honour of antient lineage; the dignity of birth.

Of all nations under heaven, the Spaniard is the moſt mingled, and moſt uncertain. Wherefore, moſt fooliſhly do the Iriſh think to ennoble themſelves, by wreſting their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himſelf from any in certain. Spenſer.

There is nothing in the between, but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, ſtealing, fighting.
Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

ANCLE. See ANKLE.

A'NCONY. n. ſ. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two ſquare rough knobs, one at each end. Chambers.

AND. conjunction.

1. The particle by which ſentences or terms are joined, which it is not eaſy to explain by any ſynonimous word.

Sure his honeſty
Got him ſmall gains, but ſhameleſs flattery
And filthy beverage, and unſeemly thift,
And borrow baſe, and ſome good lady's gift. Spenſer.

What ſhall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own? Cowley.

The Danes unconquer'd offſpring march behind;
And Morini, the laſt of human kind. Dryden.

It ſhall ever be my ſtudy to make diſcoveries of this nature in human life, and to ſettle the proper diſtinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and thoſe falſe colours and reſemblances of them that ſhine alike in the eyes of the vulgar. Addiſon.

2. And ſometimes ſignifies though, and ſeems a contraction of and if.

It is the nature of extreme ſelf-lovers, as they will ſet an houſe on fire, and it were but to roaſt their eggs. Bacon.

3. In and if, the and is redundant, and is omitted by all later writers.

I pray thee, Launce, an' if thou ſeeſt my boy,
Bid him make haſte. Shakeſpeare.

A'NDIRON. n. ſ. [ſuppoſed by Skinner to be corrupted from hand-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may ſupply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the ſpit turns; or irons in which wood is laid to burn.

If you ſtrike an entire body, as an andiron of braſs, at the top, it maketh a more treble ſound, and at the bottom a baſer. Bacon.

ANDRO'GYNAL. adv. [rom ἀνὴρ and γύνη.] Having two ſexes; hermaphroditical.

ANDRO'GINALLY. adv. [from androgynal.] In the form of hermaphrodites; with two ſexes.

The examples hereof have undergone no real or new tranſexion, but were androgynally born, and under ſome kind of hermaphrodites. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANDRO'-

ANDRO'GYNOUS. adj. The ſame with androgynal.

ANDROGYNUS. n. ſ. [Lat. See ANDROGYNAL.] An hermaphrodite; one that is of both ſexes.

ANDRO'TOMY. n. ſ. [from ἀνὴρ and τέμνω.] The practice of cutting human bodies. Dict.

A'NECDOTE. n. ſ. [ἀνέκδοτον.] Something yet unpubliſhed; ſecret hiſtory.

Some modern anecdotes aver,
He nodded in his elbow-chair. Prior.

ANEMO'GRAPHY. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and γράφω.] The deſcription of the winds.

ANEMO'METER n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and μέτρον.] An inſtrument contrived to meaſure the ſtrength or velocity of the wind.

ANE'MONE. n. ſ. [ἀνεμώνη.] The wind flower.

Upon the top of its ſingle ſtalk, ſurrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many ſtamina in the center; the ſeeds are collected into an oblong head, and ſurrounded with a copious down. The principal colours in anemonies, are white, red, blue, and purple ſometimes curiouſly intermixed. Miller.

Wind flowers are diſtinguiſhed into thoſe with broad and hard leaves, and thoſe with narrow and ſoft ones; of both which ſorts there are great variety of colours, ſome being double, and others ſingle flowered. The broad leaved anemony roots ſhould be planted about the end of September, and the ſmall eminences which put forth the leaves ſet uppermoſt. Theſe with ſmall leaves muſt be ſet after the ſame manner, but not put into the ground till the end of October.
Mortimer's Art of Huſbandry.

From the ſoft wing of vernal breezes ſhed,
Anemonies, auriculas, enrich'd
With ſhining meal o'er all their velvet leaves. Thomſon.

A'NEMOSCOPE. n. ſ. [ἄνεμος and σκόπος.] A machine invented to foretel the changes of the wind. It has been obſerved, that hygroſcopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoſcopes, ſeldom failing, by the turning the index about to foretel the ſhifting of the wind. Chambers.

ANE'NT. prep. A word uſed in the Scotch dialect.

1. Concerning; about; as, he ſaid nothing anent this particular.
2. Over againſt; oppoſite to; as, he lives anent the market-houſe.

AWNS. }

A'NEURISM. n. ſ. [ἀνευρύνω.] A diſeaſe of the arteries, in which, either by a preternatural weakneſs of any part of them, they become exceſſively dilated, or by a wound through their coats, the blood is extravaſated amongſt the adjacent cavities.
Sharp's Surgery.

In the orifice, there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneuriſm. Wiſeman's Surgery.

ANE'W. adv. [from a and new.]

1. Over again; another time; repeatedly. This is the moſt common uſe.

Nor, if at miſchief taken, on the ground
Be ſlain, but priſ'ners to the pillar bound,
At either barrier plac'd; nor, captives made,
Be freed, or, arm'd anew, the fight invade. Dryden.

That as in birth, in beauty you excel,
The muſe might dictate, and the poet tell:
Your art no other art can ſpeak; and you
To ſhow how well you play, muſt play anew. Prior.

The miſeries of the civil war did, for many years, deter the inhabitants of our iſland from the thoughts of engaging anew in ſuch deſperate undertakings. Addiſon.

2. Newly; in a new manner.

He who begins late, is obliged to form anew the whole diſpoſition of his ſoul, to acquire new habits of life, to practiſe duties to which he is utterly a ſtranger. Rogers's Sermons.

ANFRA'CTUOSE. } adj. [from anfractus, Lat.] Winding; mazy;
ANFRA'CTUOUS. } full of turnings and winding paſſages.

Behind the drum are ſeveral vaults and anfractuoſe cavities in the ear-bone, ſo to intend the leaſt ſound imaginable, that the ſenſe might be affected with it; as we ſee in ſubterraneous caves and vaults, how the ſound is redoubled, Ray.

ANFRA'CTUOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from anfractuous.] Fulneſs of windings and turnings.

ANFRA'CTURE. n. ſ. [from anfractus, Lat.] A turning; a mazy winding and turning. Dict.

A'NGEL. n. ſ. [Ἄγγελος; angelus, Lat.]

1. Originallly a meſſenger. A ſpirit employed by God in the adminiſtration of human affairs.

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His meſſage ere he come. Shakeſpeare.

Had we ſuch a knowledge of the conſtitution of man, as it is poſſible angels have, and it is certain his Maker has; we ſhould have a quite other idea of his eſſence. Locke.

See HIERARCHY.

2. Angel is ſometimes uſed in a bad ſenſe; as, angels of darkneſs.

And they had a king over them, which was the angel of the bottomleſs pit. Revelat. ix. 11.

3. Angel, in ſcripture, ſometimes means man of God, prophet.
4. Angel is uſed, in the ſtile of love, for a beautiful perſon.

Heav'n bleſs thee!
Thou haſt the ſweeteſt face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a ſoul, ſhe is an angel. Shakeſpeare.

5. A piece of money anciently coined and impreſſed with an angel, in memory of an obſervation of Pope Gregory, that the pagan Angli, or Engliſh, were ſo beautiful, that, if they were chriſtians, they would be Angeli, or angels. The coin was rated at ten ſhillings.

Take an empty baſon, put an angel of gold, or what you will, into it; then go ſo far from the baſon, till you cannot ſee the angel, becauſe it is not in a right line; then fill the baſon with water, and you will ſee it out of its place, becauſe of the reflection. Bacon.

Couſin, away for England; haſte before,
And, ere our coming, ſee thou ſhake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; their impriſon'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakeſpeare.

A'NGEL. adj. Reſembling angels; angelical.

I have mark'd
A thouſand bluſhing apparitions
To ſtart into her face; a thouſand innocent ſhames
In angel whiteneſs bear away thoſe bluſhes.
Shakeſpeare's Much ado about Nothing.

Or virgins viſited by angel powers,
With golden crowns and wreathes of heav'nly flow'rs.
Pope's Raſe of the Locke.

A'NGEL-LIKE. adj. [from angel and like.] Reſembling an angel.

In heav'n itſelf thou ſure wer't dreſt
With that angel like diſguiſe. Waller.

A'NGEL-SHOT. n. ſ. [from angel and ſhot.] Chain ſhot, being a cannon bullet cut in two, and the halves being joined together by a chain. Dict.

ANGE'LICA. n. ſ. [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] The name of a plant.

It has winged leaves divided into large ſegments; its ſtalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the ſtalks, and conſiſt of five leaves, ſucceeded by two large channelled ſeeds.

The ſpecies are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica. 4. Mountain perennial angelica, with columbine leaves.

The common angelica delights to grow in a very moiſt ſoil, and its ſeeds ſhould be ſown ſoon after it is ripe. This plant is uſed in medicine, as are its ſeeds; and the confectioners make a ſweetmeat with its tender ſtalks, cut in May. The ſecond ſort grows wild; and the two laſt ſorts may be propagated like the firſt. Miller.

ANGE'LICA. (Berry-bearing) [Aralia, Lat.]

The flower conſiſts of many leaves, expanding in form of a roſe, which are naked, growing on the top of the ovary: theſe flowers are ſucceeded by globular fruits, which are ſoft and ſucculent, and full of oblong ſeeds.

The ſpecies are, 1. Canada berry-bearing angelica. 2. Berry-bearing angelica, with a naked ſtalk and creeping root. 3. Angelica tree.

The two firſt are propagated either by ſowing their ſeeds, or by parting of their roots. The third ſort grows with us to the height of ſeven or eight feet, and is only propagated by ſeeds, which are frequently brought from America. Miller.

ANGE'LICAL. adj. [angelicus, Lat.]

1. Reſembling angels.

It diſcovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and carrieth up, with an angelical ſwiftneſs, our eyes, that our mind, being informed of his viſible marvels, may continually travel upward. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels.

Others more mild
Retreated in a ſilent valley, ſing
With notes angelical to many a harp,
Their own heroick deeds, and hapleſs fall
By doom of battle. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

3. Belonging to angels.

It may be encouragement to conſider the pleaſure of ſpeculations, which do raviſh and ſublime the thoughts with more clear angelical contentments. Wilkins.

ANGE'LICALNESS. n. ſ. [from angelical.] The quality of being angelical; reſemblance of angels; excellence more than human.

ANGE'LICK. adv. [angelicus, Lat.] Partaking of the nature of angel; angelical; above human.

Here, happy creature, fair angelick Eve,
Partake thou alſo. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

My fancy form'd thee of angelick kind,
Some emanation of th' all beauteous mind. Pope.

A'NGELOT. n. ſ. A muſical inſtrument, ſomewhat reſembling a lute. Dict.

A'NGER. n. ſ. [a word of no certain etymology, but, with moſt probability, derive by Skinner from ange, Sax. vexed; which, however, ſeems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Anger is uneaſineſs or diſcompoſure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a preſent purpoſe of revenge. Locke.

Anger is like
A full hot horſe, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakeſpeare.

Was the Lord diſpleaſed againſt the rivers? was thine anger againſt the rivers? was thy wrath againſt the ſea, that thou didſt ride upon thine horſes and thy chariots of ſalvation? Hab. iii. 8.

Anger is, according to ſome, a tranſient hatred, or at leaſt very like it. South.

2. Pain, or ſmart, of a ſore or ſwelling. In this ſenſe it ſeems plainly deducible from angor.

I made the experiment, ſetting the moxa where the firſt violence of my pain began, and where the greateſt anger and ſoreneſs ſtill continued, notwithſtanding the ſwelling of my foot. Temple.

To A'NGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make angry; to provoke; to enrage.

Who would anger the meaneſt artiſan, which carrieth a good mind? Hooker.

Sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant. Shakeſp.

There were ſome late taxes and impoſitions introduced, which rather angered than grieved the people. Clarendon.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
To ſee a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

A'NGERLY. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner; like one offended.

Why, how now, Hecat, you look angerly. Shakeſpeare.

Such jeſter's diſhoneſt indiſcretion, is rather charitably to be pitied, than their exception either angerly to be grieved at, or ſeriouſly to be confuted. Carew.

ANGIO'GRAPHY. n. ſ. [from ἀγγεῖον and γράφω.] A deſcription of veſſels in the human body; nerves, veins, arteries, and lymphaticks.

ANGIO'LOGY. n. ſ. [from ἀγγεῖον and λόγος.] A treatiſe or diſcourſe of the veſſels of a human body.

ANGIOMONOSPE'RMOUS. adj. [from ἀγγεῖον, μονος, and σπέρμα.] Such plants as have but one ſingle ſeed in the ſeed-pod.

ANGIO'TOMY. n. ſ. [from ἀγγεῖον and τέμνω, to cut.] A cutting open of the veſſels, as in the opening of a vein or artery.

A'NGLE. n. ſ. [angle, Fr. angulus, Lat.] The ſpace intercepted between two lines interſecting each other.

Angle of the centre of a circle, is an angle whoſe vertex, or angular point, is at the centre of a circle, and whoſe legs are two ſemidiameters of that circle. Stone's Dict.

A'NGLE. n. ſ. [angel, Germ. and Dutch.] An inſtrument to take fiſh, conſiſting of a rod, a line, and a hook.

She alſo had an angle in her hand; but the taker was ſo taken, that ſhe had forgotten taking. Sidney.

Give me mine angle, we'll to the river there,
My muſick playing far off, I will betray
Tawny finn'd fiſh; my bended hook ſhall pierce
Their ſlimy jaws. Shakeſpeare.

The patient fiſher takes his ſilent ſtand,
Intent, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the ſcaly breed,
And eyes the dancing cork, and bending reed. Pope.

To A'NGLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fiſh with a rod and hook.

The ladies angling in the cryſtal lake,
Feaſt on the waters with the prey they take. Waller.

2. To try to gain by ſome inſinuating artifices, as fiſhes are caught by a bait.

By this face,
This ſeeming brow of juſtice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for. Shakeſpeare.

The pleaſant'ſt angling is to ſee the fiſh
Cut with her golden oars the ſilver ſtream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait;
So angle we for Beatrice. Shakeſpeare.

A'NGLE-ROD. n. ſ. [angel roede, Dutch.] The ſtick to which the line and hook are hung.

It differeth much in greatneſs; the ſmalleſt being fit for thatching of houſes; the ſecond bigneſs is uſed for angle-rods, and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

He makes a May-fly to a miracle, and furniſhes the whole country with angle-rods. Spectator.

A'NGLER. n. ſ. [from angle.] He that fiſhes with an angle.

He, like a patient angler, ere he ſtrook,
Would let them play a while upon the hook. Dryden.

Neither do birds alone, but many ſorts of fiſhes, feed upon inſects; as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

A'NGLICISM. n. ſ. [from Anglus, Lat.] A form of ſpeech peculiar to the Engliſh language; an Engliſh idiom.

A'NGOBER. n. ſ. A kind of pear. See PEAR.

A'NGRILY. adv. [from angry.] In an angry manner; furiouſly; peeviſhly.

I will ſit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not ſtir, nor wince, nor ſpeak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angrily. Shakeſpeare.

A'NGRY. adj. [from anger.]

1. Touched with anger; provoked.

O let not the Lord be angry, and I will ſpeak: peradventure there ſhall be thirty found there. Geneſis.

2. It ſeems properly to require, when the object of anger is mentioned, the particle at before a thing, and with before a perſon; but this is not always obſerved.

Your Coriolanus is not much miſſed, but with his friends; the commonwealth doth ſtand, and ſo would do, were he angry at it. Shakeſpeare.

Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourſelves, that ye ſold me hither: for God did ſend me before you to preſerve life. Geneſis.

I think it a vaſt pleaſure, that whenever two people of merit regard one another, ſo many ſcoundrels envy and are angry at them. Swift.

3. Having the appearance of anger; having the effect of anger.

The north wind driveth away rain, ſo doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue. Prov.

4. In chirurgery, painful; inflamed; ſmarting.

This ſerum, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry; and, wanting its due regreſs into the maſs, firſt gathers into a hard ſwelling, and, in a few days, ripens into matter, and ſo diſchargeth. Wiſeman.

A'NGUISH. n. ſ. [angoiſſe, Fr. angor, Lat.] Exceſſive pain either of mind or body; applied to the mind, it means the pain of ſorrow, and is ſeldom uſed to ſignify other paſſions.

Not all ſo cheerful ſeemed ſhe of ſight,
As was her ſiſter; whether dread did dwell,
Or anguiſh in her heart, is hard to tell. Fairy Queen.

Virtue's but anguiſh, when 'tis ſeveral,
By occaſion wak'd, and circumſtantial;
True virtue's ſoul, always in all deeds all. Donne.

They had proſecutors, whoſe invention was as great as their cruelty. Wit and malice conſpired to find out ſuch deaths, and thoſe of ſuch incredible anguiſh, that only the manner of dying was the puniſhment, death itſelf the deliverance. South.

Perpetual anguiſh fills his anxious breaſt,
Not ſtopt by buſineſs, nor compos'd by reſt;
No muſick cheers him, nor no feaſt can pleaſe. Dryden.

A'NGUISHED. adj. [from anguiſh.] Seized with anguiſh; tortured; exceſſively pained.

Feel no touch
Of conſcience, but of fame, and be
Anguiſh'd, not that 'twas ſin, but that 'twas ſhe. Donne.

A'NGULAR. adj. [from angle.] Having angles or corners; cornered.

As for the figure of cryſtal, it is for the moſt part hexagonal, or ſix cornered, being built upon a confuſed matter, from whence, as it were from a root, angular figures ariſe, even as in the amethyſt and baſaltes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The diſtance of the edges of the knives from one another, at the diſtance of four inches from the angular point, where the edges of the knives meet, was the eight part of an inch. Newton's Opticks.

ANGULA'RITY. n. ſ. [from angular.] The quality of being angular, or having corners.

ANGULA'RLY. adv. [from angular.] With angles or corners.

Another part of the ſame ſolution afforded us an ice angularly figured. Boyle.

A'NGULARNESS. n. ſ. [from angular.] The quality of being angular.

A'NGULATED. adj. [from angle.] Formed with angles or corners.

Topazes, amethyſts, or emeralds, which grow in the fiſſures, are ordinarily cryſtallized, or ſhot into angulated figures; whereas, in the ſtrata, they are found in rude lumps, like yellow, purple, and green pebbles. Woodward.

ANGULO'SITY. n. ſ. [from angulous.] Angularity; cornered form. Dict.

A'NGULOUS. adj. [from angle.] Hooked; angular.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of ſolid bodies are held together by hooks, and angulous involutions; ſince the coherence of the parts of theſe will be of as difficult a conception. Glanville.

ANGU'ST. adj. [anguſtus, Lat.] Narrow; ſtrait. Dict.

ANGUSTA'TION. n. ſ. [from anguſtus.] The act of making narrow; ſtraitening; the ſtate of being narrowed.

The cauſe may be referred either to the grumouſneſs of the blood, or to obſtruction of the vein ſomewhere in its paſſage, by ſome anguſtation upon it by part of the tumour. Wiſeman.

ANHELA'TION. n. ſ. [anhelo, Lat.] The act of panting; the ſtate of being out of breath.

ANHELO'SE. adj. [anhelus, Lat.] Out of breath; panting; labouring of being out of breath. Dict.

ANIE'NTED. adj. [anneantir, Fr.] Fruſtrated; brought to nothing.

ANI'GHTS. adv. [from a for at, and night.] In the night time.

Sir Toby, you muſt come in earlier anights; your niece, my lady, takes great exceptions at your ill hours. Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

A'NIL. n. ſ. The ſhrub from whoſe leaves and ſtalks indigo is prepared.

A N I

ANI'LENESS. } n. f. [anilitas, Lat.] The ſtate of being an old
ANI'LITY. } woman; the old age of women

A'NIMABLE. adj. [from animate.] That which may be put into life, or receive animation. Dict.

ANIMADVE'RSION. n. f. [animadverſio, Lat.]

1. Reproof; ſevere cenſure; blame.

He diſmiſſed their commiſſioners with ſevere and ſharp animadverſions. Clarendon.

2. Puniſhment. When the object of animadverſion is mentioned, it has the particle on or upon before it.

When a bill is debating in parliament, it is uſual to have the controverſy handled by pamphlets on both ſides; without the leaſt animadverſions upon the authours. Swift.

3. In law.

An eccleſiaſtical cenſure, and an eccleſiaſtical animadverſion, are different things; for a cenſure has a relation to a ſpiritual puniſhment, but an animadverſion has only a reſpect to a temporal one; as, degradation, and the delivering the perſon over to the ſecular court. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ANIMADVE'RSIVE. adj. [from animadvert.] That has the power of judging.

The repreſentation of objects to the ſoul, the only animadverſive principle, are conveyed by motions made on the immediate organs of ſenſe. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

ANIMADVE'RSIVENESS. n. f. [from animadverſive.] The power of animadverting, or making judgment. Dict.

To ANIMADVE'RT. v. n. [animadverto, Lat.]

1. To paſs cenſures upon.

I ſhould not animadvert on him, who was otherwiſe a painful obſerver of the decorum of the ſtage, if he had not uſed extreme ſeverity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakeſpeare for that fault. Dryden on Dramatick Poeſy.

2. To inflict puniſhments. In both ſenſes with the particle upon.

If the Author of the univerſe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do it upon their entrance into a higher ſtate of being? Grew's Coſmolog. Sacra.

ANIMADVE'RTER. n. f. [from animadvert.] He that paſſes cenſures, or inflicts puniſhments.

God is a ſtrict obſerver of, and a ſevere animadverter upon, ſuch as preſume to partake of thoſe myſteries, without ſuch a preparation. South.

ANIMAL. n. f. [animal, Lat.]

1. A living creature corporeal, diſtinct, on the one ſide, from pure ſpirit; on the other, from mere matter.

Animals are ſuch beings, which, beſides the power of growing, and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endowed alſo with ſenſation and ſpontaneous motion. Mr. Ray gives two ſchemes of tables of them.

Animals are either
- Sanguineous, that is, ſuch as have blood, which breathe either by
  - Lungs, having either
    - Two ventricles in their heart, and thoſe either
      - Viviparous,
        - Aquatick, as the whale kind;
        - Terreſtrial, as quadrupeds;
      - Oviparous, as birds.
    - But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs, tortoiſes, and ſerpents.
  - Gills, as all ſanguineous fiſhes, except the whale kind.
- Exſanguineous, or without blood, which may be divided into
  - Greater, and thoſe either,
    - Naked,
      - Terreſtrial, as naked ſnails;
      - Aquatick, as the poulp, cuttle-fiſh, &c.
    - Covered with a tegument, either
      - Cruſtaceous, as lobſters and crab-fiſh;
      - Teſtaceous, either
        - Univalve, as limpets;
        - Bivalve, as oyſters, muſcles, cockles;
        - Turbinate, as periwinkles, ſnails, &c.
  - Leſſer, as inſects of all ſorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, are either
- Hooſed, which are either
  - Whole-footed or hooſed, as the horſe and aſs;
  - Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided into
    - Two principal parts, called biſulca, either
      - Such as chew not the cud, as ſwine;
      - Ruminant, or ſuch as chew the cud; divided into
        - Such as have perpetual and hollow horns.
          - Beef-kind,
          - Sheep-kind,
          - Goat-kind.
        - Such as have ſolid, branched and diciduous horns, as the deer-kind.
    - Four parts, or quadriſulca, as the rhinoceros and hippopotamus.
- Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into
  - Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the camel kind;
  - Many toes or claws; either
    - Undivided, as the elephant;
    - Divided, which have either
      - Broad nails, and an human ſhape, as apes;
      - Narrower, and more pointed nails, which, in reſpect of their teeth, are divided into ſuch as have

- Many fore-teeth, or cutters in each jaw;
- The greater, which have
  - A ſhorter ſnout and rounder head, as the cat-kind;
  - A longer ſnout and head, as the dog-kind.
- The leſſer, the vermin or weazel-kind.
- Only two large and remarkable fore-teeth, all which are phytivorous, and are called the hare-kind Ray.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the ſame ſpecific gravity with the animal juices, and as conſiſting of the ſame parts with animal ſubſtances, ſpirit, water, ſalt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the ſap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot on Aiments.

Some of the animated ſubſtances have various organical or inſtrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a ſpring of life within themſelves, as beaſts, birds, fiſhes and inſects; theſe are called animals. Other animated ſubſtances are called vegetables, which have within themſelves the principles of another ſort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, ſuch as we ſee in plants, herbs, and trees. Watts's Logick.

2. By way of contempt, we ſay of a ſtupid man, that he is a ſtupid animal.

A'NIMAL. adj. [animalis, Lat.]

1. That which belongs or relates to animals.

There are other things in the world of ſpirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confuſed; ſuch as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converſe with each other. Watts's Logick.

2. Animal functions, diſtinguiſhed from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind, as, the will, memory, and imagination.

3. Animal life is oppoſed, on one ſide, to intellectual, and, on the other, to vegetable.

4. Animal is uſed in oppoſition to ſpiritual or rational; as, the animal nature.

ANIMA'LCULE. n. f. [animalculum, Lat.] A ſmall animal; particularly thoſe which are in their firſt and ſmalleſt ſtate.

We are to know, that they all come of the ſeeds of animalcules of their own kind, that were before laid there. Ray.

ANIMA'LITY. n. f. [from animal.] The ſtate of animal exiſtence.

The word animal there only ſignifies human animality. In the minor propoſition, the word animal, for the ſame reaſon, ſignifies the animality of a gooſe: thereby it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the concluſion upon. Watts.

To A'NIMATE. v. a. [animo, Lat.]

1. To quicken; to make alive; to give life to: as, the ſoul animates the body; man muſt have been animated by a higher power.

2. To give powers to; to heighten the powers or effect of any thing.

> But none, ah! none can animate the lyre,
> And the mute ſtrings with vocal ſouls inſpire;
> Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
> Or chaſte Diana bathing in the ſtream;
> None can record their heav'nly praiſe ſo well
> As Helen, in whoſe eyes ten thouſand Cupids dwell. Dryden.

3. To encourage; to incite.

The more to animate the people, he ſtood on high, from whence he might be beſt heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Knolles's Hiſtory of the Turks.

A'NIMATE. adj. [from To animate.] Alive; poſſeſſing animal life.

All bodies have ſpirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main differences between animate and inanimate, are two: the firſt is, that the ſpirits of things animate are all contained within themſelves, and are branched in veins and ſecret canals, as blood is; and, in living creatures, the ſpirits have not only branches, but certain cells or ſeats, where the principal ſpirits do reſide, and whereunto the reſt do reſort; but the ſpirits in things inanimate are ſhut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervious one to another, as air is in ſnow. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

> Nobler birth
> Of creatures animate with gradual life,
> Of growth, ſenſe, reaſon, all ſumm'd up in man.
> Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

There are ſeveral topicks there uſed againſt the atheiſm and idolatry of the heathens; ſuch as the viſible marks of divine wiſdom and goodneſs in the works of the creation, the vital union of ſouls with matter, and the admirable ſtructure of animate bodies, and the like. Bentley's Sermons.

A'NIMATED. participial adj. [from animate.] Lively; vigorous.

> Warriours ſhe fires with animated ſounds;
> Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.

A'NIMATENESS. n. f. [from animate.] The ſtate of being animated. Dict.

ANIMA'TION. n. f. [from animate.]

1. The act of animating or enlivening.

Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the third day's work. They are the firſt producat, which is the word of animation. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

2. The ſtate of being enlivened.

A'NIMATIVE. adj. [from animate.] That which has the power of giving life, or animating.

ANIMA'TOR. n. ſ. [from animate.] That which gives life; that which implants a principle of life.

Thoſe bodies being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impreſſions of their motor, and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themſelves to ſituations, wherein they beſt unite to their animator. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANIMO'SE. adj. [animoſus, Lat.] Full of ſpirit; hot; vehement. Dict.

ANIMO'SENESS. n. ſ. [from animoſe.] Spirit; heat; vehemence of temper. Dict.

ANIMO'SITY. n. ſ. [animoſitas, Lat.] Vehemence of htared; paſſionate malignity. It implies rather the diſpoſition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itſelf.

They were ſure to bring paſſion, animoſity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence ſoever they had from others. Clarendon.

If there is not ſome method found out for allaying theſe heats and animoſities among the fair ſex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Addiſon's Freeholder.

No religious ſect ever carried their averſions for each other to greater heights than our ſtate parties have done; who, the more to inflame their paſſions, have mixed religious and civil animoſities together; borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Swift on the Sentiments of a Church of England-man.

A'NISE. n. ſ. [aniſum, Lat.] A ſpecies of apium or parſley, with large ſweet ſcented ſeeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for uſe, becauſe the ſeeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Miller.

The ſeed of this plant has a ſweetiſh taſte, intermixed with ſomething pungent and bitter, is reputed an aromatick, and preſcribed not barely as a carminative againſt wind, but alſo as a pectoral, ſtomachick, and digeſtive. Chambers.

Ye pay the tithe of mint, and aniſe, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Matt. xxv. 25.

A'NKER. n. ſ. [ancker, Dut.] A liquid meaſure chiefly uſed at Amſterdam. It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two ſtekans: each ſtekan conſiſts of ſixteen mengles: the mengle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Chambers.

A'NKLE. n. ſ. [ancleop, Sax. anckel, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his ankles was much ſwelled and ulcerated on the inſide, in ſeveral places. Wiſeman.

My ſimple ſyſtem ſhall ſuppoſe,
That Alma enters at the toes;
That then ſhe mounts by juſt degrees
Up to the ankles, legs, and knees. Prior.

A'NKLE-BONE. n. ſ. [from ankle and bone.] The bone of the ankle.

The ſhin-bone, from the knee to the inſtep, is made by ſhadowing one half of the leg with a ſingle ſhadow, the ankle-bone will ſhew itſelf by a ſhadow given underneath, as the knee. Peacham on Drawing.

A'NNALIST. n. ſ. [from annals.] A writer of annals.

I wonder my author ſhould be offended, eſpecially ſince their own annaliſt has given the ſame title to that of Syrmium. Atterb.

A'NNALS. n. ſ. without ſingular number. [annales, Lat.] Hiſtories digeſted in the exact order of time; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
O nymph! the tedious annals of our fate!
Through ſuch a train of woes if I ſhould run,
The day wou'd ſooner than the tale be done! Dryd. Virg.

We are aſſured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumſtances of diſtreſs, will not act and argue thus; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rogers's Sermons.

A'NNATS. n. ſ. without ſingular. [annates, Lat.]

1. Firſt fruits; becauſe the rate of firſt fruits paid of ſpiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Cowell.
2. Maſſes ſaid in the Romiſh church for the ſpace of a year, or for any other time, either for the ſoul of a perſon deceaſed, or for the benefit of a perſon living. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To ANNE'AL. v. a. [ælan, to heat, Saxon.]

1. To heat glaſs, that the colours laid on it may pierce through.

But when thou doſt anneal in glaſs thy ſtory,
——— ——— then the light and glory
More rev'rend grows, and more doth win,
Which elſe ſhews wat'riſh, bleak, and thin. Herbert.

When you purpoſe to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven; or, for want thereof, take a blue ſtone, which being made fit for the aforeſaid oven, lay it upon the croſs bars of iron. Peacham on Drawing.

Which her own inward ſymmetry reveal'd,
And like a picture ſhone, in glaſs anneal'd. Dryden's Fables.

2. To heat glaſs after it is blown, that it may not break.
3. To heat any thing in ſuch a manner as to give it the true temper.

To ANNE'X. v. a. [annecto, annexum, Lat. annexer, Fr.]

1. To unite to at the end; as, he annexed a codicil to his will.
2. To unite; as, a ſmaller thing to a greater; as, he annexed a province to his kingdom.
3. To unite à poſteriori; annexion always preſuppoſing ſomething: thus we may ſay, puniſhment is annexed to guilt; but not guilt to puniſhment.

Concerning fate or deſtiny, of which the opinions of thoſe learned men, that have written thereof, may be ſafely received, had they not thereunto annexed and faſtened an inevitable neceſſity, and made it more general and univerſally powerful than it is. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

Nations will decline ſo low
From virtue, which is reaſon, that no wrong,
But juſtice, and ſome fatal curſe annex'd,
Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton's Par. Loſt.

I mean not the authority, which is annexed to your office; I ſpeak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your perſon. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happineſs always to the exerciſe of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers's Sermons.

ANNE'X. n. ſ. [from To annex.] The thing annexed; additament. Blount.

Failing in his firſt attempt to be but like the higheſt in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the ſame on earth, and hath accordingly aſſumed the annexes of divinity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANNEXA'TION. n. ſ. [from annex.]

1. Conjunction; addition.

If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedneſs, which Chriſt ſo vehemently recommends to us, we have his own promiſe, that the whole body will be full of light, Matt. vi. that all other Chriſtian virtues will, by way of concomitance or annexation, attend them. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Union; coalition; conjunction.

How theſe annexations of benefices firſt came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great diſpute. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

ANNE'XION. n. ſ. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is neceſſary to engage the fears of men, by the annexion of ſuch penalties as will overbalance temporal pleaſure. Rogers.

ANNE'XMENT. n. ſ. [from annex.]

1. The act of annexing.
2. The thing annexed.

When it falls,
Each ſmall annexment, petty conſequence,
Attends the boiſt'rous ruin. Shakeſpeare's Hamlet.

ANNI'HILABLE. adj. [from annihilate.] That which may be reduced to nothing; that which may be put out of exiſtence.

To ANNI'HILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of exiſtence.

It is impoſſible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that as it was the work of the omnipotency of God, to make ſomewhat of nothing; ſo it requireth the like omnipotency to turn ſomewhat into nothing. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Thou taught'ſt me, by making me
Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee,
T' invent and practiſe this one way, t' annihilate all three. Donne.

He deſpaired of God's mercy; he, by a decollation of all hope, annihilated his mercy. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Whoſe friendſhip can ſtand againſt aſſaults, ſtrong enough to annihilate the friendſhip of puny minds; ſuch an one has reached true conſtancy. South.

Some imagined, water ſufficient to a deluge was created, and, when the buſineſs was done, diſbanded, and annihilated. Woodward's Natural Hiſtory.

2. To deſtroy, ſo as to make the thing otherwiſe than it was.

The flood that hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, ſo as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

3. To annul; to deſtroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reaſon, that any one commonwealth ſhould annihilate that whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

ANNIHILA'TION. n. ſ. [from annihilate.] The act of reducing to nothing. The ſtate of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very eſſence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not chooſe but follow. Hooker.

That knowledge, which as ſpirits we obtain,
Is to be valu'd in the midſt of pain:
Annihilation were to loſe heav'n more:
We are not quite exil'd, where thought can ſoar. Dryden.

ANNIVE'RSARY. n. ſ. [anniverſarius, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the courſe of the year.

For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive primitive chriſtians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praiſe God for them, and to obſerve the anniverſary of their ſufferings Stillingfleet's Defence.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniverſary day.

Donne had never ſeen Mrs Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniverſaries. Dryd.

3. Anniverſary is an office in the Romiſh church, celebrated not only once a year, but which ought to be ſaid daily through the year, for the ſoul of the deceaſed. Ayliffe.

ANNIVE'RSARY. adj. [anniverſarius, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, moſt conſtantly finiſhing its anniverſary viciſſitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worſhip to a creature, as inconſiſtent with chriſtianity; but confeſs the honour and eſteem for the martyrs, which they expreſſed by keeping their anniverſary days, and recommending their example. Stillingfleet.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as, anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the ſeventeen hundred and fifty-firſt year from the birth of our Saviour.

ANNO'ISANCE. n. ſ. [from annoy, but not now in uſe.]

It hath a double ſignification, being as well for any hurt done either to a publick place, as highway, bridge, or common river, or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroaching, or ſuch like means; as alſo, for the writ that is brought upon this tranſgreſſion. See NUSANCE, the word now uſed. Blount.

ANNOLIS. n. ſ. An American animal, like a lizard.

ANNOTA'TION. n. ſ. [annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books; notes.

It might appear very improper to publiſh annotations, without the text itſelf whereunto they relate. Boyle.

ANNOTA'TOR. n. ſ. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a ſcholiaſt; a commentator.

I have not that reſpect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Felton.

To ANNO'UNCE. v. a. [annoncer, Fr. annuncio, Lat.]

1. To publiſh; to proclaim.

Of the Meſſiah I have heard foretold
By all the prophets; of thy birth at length
Announc'd by Gabriel with the firſt I knew. Parad. Reg.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial ſentence.

Thoſe, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations, publiſh laws, announce
Or life or death. Prior.

To ANNOY. v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to teaze; to moleſt.

Woe to poor man; each outward thing annoys him;
He heaps in inward grief, that moſt deſtroys him. Sidney.

Her joyous preſence and ſweet company,
In full content he there did long enjoy;
Ne wicked envy, nor vile jealouſy,
His dear delights were able to annoy. Fairy Q.

As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houſes thick, and ſewers annoy the air,
Forth iſſuing on a ſummer's morn to breathe
Among the pleaſant villages, and farms
Adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Inſects ſeldom uſe their offenſive weapons, unleſs provoked: let them but alone, and annoy them not. Ray.

ANNO'Y. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Injury; moleſtation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, ſleep in peace, and wake in joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakeſp.

All pain and joy is in their way;
The things we fear bring leſs annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themſelves they cannot ſtay. Donne.

What then remains, but, after paſt annoy,
To take the good viciſſitude of joy. Dryd. Fab.

ANNO'YANCE. n. ſ. [from annoy.]

1. That which annoys; that which hurts.

A grain, a duſt, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious ſenſe. Shakeſpeare.

Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

2. The ſtate of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

The ſpit venom of their poiſoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker.

The greateſt annoyance and diſturbance of mankind, has been from one of thoſe two things, force or fraud. South.

For the further annoyance and terrour of any beſieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Wilkins.

ANNO'YER. n. ſ. [from To annoy.] The perſon that annoys.

A'NNUAL. adj. [annuel, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That which comes yearly.

Annual for me, the grape, the roſe, renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew. Pope.

2. That which is reckoned by the year.

The king's majeſty
Does purpoſe honour to you; to which

A thouſand pounds a year, annual ſupport,
Out of his grace he adds. Shakeſpeare.

3. That which laſts only a year.

The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annua', ſeemeth to be cauſed by the over-expence of the ſap; which being prevented, they will ſuperannuate, if they ſtand warm. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

Every tree may, in ſome ſenſe, be ſaid to be an annual plant, both leaf, flower, and fruit, proceeding from the coat that was ſuperinduced over the wood the laſt year. Ray.

A'NNUALLY. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it ſufficient to ſignify a heart; becauſe the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and unto fifty years annually encreaſeth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The whole ſtrength of a nation is the utmoſt that a prince can raiſe annually from his ſubjects. Swift.

ANNU'ITANT. n. ſ. [from annuity.] He that poſſeſſes or receives an annuity.

ANNU'ITY. n. ſ. [annuité, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years. The differences between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the granter, or his heirs, that have aſſets by deſcent. The ſecond difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity againſt the granter, his heirs, or ſucceſſors; but of a rent, the ſame actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for aſſets, becauſe it is no freehold in law; nor ſhall be put in execution upon a ſtatute merchant, ſtatute ſtaple, or elegit, as a rent may. Cowell.

2. A yearly allowance.

He was generally known to be the ſon of one earl, and brother to another, who ſupplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

To ANNU'L. v. a. [from nullus.]

1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to aboliſh.

That which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it; and whoever deſtroys this authority, does, in effect, annul the law. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light the pure work of God to me's extinct,
And all her various objects of delight
Annull'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd.
Milton's Sampſon Agoniſtes.

A'NNULAR. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, riſe up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Cheyne.

A'NNULARY. adj. [from annulus, Lat.] In the form of rings.

Becauſe continual reſpiration is neceſſary, the wind-pipe is made with annu'ary cartilages, that the ſides of it may not flag and fall together. Ray.

A'NNULET. n. ſ. [from annulus, Lat.]

1. A little ring.

2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of diſtinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms.

3. Annulets are alſo a part of the coat-armour of ſeveral families; they were anciently reputed a mark of nobility and juriſdiction; it being the cuſtom of prelates to receive their inveſtiture per baculum & annulum.

4. [In architecture.] The ſmall ſquare members, in the Dorick capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets.

5. Annulet is alſo uſed for a narrow flat moulding common to other parts of the column; ſo called, becauſe it encompaſſes the column round. Chambers.

To ANNU'MERATE. v. a. [annumero, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to ſomething beforementioned.

ANNUMERA'TION. n. ſ. [annumeratio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

To ANNU'NCIATE. v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate ſomething that has fallen out: a word not in popular uſe.

ANNUNCIA'TION-DAY. n. ſ. [from annunciate.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's ſalutation of the bleſſed virgin; ſolemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our bleſſed Saviour: and ſo upon all the feſtivals of the year. Taylor.

A'NODYNE. adj. [from α and ὀδύνη.] That which has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet durſt ſhe not too deeply probe the wound,
As hoping ſtill the nobler parts were ſound:
But ſtrove with anodynes t' aſſuage the ſmart,
And mildly thus her med'cine did impart. Dryden.

Anodynes, or abaters of pain of the alimentary kind, are ſuch things as relax the tenſion of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient ſubſtances; thoſe things which deſtroy the particular acrimony which occaſions the pain, or what deadens the ſenſation of the brain, by procuring ſleep. Arbuth.

To ANO'INT. v. a. [oindre, encindre; part. oint, enoint, Fr.]

1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as oil, or unguents.

Anointed let me be with deadly venom,
And die, ere men can say, God save the queen. Shak.
Thou shalt have olive trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit. Deut.

2. To smear; to be rubbed upon.
Warm waters then in brazen caldrons born,
Are pour'd to wash his body, joint by joint,
And fragrant oils the stiffen'd limbs anoint. Dryd.

3. To consecrate by unction.
I would not see thy cruel nails
Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister
In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs. Shakesp.

ANOINTER. n. s. [from anoint.] The person that anoints.

ANO'MALISM. n. s. [from anomaly.] Anomaly; irregularity; deviation from the common rule. Dict.

ANOMALI'STICAL. adj [from anomaly.] Irregular; applied in astronomy to the year, taken for the time in which the earth passeth through its orbit, distinct from the tropical year.

ANO'MALOUS. adj. [α priv. and ἄμαλος.] Irregular; out of rule; deviating from the general method or analogy of things: It is applied, in grammar, to words deviating from the common rules of inflection; and, in astronomy, to the seemingly irregular motions of the planets.
There will arise anomalous disturbances not only in civil and artificial, but also in military officers. Brown's Vul. Er.
He being acquainted with some characters of every speech, you may at pleasure make him understand anomalous pronunciation. Holder's Elements of Speech.
Metals are gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, and iron: to which we may join that anomalous body, quicksilver or mercury. Locke's Elements of Natural Philosophy.

ANO'MALOUSLY. adv. [from anomalous.] Irregularly; in a manner contrary to rule.
Eve was not solemnly begotten, but suddenly framed, and anomalously proceeded from Adam. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANO'MALY. n. s. [anomalie, Fr. anomalia, Lat. ἀνωμαλος.] Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.
If we should chance to find a mother debauching her daughter, as such monsters have been seen, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature. South.
I do not pursue the many pseudographies in use, but intend to shew how most of these anomalies in writing might be avoided, and better supplied. Holder.

ANOMY. n. s. [α priv. and νόμος.] Breach of law.
If sin be good, and just, and lawful, it is no more evil, it is no sin, no anomy. Bramhall against Hobbes.

ANO'N. adv. [Junius imagines it to be an elliptical form of speaking for in one, that is, in one minute; Skinner from a and nean, or near; Minshew from on on.]
1. Quickly; soon; in a short time.
A little snow, tumbled about,
Anon becomes a mountain. Shakespeare.
Will they come abroad anon?
Shall we see young Oberon? B. Johnson.
However, witness, heav'n!
Heav'n, witness thou anon! while we discharge Freely our part. Milton's Par. Lost.
He was not without design at that present, as shall be made out anon; meaning by that device to withdraw himself. Cla.
Still as I did the leaves inspire,
With such a purple light they shone,
As if they had been made of fire,
And spreading so, would flame anon. Waller.
2. Sometimes; now and then; at other times. In this sense is used ever and anon.
Full forty days he pass'd, whether on hill
Sometimes, anon in shady vale, each night,
Or harbour'd in one cave, is not revealed. Par. Reg.

ANO'NYMOUS. adj. [α priv. and ὄνομα.] Wanting a name.
These animalcules serve also for food to another anonymous insect of the waters. Ray on the Creation.
They would forthwith publish slanders unpunished, the authors being anonymous, the immediate publishers thereof sculking. Notes on the Dunciad.

ANO'NYMOUSLY. adv. [from anonymous.] Without a name.

ANORE'XY. n. s. [ἀνορηξια.] Inappetency, or loathing of food. Quincy.

ANO'THER. adj. [from an and other.]
1. Not the same.
He that will not lay a foundation for perpetual disorder, must of necessity find another rise of government than that. Locke.
2. One more; a new addition to the former number.
———A fourth?
Start eye!
What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?
Another yet?—a seventh! I'll see no more. Shakesp.
3. Any other; any one else.
If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him. 1 Samuel.

Why not of her? preferr'd above the rest,
By him with knightly deeds, and open love profess'd;
So had another been, where he his vows address'd. Dryden's Fables.

4. Not one's self.
A man shall have diffused his life, his self, and his whole concernments so far, that he can weep his sorrows with another's eyes; when he has another heart besides his own, both to share, and to support his grief. South.

5. Widely different; much altered.
When the soul is beaten from its station, and the mounds of virtue are broken down, it becomes quite another thing from what it was before. South.

ANO'THERGAINES. adj. [See ANOTHERGUESS.] Of another kind. This word I have found only in Sidney.
If my father had not plaid the hasty fool, I might have had anothergaines husband than Dametas. Sidney.

ANO'THERGUESS. adj. [This word, which though rarely used in writing, is somewhat frequent in colloquial language, I conceive to be corrupted from another guise; that is, of a different guise, or manner, or form.] Of a different kind.
Oh Hocus! where art thou? It used to go in anotherguess manner in thy time. Arbuthnot.

A'NSATED. adj. [ansatus, Lat.] Having handles; or something in the form of handles.

To A'NSWER. v. n. [The etymology is uncertain; the Saxons had andpyrpian, but in another sense; the Dutch have antwoorden.]
1. To speak in return to a question.
Are we succour'd? are the Moors removed?
Answer these questions first, and then a thousand more,
Answer them altogether. Dryd.
2. To speak in opposition.
No man was able to answer him a word. Matt.
If it be said, we may discover the elementary ingredients of things, I answer, that it is not necessary that such a discovery should be practicable. Boyle.
3. To be accountable for.
Some men have sinned in the principles of humanity, and must answer for not being men. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
If there be any absurdity in this, our author must answer for it. Locke.
4. To vindicate; to give a justificatory account of.
The night, so impudently fixed for my last, made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my family. Swift.
5. To give an account.
How they have been since received, and so well improved, let those answer either to God or man, who have been the authors and promoters of such wise counsel. Temple.
He wants a father to protect his youth,
And rear him up to virtue. You must bear
The future blame, and answer to the world,
When you refuse the easy honest means
Of taking care of him. Southern.
6. To correspond to; to suit with.
In water face answereth to face: so the heart of man to man. Proverbs.
7. To be equivalent to; to stand for something else.
A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money answereth all things. Eccl.
8. To satisfy any claim or petition.
Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud king, who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes unto you,
Ev'n with the bloody payments of your deaths. Shakesp.
Men no sooner find their appetites unanswered, than they complain the times are injurious. Raleigh.
9. To act reciprocally upon.
Say, do'st thou yet the Roman harp command?
Do the strings answer to thy noble hand? Dryd.
10. To stand as opposite or correlative to something else.
There can but two things create love, perfection and usefulness; to which answer, on our part, 1. Admiration; and, 2. Desire: and both these are centered in love. Taylor.
11. To bear proportion to.
He desired, that proper officers might search me; for probably I might carry several weapons, which must needs be dangerous things, if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a person. Swift's Gulliver's Travels.
12. To perform what is endeavoured or intended by the agent.
Our part is, to choose out the most deserving objects, and the most likely to answer the ends of our charity; and when that is done, all is done that lies in our power: the rest must be left to providence. Atterbury.
13. To comply with.
He dies that touches of this fruit,
Till I and my affairs are answered. Shakesp.
14. To succeed; to produce the wished event.
Jason followed her counsel, whereto when the event had answered, he again demanded the fleece. Raleigh.
We see likewise, that much water draweth forth the juice of the body infused; but little water is imbibed by the body: and this this is a principal cauſe, why, in operations upon bodies for their verſion or alteration, the trial in great quantities doth not anſwer the trial in ſmall; and ſo deceiveth many. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

15. To appear to any call, or authoritative ſummons; in which ſenſe, though figuratively, the following paſſage may be, perhaps taken.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to anſwer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the ſkies. Shakeſpeare.

16. To be over-againſt any thing.

Fire anſwers fire, and, by their paly beams,
Each battle ſees the other's umber'd face. Shakeſpeare.

A'NSWER. n. ſ. [from To anſwer.]

1. That which is ſaid, whether in ſpeech or writing, in return to a queſtion, or poſition.

It was a right anſwer of the phyſician to his patient, that had ſore eyes: If you have more pleaſure in wine than in your ſight, wine is good. Locke.

How can we think of appearing at that tribunal, without being able to give a ready anſwer to the queſtions which he ſhall then put to us, about the poor and the afflicted, the hungry and the naked, the ſick and impriſoned? Atterbury.

2. In law, a confutation of a charge exhibited againſt a perſon.

A perſonal anſwer ought to have three qualities; it ought to be pertinent to the matter in hand; it ought to be abſolute and unconditional; it ought to be clear and certain. Ayliffe.

A'NSWER-JOBBER. n. ſ. [from anſwer and jobber.] He that makes a trade of writing anſwers.

What diſguſts me from having any thing to do with anſwer-jobbers, is, that they have no conſcience. Swift.

A'NSWERABLE. adj. [from anſwer.]

1. That to which a reply may be made; that which may be anſwered; as, the argument, though ſubtle, is yet anſwerable.

2. Obliged to give an account, or ſtand the trial of an accuſation.

Every chief of every kindred or family ſhould be anſwerable, and bound to bring forth every one of that kindred, at all times to be juſtified, when he ſhould be required, or charged with any treaſon, felony, &c. Spenſer.

Will any man argue, that if a phyſician ſhould manifeſtly preſcribe poiſon to all his patients, he cannot be juſtly puniſhed, but is anſwerable only to God? Swift.

He cannot think ambition more juſtly laid to their charge, than to other men; becauſe that would be to make church government anſwerable for the errours of human nature. Swift.

3. Correſpondent.

It was but ſuch a likeneſs as an imperfect glaſs doth give, anſwerable enough in ſome features and colours, but erring in others. Sidney.

The daughters of Atlas were ladies, who, accompanying ſuch as came to be regiſtered among the worthies, brought forth children anſwerable in quality to thoſe that begot them. Raleigh.

4. Proportionate.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge anſwerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love
By name to come call'd charity, the ſoul
Of all the reſt. Milton.

5. Suitable; ſuited.

The following, by certain eſtates of men, anſwerable to that which a great perſon himſelf profeſſeth, as of ſoldiers to him that hath been employed in the wars, hath been a thing well taken even in monarchies. Bacon.

If anſwerable ſtyle I can obtain
Of my celeſtial patroneſs, who deigns
Her nightly viſitation unimplor'd. Milton.

6. Equal.

There be no kings whoſe means are anſwerable unto other mens deſires. Raleigh.

7. Relative; correlative.

That, to every petition for things needful, there ſhould be ſome anſwerable ſentence of thanks provided particularly to follow, is not requiſite. Hooker.

A'NSWERABLY. adv. [from anſwerable.] In due proportion; with proper correſpondence; ſuitably.

The broader ſeas are, if they be intire, and free from iſlands, they are anſwerably deeper. Brerewood.

It bears light, and more active ſorts, into the atmoſphere, to a greater or leſſer height, anſwerably to the greater or leſſer intenſeneſs of the heat. Woodward.

A'NSWERER. n. ſ. [from anſwer.]

1. He that anſwers; he that ſpeaks in return to what another has ſpoken.

2. He that manages the controverſy againſt one that has written firſt.

It is very unfair in any writer to employ ignorance and malice together; becauſe it gives his anſwerer double work. Swift.

ANT. n. ſ. [æmett, Sax. which Junius imagines, not without probability, to have been firſt contracted to æmt, and then ſoftened to ant.] An emmet; a piſmire. A ſmall inſect that lives in great numbers together in hillocks.

We'll ſet thee to ſchool to an ant, to teach thee there's no lab'ring in the winter. Shakeſpeare.

Methinks, all cities now but ant-hills are,
Where when the ſeveral labourers I ſee
For children, houſe, proviſion, taking pain,
They're all but ants, carrying eggs, ſtraw, and grain. Donne.
Learn each ſmall people's genius, policies;
The ant's republick, and the realm of bees;
How thoſe in common all their ſtores beſtow,
And anarchy without confuſion know: Pope.

ANT-BEAR. n. ſ. [from ant and bear.] An animal that feeds on ants.

Divers quadrupeds feed upon inſects; and ſome live wholly upon them; as two ſorts of tamanduas upon ants, which therefore are called in Engliſh ant-bears. Ray.

ANT-HILL, or HILLOCK. n. ſ. [from ant and hill.] The ſmall protuberances of earth in which ants make their neſts.

Put blue flowers into an ant-hill, they will be ſtained with red; becauſe the ants drop upon them their ſtinging liquour, which hath the effect of oil of vitriol. Ray.

Thoſe who have ſeen ant-hillocks, have eaſily perceived thoſe ſmall heaps of corn about their neſts. Addiſon.

AN'T. A contraction for and it, or rather and if it; as, an't pleaſe you; that is, and if it pleaſe you.

ANTA'GONIST. n. ſ. [ἀντὶ and ἀγωνίζω.]

1. One who contends with another; an opponent. It implies generally a perſonal and particular oppoſition.

Our antagoniſts in theſe controverſies may have met with ſome not unlike to Ithacius. Hooker.

What was ſet before him,
To heave, pull, draw, and break, he ſtill perform'd,
None daring to appear antagoniſt. Milton.

It is not fit, that the hiſtory of a perſon ſhould appear, till the prejudice both of his antagoniſts and adherents be ſoftened and ſubdued. Addiſon.

2. Contrary.

The ſhort club conſiſts of thoſe who are under five feet; ours is to be compoſed of ſuch as are above ſix. Theſe we look upon as the two extremes and antagoniſts of the ſpecies; conſidering all theſe as neuters, who fill up the middle ſpace. Addiſon.

3. In anatomy, the antagoniſt is that muſcle which counteracts ſome others.

A relaxation of a muſcle muſt produce a ſpaſm in its antagoniſt, becauſe the equilibrium is deſtroyed. Arbuthnot.

To ANTECE'DE. v. n. [from ante, before, and cedo, to go.] To precede; to go before.

It ſeems more conſonant to reaſon, that the fabrick of the world did not long antecede its motion. Hale.

ANTECE'DENCE. n. ſ. [from antecede.] The act or ſtate of going before; precedence.

It is impoſſible that mixed bodies can be eternal, becauſe there is neceſſarily a pre-exiſtence of the ſimple bodies, and an antecedence of their conſtitution preceding the exiſtence of mixed bodies. Hale.

ANTECE'DENT. adj. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. Going before; preceding. Antecedent is uſed, I think, only with regard to time; precedent, with regard both to time and place.

To aſſert, that God looked upon Adam's fall as a ſin, and puniſhed it, when, without any antecedent ſin of his, it was impoſſible for him not to fall, ſeems a thing that highly reproaches eſſential equity and goodneſs. South.

2. It has to before the thing which is ſuppoſed to follow.

No one is ſo hardy as to ſay, God is in his debt; that he owed him a nobler being: for exiſtence muſt be antecedent to merit. Collier.

Did the blood firſt exiſt, antecedent to the formation of the heart? But that is to ſet the effect before the cauſe. Bentley.

ANTECE'DENT. n. ſ. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. That which goes before.

A duty of ſo mighty an influence, that it is indeed the neceſſary antecedent, if not alſo the direct cauſe of a ſinner's return to God. South.

2. In grammar, the noun to which the relative is ſubjoined; as, the man who comes hither.

3. In logick, the firſt propoſition of an enthymeme or argument, conſiſting only of two propoſitions.

Conditional or hypothetical propoſitions are thoſe whoſe parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the ſun be fixed, the earth muſt move: if there be no fire, there will be no ſmoke. The firſt part of theſe propoſitions, or that wherein the condition is contained, is called the antecedent, the other is called the conſequent. Watts's Logick.

ANTECE'DENTLY. adv. [from antecedent.] In the ſtate of antecedence, or going before; previouſly.

We conſider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of poſſibilities. South.

ANTECE'SSOR. n. ſ. [Latin.] One who goes before, or leads another. Dict.

ANTECHA'MBER. n. ſ. [from ante before, and chamber; it is generally written, improperly, antichamber.] The chamber that leads to the chief apartment.

The empreſs has the antichambers paſt,
And this way moves with a diſorder'd haſte. Dryden.

His antichamber, and room of audience, are little ſquare chambers wainſcoted. Addiſon.

They were got out of the reach of antimonial fumes. Grew.

Though antimonial cups prepar'd with art,
Their force to wine through ages ſhould impart;
This diſſipation, this profuſe expence,
Nor ſhrinks their ſize, nor waſtes their ſtores immenſe.
Blackmore on the Creation.

A'NTIMONY. n. f. [The ſtibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called στίμμι. The reaſon of its modern denomination is referred to Baſil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown ſome of it to the hogs, obſerved, that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened; and therefore, he imagined, his fellow monks would be the better for a like doſe. The experiment, however, ſucceeded ſo ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine; antimonk.]

Antimony is a mineral ſubſtance, of a metalline nature, having all the ſeeming characters of a real metal, except malleability; and may be called a ſemimetal, being a foſſile glebe of ſome undetermined metal, combined with a ſulphurous and ſtony ſubſtance. Mines of all metals afford it; but chiefly thoſe those of silver and lead; that in gold mines is reckoned best. It has also its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. It is found in clods or stones of several sizes, bearing a near resemblance to black lead, only being lighter and harder. Its texture is full of little shining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glass. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuses in the fire, though with some difficulty; and dissolves more easily in water. When dug out of the earth, it is put into large crucibles, fused by a violent fire, and then poured into cones, which make the crude antimony of the shops. Of these cones the top is the purest part, and the base the foulest. It destroys and dissipates all metals fused with it, except gold; and is therefore useful in refining. It is a common ingredient in speculums, or burning concaves; serving to give them a finer polish. It makes a part in bell metal; and renders the sound more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and sound; and with lead, in the casting of printers letters, to render them more smooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and especially in casting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is used under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetick. It had no place in medicine before the fourteenth century; and was generally neglected, till Paracelsus brought it into esteem, in the beginning of the sixteenth century; but much mischief was done by it, till the proper methods of preparing it were, after a long course of experiments, discovered. Chambers.

ANTINEPHRI'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and νεφρίτικος.] Medicines good against diseases of the reins and kidneys.

A'NTINOMY. n. s. [from ἀντὶ and νόμος.] A contradiction between two laws, or two articles of the same law.

ANTIPARALY'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and παράλυσις.] Efficacious against the palsy.

ANTIPATHE'TICAL. adj. [from antipathy.] Having a natural contrariety to any thing.

The soil is fat and luxurious, and antipathetical to all venemous creatures. Howel.

ANTIPATHE'TICALNESS. n. s. [from antipathetical.] The quality or state of having a natural contrariety to any thing. Dict.

ANTI'PATHY. n. s. [from ἀντὶ, against, and πάθος, feeling; antipathie, Fr.]

1. A natural contrariety to any thing, so as to shun it involuntarily; aversion; dislike. It is opposed to sympathy.

No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave. Shakespeare.

To this perhaps might be justly attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in men. Locke.

2. It has sometimes the particle against before the object of antipathy.

I had a mortal antipathy against standing armies in times of peace; because I took armies to be hired by the master of the family, to keep his children in slavery. Swift.

3. Sometimes to.

Ask you, what provocation I have had?
The strong antipathy of good to bad:
When truth, or virtue, an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours. Pope.

4. Formerly with; but improperly.

Tangible bodies have an antipathy with air; and any liquid body, that is more dense, they will draw, condense, and, in effect, incorporate. Bacon.

ANTIPERI'STASIS. n. s. [from ἀντιπερίστασις, formed of ἀντὶ and περίστημι, to stand round.] The opposition of a contrary quality, by which the quality it opposes, becomes heightened or intended; or the action, by which a body attacked by another, collects itself, and becomes stronger by such opposition: or an intention of the activity of one quality caused by the opposition of another. Thus quicklime is set on fire by the affusion of cold water; so water becomes warmer in winter than in summer; and thunder and lightning are excited in the middle region of the air, which is continually cold, and all by antiperistasis. This is an exploded principle in the Peripatetick philosophy.

Th' antiperistasis of age
More inflam'd his am'rous rage. Cowley.

The riotous prodigal detests covetousness; yet let him find the springs grow dry, which feed his luxury, covetousness shall be called in; and so, by a strange antiperistasis, prodigality shall beget rapine. Decay of Piety.

ANTIPESTILE'NTIAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ, against, and pestilential.] Efficacious against the infection of the plague.

Perfumes correct the air before it is attracted by the lungs; or, rather, antipestilential unguents, to anoint the nostrils with. Harvey on the Plague.

ANTI'PHRASIS. n. s. [from ἀντὶ, against, and φράσις, a form of speech.] The use of words in a sense opposite to their proper meaning.

You now find no cause to repent, that you never dipt your hands in the bloody high courts of justice, so called only by antiphrasis. South.

ANTI'PODAL. adj. [from antipodes.] Relating to the countries inhabited by the antipodes.

The Americans are antipodals unto the Indians. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ANTIPPODES. n. s. It has no singular. [from ἀντὶ, against, and πόδες, feet.] Those people who, living on the other side of the globe, have their feet directly opposite to ours.

We should hold day with the antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the sun. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

So shines the sun, tho' hence remov'd as clear
When his beams warm th' antipodes, as here. Waller.

A'NTIPOPE. n. s. [from ἀντὶ, against, and pope.] He that usurps the popedom, in opposition to the right pope.

This house is famous in history, for the retreat of an antipope, who called himself Felix V. Addison.

ANTIPTOSIS. n. s. [ἀντίπτωσις.] A figure in grammar, by which one case is put for another.

A'NTIQUARY. n. s. [antiquarius, Lat.] A man studious of antiquity; a collector of ancient things.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, are but the reliefs of an intellect defaced with sin. We admire it now, only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the stamp it once bore. South's Sermons.

With sharpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.

The rude Latin of the monks is still very intelligible; had their records been delivered in the vulgar tongue, they could not now be understood, unless by antiquaries. Swift.

A'NTIQUARY. adj. [This word is improper.] Old; antique.

Here's Nestor,
Instructed by the antiquary times;
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

To A'NTIQUATE. v. a. [antiquo, Lat.] To put out of use; to make obsolete.

The growth of christianity in this kingdom might reasonably introduce new laws, and antiquate or abrogate some old ones, that seemed less consistent with the christian doctrines. Hale's Common Law of England.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable. But cannot I admire the height of his invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

Almighty Latium, with her cities crown'd,
Shall like an antiquated fable sound. Addison.

A'NTIQUATEDNESS. n. s. [from antiquated.] The state of being antiquated, worn out of use, or obsolete.

ANTI'QUE. adj. [antique, Fr. antiquus, Lat. It was formerly pronounced according to the English analogy, with the accent on the first syllable; but now after the French, with the accent on the last, at least in prose; the poets use it variously.]

1. Ancient; old; not modern.

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song we heard last night. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Such truth in love as th' antique world did know,
In such a stile as courts might boast of now. Waller.

2. Of genuine antiquity.

The seals which we have remaining of Julius Cæsar, which we know to be antique, have the star of Venus over them. Dryden's Virgil's Æneis, Pref.

My copper lamps at any rate,
For being true antique I bought;
Yet wisely melted down my plate,
On modern models to be wrought;
And trifles I alike pursue,
Because they're old, because they're new. Prior.

3. Of old fashion.

Forth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Array'd in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments right well beseen. Fairy Queen.

Must he no more divert the tedious day?
Nor sparkling thoughts in antique words convey? Smith to the Memory of Philips.

4. Odd; wild; antick.

Name not these living death-heads unto me;
For these not ancient but antique be.
And sooner may a gulling weather-spy
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed antique youth will wear. Donne.

ANTI'QUE. n. s. [from antique, adj.] An antiquity; a remain of ancient times; an ancient rarity.

I leave to Edward, now earl of Oxford, my seal of Julius Cæsar; as also another seal, supposed to be a young Hercules; both very choice antiques, and set in gold. Swift.

ANTI'QUENESS. n. s. [from antique.] The quality of being antique; an appearance of antiquity.

We may discover something venerable in the antiqueness of the work; but we would see the design enlarged, the figures reformed, and the colour laid on. Addison.

ANTIQUITY. n. s. [antiquitas, Lat.]

1. Old times; time past long ago.

I mention Aristotle, Polybius, and Cicero, the greatest philosopher, the most impartial historian, and the most consummate statesman of all antiquity. Addison's Freeholder.

2. The people of old times; the ancients.

That such pillars were raised by Seth, all antiquity has avowed. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. The works or remains of old times.

As for the observation of Machiavel, traducing Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay to extinguish all heathen antiquities: I do not find that those zeals last long; as it appeared in the succession of Sabinian, who did revive the former antiquities. Bacon's Essays.

4. Old age: a ludicrous sense.

Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

5. Ancientness; as, this ring is valuable for its antiquity.

ANTISCII. n. s. It has no singular. [from ἀντὶ and σκιὰ.] In geography, the people who inhabit on different sides of the equator, who, consequently, at noon have their shadows projected opposite ways. Thus the people of the north are Antiscii to those of the south; the one projecting their shadows at noon toward the north pole, and the other toward the south pole. Chambers.

ANTISCORBU'TICAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ, against, and scorbutum, the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbutical plants, in quantities, will occasion stinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ANTISCORBU'TICK, adj. [from ἀντὶ, against, and scorbutum, the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbuticks, animal diet, and animal salts, are proper. Arbuthnot on Diet.

ANTISPASIS. n. s. [from ἀντὶ, against, and σπάω, to draw.] The revulsion of any humour into another part.

ANTISPASMO'DICK. adj [from ἀντὶ, against, and σπασμὸς, the cramp.] That which has the power of relieving the cramp.

ANTISPA'STICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and σπαστικὸς.] Medicines which cause a revulsion of the humours.

ANTISPLENE'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and splenetick.] Efficacious in diseases of the spleen.

Antisplenetick open the obstructions of the spleen. Floyer.

ANTISTROPE. n. s. [ἀντιστροφὴ, from ἀντὶ, the contrary way, and στροφὴ, turning.] In an ode supposed to be sung in parts, the second stanza of every three, or sometimes every second stanza; so called because the dance turns about.

ANTISTRUMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀντὶ and struma, a scrophulous swelling.] Good against the king's evil.

I prescribed him a distilled milk, with antistrumaticks, and purged him. Wiseman's Surgery.

ANTITHESIS. n. s. in the plural antitheses. [ἀντίθεσις, placing in opposition.] Opposition of words or sentiments; contrast; as in these lines:

Though gentle, yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing, full. Denham.

I see a chief, who leads my chosen sons,
All arm'd with points, antitheses, and puns. Pope's Dunciad.

ANTITYPE. n. s. [ἀντίτυπος.] That which is resembled or shadowed out by the type; that of which the type is the representation. It is a term of theology. See TYPE.

When once upon the wing, he soars to an higher pitch, from the type to the antitype, to the days of the Messiah, the ascension of our Saviour, and, at length, to his kingdom and dominion over all the earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

He brought forth bread and wine, and was the priest of the most high God; imitating the antitype, or the substance, Christ himself. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

ANTITY'PICAL. adj. [from antitype.] That which relates to an antitype; that which explains the type.

ANTIVENE'REAL. adj. [from ἀντὶ and venereal.] Good against the venereal disease.

If a lues be joined with it, you will scarce cure your patient without exhibiting antivenereal remedies. Wiseman's Surgery.

A'NTLER. n. s. [andouillier, Fr.] Properly the first branches of a stag's horns; but, popularly and generally, any of his branches.

Grown old, they grow less branched, and first lose their brow antlers, or lowest furcations next to the head. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

A well grown stag, whose ant'lers rise
High o'er his front, his beams invade the skies. Dryden.

Bright Diana
Brought hunted wild goats heads, and branching antlers
Of stags, the fruit and honour of her toil. Prior.

ANTŒCI. n. s. It has no singular. [Lat. from ἀντὶ and οἰκέω, to inhabit.] In geography, those inhabitants of the earth, who live under the same meridian, and at the same distance from the equator; the one toward the north, and the other to the south. Hence they have the same longitude, and their latitude is also the same, but of a different denomination. They are in the same semicircle of the meridian, but opposite parallels. They have precisely the same hours of the day and night, but opposite seasons; and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other. Chambers.

ANTONOMA'SIA. n. s. [from ἀντὶ and ὀνομὰ, a name.] A form of speech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of some dignity, office, profession, science, or trade; or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative. Thus a king is called his majesty; a nobleman, his lordship. We say the philosopher instead of Aristotle, and the orator for Cicero: thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian; and a grave man is called a Cato, and a wise man a Solomon. Smith's Rhetorick.

A'NTRE. n. s. [antre, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den.

With all my travels history:
Wherein of antres vast, and deserts idle,
It was my hent to speak. Shakespeare's Othello.

A'NVIL. n. s. [ænpille, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the smith lays his metal to be forged.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool. Shak. King John.

On their eternal anvil here he found
The brethren beating, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly and nobly. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Figuratively; to be upon the anvil, is to be in a state of formation or preparation.

Several members of our house knowing, some time ago, what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and desired their judgment. Swift.

ANXI'ETY. n. s. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind about some future event; suspense with uneasiness; perplexity; solicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pains and diseases of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of spirit; not only to enjoy the pleasures of sense, but peace of conscience, and tranquillity of mind. Tillotson.

2. In the medical language, depression; lowness of spirits.

In anxieties which attend fevers, when the cold fit is over, a warmer regimen may be allowed; and because anxieties often happen by spasms from winds, spices are useful. Arbuthnot.

A'NXIOUS. adj. [anxius, Lat.]

1. Disturbed about some uncertain event; solicitous.

His pensive cheek upon his hand reclin'd,
And anxious thoughts revolving in his mind. Dryden.

With beating hearts the dire event they wait,
Anxious, and trembling for the birth of fate. Pope.

2. Careful; full of inquietude; unquiet.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive;
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,
And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden's Virgil.

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

There being no writings we need to be solicitous about the meaning of, but those that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey, we may be less anxious about the sense of other authors. Locke.

4. It has generally for or about before the object, but sometimes of.

Who anxious of neglect, suspecting change,
Consults her pride, and meditates revenge. Granville.

A'NXIOUSLY. adv. [from anxious.] In an anxious manner; solicitously; unquietly; carefully.

But where the loss is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us so anxiously to prevent it, since it might be repaired again. South.

Thou what befits the new lord mayor,
And what the Gallick arms will do,
Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

A'NXIOUSNESS. n. s. [from anxious.] The quality of being anxious; susceptibility of anxiety.

A'NY. adj. [anig, enig, Sax.]

1. Every; whoever he be; whatever it be. It is, in all its senses, applied indifferently to persons or things.

I know you are now, sir, a gentleman born—Ay and have been so any time these four hours. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

You contented yourself with being capable, as much as any whosoever, of defending your country with your sword. Dryd.

How fit is this retreat for uninterrupted study? Any one that sees it will own, I could not have chosen a more likely place to converse with the dead in. Pope's Letters.

2. Whosoever; whatsoever; as distinguished from some other.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.

An inverted motion being begun any where below, continues itself all the whole length. Locke.

3. It is used in opposition to none.

I wound and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. Deuteronomy xxxii. 39.

A'ORIST. n. s. [ἀόριστος.] Indefinite; a term in the Greek grammar.

AO'RTA. n. ſ. [ἀορτή.] The great artery which riſes immediately out of the left ventricle of the heart. Quincy.

APA'CE. adv. [from a and pace; that is, with a great pace.]

1. Quick; ſpeedily: uſed of things in motion.

Or when the flying libbard ſhe did chace,
She could them nimbly move, and after fly apace. F. Queen.

Ay, quoth my uncle Glo'ſter,
Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace.
And ſince methinks, I would not grow ſo faſt,
Becauſe ſweet flow'rs are ſlow, and weeds make haſte.
Shakeſpeare's Richard III.

He promis'd in his eaſt a glorious race;
Now ſunk from his meridian, ſets apace. Dryden's Aurengz.

Is not he imprudent, who, ſeeing the tide making haſte towards him apace, will ſleep till the ſea overwhelm him. Tillotſon.

2. With haſte; applied to ſome action.

The baron now his diamonds pours apace;
Th' embroider'd king who ſhows but half his face,
And his refulgent queen. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

3. Haſtily; with ſpeed: ſpoken of any kind of progreſſion from one ſtate to another.

This ſecond courſe of men,
With ſome regard to what is juſt and right,
Shall lead their lives, and multiply apace. Milton's Par. Loſt.

The life and power of religion decays apace here and at home, while we are ſpreading the honour of our arms far and wide through foreign nations. Atterbury's Sermons.

If ſenſible pleaſure, or real grandeur, be our end, we ſhall proceed apace to real miſery. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

APAGO'GICAL. adj. [from ἀπαγωγὴ; compounded of ἀπὸ, from, and ἄγω, to bring or draw.] An apagogical demonſtration is ſuch as does not prove the thing directly; but ſhews the impoſſibility, or abſurdity, which ariſes from denying it; and is alſo called reductio ad impoſſibile, or ad abſurdum. Chambers.

APA'RT. adv. [apart, Fr.]

1. Separately from the reſt in place.

Since I enter into that queſtion, it behoveth me to give reaſon for my opinion, with circumſpection; becauſe I walk aſide, and in a way apart from the multitude. Raleigh's Hiſtory.

The party diſcerning, that the earl of Eſſex would never ſerve their turn, they reſolved to have another army apart, that ſhould be at their devotion. Clarendon.

2. In a ſtate of diſtinction; as, to ſet apart for any uſe.

He is ſo very figurative, that he requires a grammar apart, to conſtrue him. Dryden.

The tyrant ſhall demand yon ſacred load,
And gold and veſſels ſet apart for God. Prior.

3. Diſtinctly.

Moſes firſt nameth heaven and earth, putting waters but in the third place, as comprehending waters in the word earth; but afterwards he nameth them apart. Raleigh's Hiſtory.

4. At a diſtance; retired from the other company.

So pleaſe you, madam,
To put apart theſe your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

APA'RTMENT. n. ſ. [apartement, Fr.] A part of the houſe allotted to the uſe of any particular perſon; a room; a ſet of rooms.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Sir J. Denham.

Pale as death, deſpoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden's Fables.

The moſt conſiderable ruin is that on the eaſtern promontory, where are ſtill ſome apartments left, very high and arched at top. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.

A'PATHY. n. ſ. [α, not, and πάθος, feeling.] The quality of not feeling; exemption from paſſion; freedom from mental perturbation.

Of good and evil much they argued then,
Paſſion, and apathy, and glory, and ſhame.
Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

To remain inſenſible of ſuch provocations, is not conſtancy, but apathy. South.

In lazy apathy let ſtoicks boaſt
Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fixed as in froſt,
Contracted all, retiring to the breaſt;
But ſtrength of mind is exerciſe, not reſt. Pope.

APE. n. ſ. [afe, Iſlandiſh.]

1. A kind of monkey remarkable for imitating what he ſees.

I will be more newfangled than an ape, more giddy in my deſires than a monkey. Shakeſpeare's As you like it.

Writers report, that the heart of an ape worn near the heart, comforteth the heart, and increaſeth audacity. It is true, that the ape is a merry and bold beaſt. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

With glittering gold and ſparkling gems they ſhine,
But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granville.

2. An imitator; uſed generally in the bad ſenſe.

Julio Romano, who, had he himſelf eternity, and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her cuſtom: ſo perfectly he is her ape. Shakeſpeare's Winter's Tale.

To APE. v. a. [from ape.] To imitate, as an ape imitates human actions.

Aping the foreigners in every dreſs,
Which, bought at greater coſt, becomes him leſs. Dryden.

Curſe on the ſtripling! how he apes his ſire!
Ambitiouſly ſententious! Addiſon's Cato.

A'PIARY. n. ſ. [from apis, Lat. a bee.] The place where bees are kept.

Thoſe who are ſkilled in bees, when they ſee a foreign ſwarm approaching to plunder their hives, have a trick to divert them into ſome neighbouring apiary, there to make what havock they pleaſe. Swift.

APICES of a flower. [Lat. from apex, the top.] Little knobs that grow on the tops of the ſtamina, in the middle of a flower. They are commonly of a dark purpliſh colour. By the microſcope they have been diſcovered to be a ſort of capſulæ ſeminales, or ſeed veſſels, containing in them ſmall globular, and often oval particles, of various colours, and exquiſitely formed. Quincy.

API'ECE. adv. [from a for each, and piece, or ſhare.] To the part or ſhare of each.

Men, in whoſe mouths at firſt ſounded nothing but mortification, were come to think they might lawfully have ſix or ſeven wives apiece. Hooker.

I have to-night diſpatched ſixteen buſineſſes, a month's length apiece, by an abſtract of ſucceſs. Shakeſpeare.

One copy of this paper may ſerve a dozen of you, which will be leſs than a farthing apiece. Swift.

A'PISH. adj. [from ape.]

1. Having the qualities of an ape; imitative.

Report of faſhions in proud Italy,
Whoſe manners ſtill our tardy, apiſh nation
Limps after, in baſe aukward imitation. Shakeſp.

2. Foppiſh; affected.

Becauſe I cannot flatter, and look fair,
Duck with French nods and apiſh courteſy,
I muſt be held a rancorous enemy. Shakeſp.

3. Silly; trifling; inſignificant.

All this is but apiſh ſophiſtry; and, to give it a name divine and excellent, is abuſive and unjuſt. Glanville.

4. Wanton; playful.

Gloomy ſits the queen;
Till happy chance reverts the cruel ſcene;
And apiſh folly, with her wild reſort
Of wit and jeſt, diſturbs the ſolemn court.

A'PISHLY. adv. [from apiſh.] In an apiſh manner; foppiſhly; conceitedly.

A'PISHNESS n. ſ. [from apiſh.] Mimickry; foppery; inſignificance; playfulneſs.

API'TPAT. adv. [a word formed from the motion.] With quick palpitation.

O there he comes—Ay, my Hector of Troy, welcome my bully, my back: agad my heart has gone apitpat for you. Congreve's Old Batchelor.

APLU'STRE. n. ſ. [Latin.] The ancient enſign carried in ſea veſſels.

The one holds a ſword in her hand, to repreſent the Iliad, as the other has an apluſtre, to repreſent the Odyſſey, or voyage of Ulyſſes. Addiſon.

APO'CALYPSE. n. ſ. [from ἀποκαλύπτω.] Revelation; diſcovery: a word uſed only of the ſacred writings.

O for that warning voice, which he who ſaw
Th' apocalypſe heard cry in heav'n aloud. Milton.

With this throne, of the glory of the Father, compare the throne of the Son of God, as ſeen in the apocalypſe. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

APOCALY'PTICAL. adj. [from apocalypſe.] Concerning revelation; containing revelation.

If we could underſtand that ſcene, at the opening of this apocalyptical theatre, we ſhould find it a repreſentation of the majeſty of our Saviour. Burnet's Theory.

APOCALY'PTICALLY. adv. [from apocalyptical.] In ſuch a manner as to reveal ſomething ſecret.

APO'COPE. n. ſ. [ἀποκοπὴ.] A figure in grammar, when the laſt letter or ſyllable of a word is taken away; as, ingeni for ingenii.

APOCRU'STICK. adj. [ἀποκρύστικα, from ἀποκρούω, to drive.] Remedies endued with a repelling and aſtringent power, by which they prevent the too great afflux of humours to a part diſeaſed. Chambers.

APO'CRYPHA. n. ſ. [from ἀποκρύπτω, to put out of ſight.]

Books whoſe authours are not known. It is uſed for the books appended to the ſacred writings, which, being of doubtful authours, are leſs regarded.

We hold not the apocrypha for ſacred, as we do the holy ſcripture, but for human compoſitions. Hooker.

APO'CRYPHAL. adj. [from apocrypha.]

1. Not canonical; of uncertain authority.

Jerom, who ſaith, that all writings not canonical are apocryphal, uſes not the title apocryphal, as the reſt of the fathers ordinarily have done, whoſe cuſtom is ſo to name, for the moſt part, only ſuch as might not publickly be read or divulged. Hooker.

2. Contained in the apocrypha.

To ſpeak of her in the words of the apocryphal writers, wiſdom is glorious, and never fadeth away. Addiſon.

3. It is ſometimes uſed for an account of uncertain credit.

APO'CRYPHALLY. adv. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainly; not indiſputably.

APO'CRYPHALNESS. n. ſ. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainty; doubtfulneſs of credit.

APODI'CTICAL. adj. [from ἀπόδειξις, evident truth; demonſtration.] Demonſtrative; evident beyond contradiction.

Holding an apodictical knowledge, and an aſſured knowledge of it; verily, to perſuade their apprehenſions otherwiſe, were to make Euclid believe, that there were more than one centre in a circle Brown's Vul. Errours.

We can ſay all at the number three; therefore the world is perfect. Tobit went, and his dog followed him; therefore there is a world in the moon, were an argument as apodictical. Glanville's Scepſis.

APODI'XIS. n. ſ. [ἀποδειξις.] Demonſtration. Dict.

APOGE'ON. } n. ſ. [from ἀπὸ, from, and γὴ, the earth.] A
A'POGEE. } point in the heavens in which the ſun, or a
APOGE'UM. } planet, is at the greateſt diſtance poſſible from the earth in its whole revolution. The ancient aſtronomers regarding the earth as the centre of the ſyſtem, chiefly regarded the apogæon and perigæon, which the moderns, making the ſun the centre, change for the aphelion and perihelion. Chamb.

Thy ſun is in his apogæon placed,
And when it moveth next, muſt needs deſcend. Fairfax.

It is not yet a reed in what time, preciſely, the apogæum abſolveth one degree. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

APOLOGE'TICAL. } adj. [from ἀπολογέω, to defend.] That which APOLOGE'TICK. } is ſaid in defence of any thing or perſon.

I deſign to publiſh an eſſay, the greater part of which is apologetical, for one ſort of chymiſts. Boyle.

APOLOGE'TICALLY. adv. [from apologetical.] In the way of defence or excuſe.

APO'LOGIST. n. ſ. [from To apologize.] He that makes an apology; a pleader in favour of another.

To APO'LOGIZE. v. n. [from apology.]

1. To plead in favour of any perſon or thing.

It will be much more ſeaſonable to reform than apologize or rhetoricate; and therefore it imports thoſe, who dwell ſecure, to look about them. Decay of Piety.

2. It has the particle for before the ſubject of apology.

I ought to apologize for my indiſcretion in the whole undertaking. Wake's Preparation for Death.

The tranſlator needs not apologize for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood. Pope's Preface to Statius.

A'POLOGUE. n. ſ. [ἀπόλογος.] Fable; ſtory contrived to teach ſome moral truth.

An apologue of Æſop is beyond a ſyllogiſm, and proverbs more powerful than demonſtration. Brown's Vul. Er.

Some men are remarked for pleaſantneſs in raillery; others for apologues and appoſite diverting ſtories. Locke.

APO'LOGY. n. ſ. [apologia, Lat. ἀπολογία.]

1. Defence; excuſe. Apology generally ſignifies rather excuſe than vindication, and tends rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, ſometimes unregarded by writers.

In her face excuſe
Came prologue; and apology too prompt;
Which with bland words at will ſhe thus addreſs'd. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

2. It has for before the object of excuſe.

It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem: ſome will think it needs no excuſe, and others will receive none. Dryden.

I ſhall neither trouble the reader, nor myſelf, with any apology for publiſhing of theſe ſermons; for if they be, in any meaſure, truly ſerviceable to the end for which they are deſigned, I do not ſee what apology is neceſſary; and if they be not ſo, I am ſure none can be ſufficient. Tillotſon.

APOMECO'METRY. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ, from, μῆκος, diſtance, and μετρέω, to meaſure.] The art of meaſuring things at a diſtance.

APONEUROSIS. n. ſ. [from ἀπὸ, from, and νεῦρον, a nerve.] An expanſion of a nerve into a membrane.

When a cyſt riſes near the orifice of the artery, it is formed by the aponeuroſis that runs over the veſſel, which becomes exceſſively expanded. Sharp's Surgery.

APO'PHASIS. n. ſ. [Lat. ἀπόφασις, a denying.] A figure in rhetorick, by which the orator, ſpeaking ironically, ſeems to wave what he would plainly inſinuate: as, Neither will I mention thoſe things, which if I ſhould, you notwithſtanding could neither confute nor ſpeak againſt them. Smith's Rhetorick.

APOPHLE'GMATICK. adj. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] That which has the quality of drawing away phlegm.

APOPHLE'GMATISM. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] A medicine of which the intention is to draw phlegm from the blood.

And ſo it is in apophlegmatiſms and gargariſms, that draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon.

APOPHLEGMA'TIZANT. n. ſ. [ἀπὸ and φλέγμα.] Any remedy which cauſes an evacuation of ſerous or mucous humour by the noſtrils, as particular kinds of ſternutatories. Quincy.

A'POPHTHEGM. n. ſ. [ἀπόφθεγμα.] A remarkable ſaying; a valuable maxim uttered on ſome ſudden occaſion.

We may magnify the apophthegms, or reputed replies of wiſdom, dom, whereof many are to be ſeen in Laertius and Lycoſthenes. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

I had a mind to collect and digeſt ſuch obſervations and apophthegms, as tend to the proof of that great aſſertion, All is vanity. Prior.

APO'PHYGE. n. ſ. [ἀποφυγὴ, flight, or eſcape.] Is, in architecture, that part of a column, where it begins to ſpring out of its baſe; and was originally no more than the ring or ferrel, which anciently bound the extremities of wooden pillars, to keep them from ſplitting, and were afterward imitated in ſtone work. We ſometimes call it the ſpring of the column. Chambers.

APO'PHYSIS. n. ſ. [ἀπόφυσις.] The prominent parts of ſome bones; the ſame as proceſs. It differs from an epiphyſis, as that is a continuance of the bone itſelf; whereas the latter is ſomewhat adhering to a bone, and of which it is not properly a part. Quincy.

It is the apophyſis, or head of the os tibiæ, which makes the knee. Wiſeman's Surgery.

APOPLE'CTICAL. adj. [from apop'exy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

We meet with the ſame complaints of gravity in living bodies, when the faculty locomotive ſeems aboliſhed; as may be obſerved in ſupporting perſons inebriated, apoplectical, or in lipothymies and ſwoonings. Brown.

In an apoplectical caſe, he found extravaſated blood, making way from the ventricles of the brain. Derham.

APOPLE'CTICK. adj. [from apoplexy.] Relating to an apoplexy.

A lady was ſeized with an apoplectick fit, which afterward terminated in ſome kind of lethargy. Wiſeman.

A'POPLEX. n. ſ. [See APOPLEXY.] Apoplexy. The laſt ſyllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

Preſent puniſhment purſues his maw,
When ſurfeited and ſwell'd, the peacock raw,
He bears into the bath; whence want of breath,
Repletions, apoplex, inteſtate death. Dryden.

A'POPLEXED. adj. [from apoplex] Seized with an apoplexy.

Senſe, ſure, you have,
Elſe could you not have motion: but ſure that ſenſe
Is apoplex'd. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

APOPLEXY. n. ſ. [ἀπόπληξις.] A ſudden deprivation of all internal and external ſenſation, and of all motion, unleſs of the heart and thorax. The cauſe is generally a repletion, and indicates evacuation, joined with ſtimuli. Quincy.

Apoplexy is a ſudden abolition of all the ſenſes, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the ſtoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal ſpirits through the nerves deſtined for thoſe motions. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, mulled, deaf, ſleepy, inſenſible. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

A fever may take away my reaſon, or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither ſenſe nor underſtanding. Locke.

APORIA. n. ſ. [ἀπορία.] Is a figure in rhetorick, by which the ſpeaker ſhews, that he doubts where to begin for the multitude of matter, or what to ſay in ſome ſtrange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, argue the caſe with himſelf. Thus Cicero ſays, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudently, gave them to a harlot more laſciviouſly, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more preſumptuouſly, I cannot well declare. Smith's Rhetorick.

APORRHOEA n. ſ. [ἀπορροὴ.] Effluvium; emanation; ſomething emitted by another.

The reaſon of this he endeavours to make out by atomical aporrhœas, which paſſing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the ſalve, carry them to the affected part. Glanville.

APOSIOPE'SIS. n. ſ. [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπὸ, after, and σιωπάω, to be ſilent.] A form of ſpeech, by which the ſpeaker, through ſome affection, as ſorrow, baſhfulneſs, fear, anger, or vehemency, breaks off his ſpeech before it be all ended. A figure, when, ſpeaking of a thing, we yet ſeem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the courſe of the ſentence begun is ſo ſtayed, as thereby ſome part of the ſentence not being uttered, may be underſtood; as, I might ſay much more, but modeſtly command ſilence. Smith's Rhetorick.

APO'STASY. n. ſ. [ἀπόστασις.] Departure from what a man has profeſs'd: it is generally applied to religion; ſometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apoſtaſy to be a wilful departure from that ſtate of faith, which any perſon has profeſſed himſelf to hold in the chriſtian church. Ayliffe.

The affable archangel had forewarn'd
Adam, by due example, to beware
Apoſtaſy, by what befel in heav'n
To thoſe apoſtates. Milton.

Vice in us were not only wickedneſs, but apoſtaſy, degenerate wickedneſs. Spratt.

Whoever do give different worſhips, muſt bring in more gods; which is an apoſtaſy from one God. Stillingfleet.

APO'STATE. n. ſ. [apoſtata, Lat. ἀποστάτης.] One that has forſaken his profeſſion; generally applied to one that has left his religion.

The angels, for diſobedience, thou haſt reſerved to a miſerable immortality; but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apoſtate from thee and goodneſs, thou haſt given a Saviour. Rogers's Sermons.

Apoſtates in point of faith, are, according to the civil law, ſubject unto all puniſhments ordained againſt hereticks. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

APOSTA'TICAL. adj. [from apoſtate.] After the manner of an apoſtate.

To APO'STATIZE. v. n. [from apoſtate.] To forſake one's profeſſion: it is commonly uſed of one who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith; not becauſe they muſt not look upon a woman to luſt after her, but becauſe they are reſtrained from the perpetration of their luſts. If wanton glances, and libidinous thoughts, had been permitted by the goſpel, they would have apoſtatized nevertheleſs. Bentley.

To APO'STEMATE. v. n. [from apoſteme.] To become an apoſteme; to ſwell and corrupt into matter.

There is care to be taken in abſceſſes of the breaſt and belly, in danger of breaking inwards; yet, by opening theſe too ſoon, they ſometimes apoſtemate again, and become crude. Wiſeman.

APOSTEMA'TION. n. ſ. [from apoſtemate.] The formation of an apoſteme; the gathering of a hollow purulent tumour.

Nothing can be more admirable than the many ways nature hath provided for preventing, or curing of fevers; as, vomitings, apoſtemations, ſalivations, &c. Grew.

A'POSTEME. } n. ſ. [ἀπόστημα.] A hollow ſwelling, filled with A'POSTUME. } purulent matter; an abſceſs.

With equal propriety we may affirm, that ulcers of the lungs, or apoſtemes of the brain, do happen only in the left ſide. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The opening of apoſtemes, before the ſuppuration be perfected, weakeneth the heat, and renders them crude. Wiſeman.

APO'STLE. n. ſ. [apoſtolus, Lat. ἀπόστολος.] A perſon ſent with mandates by another: it is particularly applied to them whom our Saviour deputed to preach the goſpel.

But all his mind is bent to holineſs;
His champions are the prophets and apoſtles. Shakeſp.

I am far from pretending infallibility; that would be to erect myſelf into an apoſtle: a preſumption in any one that cannot confirm what he ſays by miracles. Locke.

We know but a ſmall part of the notion of an apoſtle, by knowing barely that he is ſent forth. Watts.

APO'STLESHIP. n. ſ. [from apoſtle.] The office or dignity of an apoſtle.

Where, becauſe faith is in too low degree,
I thought it ſome apoſtleſhip in me
To ſpeak things, which by faith alone I ſee. Donne.

God hath ordered it, that St. Paul hath writ epiſtles; which are all confined within the buſineſs of his apoſtleſhip; and ſo contain nothing but points of chriſtian inſtruction. Locke's Eſſay on St. Paul's Epiſtles.

APOSTO'LICAL. adj. [from apoſtolick.] Delivered or taught by the apoſtles; belonging to the apoſtles.

They acknowledged not, that the church keeps any thing as apoſtolical, which is not found in the apoſtles writings, in what other records ſoever it be found. Hooker.

Declare yourſelf for that church, which is founded upon ſcripture, reaſon, apoſtolical practice and antiquity. Hooker.

APOSTO'LICALLY. adv. [from apoſtolical.] In the manner of the apoſtles.

APOSTO'LICALNESS. n. ſ. [from apoſtolical.] The quality of relating to the apoſtles; apoſtolical authority.

APOSTO'LICK. adj. [from apoſtle.] Taught by the apoſtles; belonging to an apoſtle.

Their oppoſitions in maintenance of publick ſuperſtition againſt apoſtolick endeavours, were vain and frivolous. Hooker.

Or where did I at ſure tradition ſtrike,
Provided ſtill it were apoſtolick? Dryden.

APO'STROPHE. n. ſ. [ἀποστροφὴ, from ἀπὸ, from, and στρέφω, to turn.]

1. In rhetorick, a diverſion of ſpeech to another perſon, than the ſpeech appointed did intend or require; or it is a turning of the ſpeech from one perſon to another, many times abruptly. A figure when we break off the courſe of our ſpeech, and ſpeak to ſome new perſon, preſent or abſent, as to the people or witneſſes, when it was before directed to the judges, or opponent. This diverſion of ſpeech is made many ways. 1. To God. 2. To Angels. 3. To men in their ſeveral ranks, whether abſent or preſent, dead or alive. 4. To the adverſary. 5. To the heavenly bodies and meteors. 6. To the earth and things in it. 7. To the ſea and things in it. 8. To beaſts, birds, and fiſhes. 9. To inanimate things. Smith.

2. In grammar, the contraction of a word by the uſe of a comma; as, tho' for though; rep', for reputation

Many laudable attempts have been made, by abbreviating words with apoſtrophes; and by lopping polyſyllables, leaving one or two words at moſt. Swift.

To APO'STROPHIZE. v. n. [from apoſtrophe.] To addreſs by an apoſtrophe.

There is a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apoſtrophizing Eumæus,

Lawyers, and speaking of him in the second person, it is generally applied only to men of account. Pope.

APOSTEME. n. f. See APOSTEME. [This word is properly apostema.] A hollow tumour filled with purulent matter.

How an apostume in the mesentery breaking, causes a consumption of the parts, is apparent Harvey.

TO APOSTEME. v. n. [from apostume.] To apostemate. Dict.

APOTHECARY. n. f. [apotheca, Lat. a repository.] A man whose business it is to keep medicines for sale.

Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination. Shakespeare.

They have no other doctor but the sun and fresh air, and their death a one as never sends them to the apothecary. South.

Wand'ring in the dark,
Physicians, for the cure, have found the bark;
They, bidding for relief of human kind,
With charged sight some remedies may find;
The apothecary-train is wholly blind. } Dryd.

APOPHTHEGM. n. f. [properly apophthegm; which see.] A remarkable saying.

By frequent conversing with him, and scattering short apophthegms, and little pleasant stories, and making useful applications of them, his son was, in his infancy, taught to abhor vanity and vice as monsters. Walton's Life of Sanderson.

APOTHEOSIS. n. f. [from ἀπὸ and θεὸς.] Deification; the rite of adding any one to the number of gods.

As if it could be graved and painted omnipotent, or the nails and the hammer could give it an apotheosis. South.

Adds the prince of his celestial line,
An apotheosis, and rites divine. Garth.

APOTOME. n. f. [from ἀποτέμνω, to cut off.]

1. In mathematicks, the remainder or difference of two incommensurable quantities.
2. In musick, it is the part remaining of an entire tone, after a greater semitone has been taken from it. The proportion in numbers of the apotome, is that of 2048 to 2187. The Greeks thought that the greater tone could not be divided into two equal parts; for which reason they called the first part ἀποτομὴ and the other λῆμμα. Chambers.

APOZEM. n. f. [ἀπὸ, from, and ζέω, to boil.] A decoction; an infusion made by boiling ingredients.

During this evacuation, he took opening broths and apozems. Wiseman.

TO APPA'L. v. a. [appalir, Fr. It might more properly have been written appale.] To fright; to strike with sudden fear; to depress; to discourage.

Whilst she spake, her great words did appal
My feeble courage, and my heart oppress,
That yet I quake and tremble over all. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy,
Thou dreadful Ajax; that th' appalled air
May pierce the head of thy great combatant. Shakesp.

The house of peers was somewhat appalled at this alarum; but took time to consider of it till next day. Clarendon.

Does neither rage inflame, nor fear appal,
Nor the black fear of death that saddens all. Pope.

The monster curls
His flaming crest, all other thirst appall'd,
Or shiv'ring flies, or choak'd at distance stands. Thomson.

APPA'LEMENT. n. f. [from appal.] Depression; discouragement; impression of fear.

As the furious slaughter of them was a great discouragement and appalement to the rest. Bacon's Henry VII.

APPANAGE. n. f. [appanagium, low Latin; probably from panis, bread.] Lands set apart by princes for the maintenance of their younger children.

He became suitor for the earldom of Chester, a kind of appanage to Wales, and using to go to the king's son. Bacon.

Had he thought it fit,
That wealth should be the appannage of wit,
The God of light could ne'er have been so blind,
To deal it to the worst of human kind. Swift.

APPARA'TUS. n. f. [Latin.] Things provided as means to any certain end, as the tools of a trade; the furniture of a house; ammunition for war; equipage; show.

There is an apparatus of things previous, to be adjusted before I come to the calculation itself. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Ourselves are easily provided for; it is nothing but the circumstantials, the apparatus or equipage of human life, that costs so much. Pope's Letters to Gay.

APPA'REL. n. f. It has no plural. [appareil, Fr.]

1. Dress; vesture.

I cannot cog and say, that thou art this and that, like many of those lisping hawthorn buds, that come like women in mens apparel, and smell like Bucklersbury in simpling time. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. External habiliments.

Our late burnt London, in apparel new,
Shook off her ashes to have treated you. Waller.

At publick devotion, his resigned carriage made religion appear in the natural apparel of simplicity. Tatler, N° 54.

TO APPA'REL. v. a. [from apparel, the noun.]

1. To dress; to cloath.

With such robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. 2 Sam. xiii. 18.

2. To adorn with dress.

She did apparel her apparel, and with the preciousness of her body made it most sumptuous. Sidney.

3. To cover or deck, as with dress.

You may have trees apparelled with flowers, by boring holes in them, and putting into them earth, and setting seeds of violets. Bacon.

Shelves, and rocks, and precipices, and gulphs, being apparelled with a verdure of plants, would resemble mountains and valleys. Bentley's Sermons.

APPA'RENT. adj. [apparent, Fr. apparens, Lat.]

1. Plain; indubitable.

The main principles of reason are in themselves apparent. For to make nothing evident of itself unto man's understanding, were to make away all possibility of knowing any thing. Hooker, b. i.

2. Seeming; in appearance; not real.

The perception intellective often corrects the report of phantasy, as in the apparent bigness of the sun, the apparent crookedness of the staff in air and water. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Visible; in opposition to secret.

What secret imaginations we entertained is known to God: this is apparent, that we have not behaved ourselves, as if we preserved a grateful remembrance of his mercies. Atterbury.

The outward and apparent sanctity of actions should flow from purity of heart. Rogers.

4. Open; discoverable; known.

As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion ought to be prevented. Shakesp. Richard III.

5. Certain; not presumptive.

He is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown. Shakesp. Henry VI.

APPA'RENT. n. f. Eliptically used for heir apparent.

This ring
Deliver them, and your appeal to us
There make before them. Shakespeare.

Our reason prompts us to a future state,
The last appeal from fortune and from fate,
Where God's all righteous ways will be declar'd. Dryden.

There are distributers of justice, from whom there lies an appeal to the prince. Addison.

2. In the common law.

An accusation; which is a lawful declaration of another man's crime before a competent judge, by one that sets his name to the declaration, and undertakes to prove it, upon the penalty that may ensue of the contrary; more commonly used for the private accusation of a murderer, by a party who had interest in the party murdered, and of any felon, by one of his accomplices in the fact. Cowell.

The duke's unjust,
Thus to retort your manifest appeal,
And put your trial in the villain's mouth,
Which here you come to accuse. Shakesp.

Hast thou, according to thy oath and bond,
Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son,
Here to make good the boist'rous late appeal
Against the duke of Norfolk? Shakespeare.

3. A summons to answer a charge.

Nor shall the sacred character of king
Be urg'd to shield me from thy bold appeal,
If I have injur'd thee, that makes us equal. Dryden.

A'QUA. n. ſ. [Latin.] A word ſignifying water, very much uſed in chymical writings.

AQUA FORTIS. [Latin.] A corroſive liquor made by diſtilling purified nitre with calcined vitriol, or rectified oil of vitriol in a ſtrong heat: the liquor, which riſes in fumes red as blood, being collected, is the ſpirit of nitre or aqua fortis; which ſerves as a menſtruum for diſſolving of ſilver, and all other metals, except gold. But if ſea ſalt, or ſal ammoniack, be added to aqua fortis, it commences aqua regia, and will then diſſolve no metal but gold. Aqua fortis is commonly held to have been invented about the year 1300; though others will have it to have been known in the time of Moſes. It is ſerviceable to refiners, in ſeparating ſilver from gold and copper; to the workers in moſaic, for ſtaining and colouring their woods; to dyers, in their colours, particularly ſcarlet; and to other artiſts, for colouring bone and ivory. With aqua fortis bookbinders marble the covers of books, and diamond cutters ſeparate diamonds from metalline powders. It is alſo uſed in etching copper or braſs plates. Chambers.
The diſſolving of ſilver in aqua fortis, and gold in aqua regia, and not vice verſâ, would not be difficult to know. Locke.

AQUA MARINA, of the Italian lapidaries, is of a ſea or bluiſh green. This ſtone ſeems to me to be the beryllus of Pliny. Woodward's Meth. of Foſſils.

AQUA MIRABILIS. [Latin.] The wonderful water, is prepared of cloves, galangals, cubebs, mace, cardomums, nutmegs, ginger, and ſpirit of wine, digeſted twenty four hours, then diſtilled. It is a good and agreeable cordial.

AQUA REGIA, or AQUA REGALIS. [Latin.] An acid corroſive ſpirit or water, ſo called becauſe it ſerves as a menſtruum to diſſolve gold, commonly eſteemed the king of metals. Its baſis, or eſſential ingredient, is common ſea ſalt, the only ſalt in nature which will operate on gold. It is commonly prepared by mixing common ſea ſalt, or ſal ammoniack, or the ſpirit of them, with ſpirit of nitre, or common aqua fortis. Chambers.
He adds to his complex idea of gold, that of fixedneſs or ſolubility in aqua regia. Locke.

AQUA VITÆ. [Latin.] It is commonly underſtood of what is otherwiſe called brandy, or ſpirit of wine, either ſimple or prepared with aromaticks. But ſome appropriate the term brandy to what is procured from wine, or the grape: aqua vitæ, to that drawn after the ſame manner from malt. Chambers.
I will rather truſt a Fleming with my butter, parſon Hugh the Welchman with my cheeſe, an Iriſhman with my aqua vitæ bottle, or a thief to walk with my ambling gelding, than my wife with herſelf. Shakeſpeare.

AQUA'TICK. adj. [aquaticus, Lat. from aqua, water.]
1. That which inhabits the water.
The vaſt variety of worms found in animals, as well terreſtrial as aquatick, are taken into their bodies by meats and drinks. Ray on the Creation.
Brutes may be conſidered as either aerial, terreſtrial, aquatick, or amphibious. Aquatick are thoſe whoſe conſtant abode is upon the water. Locke.

ANCHAIOLO'GICK. adj. [from archaiology.] Relating to a diſcourſe on antiquity.

A'RCHAISM. n. ſ. [ἀρχαισμὸς.] An ancient phraſe, or mode of expreſſion.
I ſhall never uſe archaiſms, like Milton. Watts.

A'RCHED. participial adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.
I ſee how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou haſt the right arched bent of the brow. Shakeſpeare.

A'RCHER. n. ſ. [archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that ſhoots with a bow; he that carries a bow in battle.
Fight, gentlemen of England; fight, bold yeomen!
Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head:
Spur your proud horſes hard. Shakeſpeare.
This Cupid is no longer an archer, his glory ſhall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Shakeſpeare.
Thou frequent bring'ſt the ſmitten deer;
For ſeldom, archers ſay, thy arrows err. Prior.

A'RCHERY. n. ſ. [from archer.]
1. The uſe of the bow.
Among the Engliſh artillery, archery challengeth the preeminence, as peculiar to our nation. Camden.

2. The

2. The act of shooting with the bow.

Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye! Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dr.

3. The art of an archer.

Bless seraphims shall leave their quire,
And turn love's soldiers upon thee,
To exercise their archery. Crashaw's Steps to Temple.

A'RCHES-COURT. n. s. from arches and court.] The chief and most ancient consistory that belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, for the debating of spiritual causes, so called from Bow Church in London, where it is kept, whose top is raised of stone-pillars, built arch-wise. The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, because with this office is commonly joined a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the bishop of London, and belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury; of which the parish of Bow is one. Some others say, that he was first called dean of the arches, because the official to the archbishop, the dean of the arches, was his substitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The jurisdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: so that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made. Cowell.

A'RCHETYPE. n. s. [archetypum, Lat.] The original of which any resemblance is made.

Our souls, though they might have perceived images themselves by simple sense; yet it seems inconceivable, how they should apprehend their archetypes. Glanville's Scepsis Scientifica.

As a man, a tree, are the outward objects of our perception, and the outward archetypes or patterns of our ideas; so our sensations of hunger, cold, are also inward archetypes or patterns of our ideas. But the notions or pictures of these things, as they are in the mind, are the ideas. Watts's Logick.

ARCHE'TYPAL. adj. [archetypus, Lat.] Original; being a pattern from which copies are made.

Through contemplation's opticks I have seen
Him who is fairer than the sons of men:
The source of good, the light archetypal. Norris's Miscell.

ARCHE'US n. s. [probably from ἄρχος.] A word by which Paracelsus seems to have meant a power that presides over the animal œconomy, distinct from the rational soul.

ARCHIDIA'CONAL. adj. [from archidiaconus, Lat. an archdeacon.] Belonging to an archdeacon; as, this offence is liable to be censured in an archidiaconal visitation.

ARCHIEPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from archiepiscopus, Lat. an archbishop.] Belonging to an archbishop; as, Canterbury is an archiepiscopal see; the suffragans are subject to archiepiscopal jurisdiction.

A'RCHITECT. n. s. [architectus, Lat.]

1. A professor of the art of building.

The architect's glory consists in the designment and idea of the work; his ambition should be to make the form triumph over the matter. Wotton.

2. A contriver of a building; a builder.

The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd, and the work some praise,
And some the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n, by many a tow'red structure high,
Where sceptered angels held their residence,
And sat as princes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. The contriver or former of any compound body.

This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated. Ray on the Creation.

4. The contriver of any thing.

An irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes. Shak. Tit. Andron.

ARCHITE'CTIVE. adj. [from architect.] That performs the work of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the last mentioned, be furnished with architective materials? Derham's Physico-Theology.

ARCHITECTO'NICK. adj. [from ἄρχος, chief, and τέκτων, an artificer.] That which has the power or skill of an architect; that which can build or form any thing.

To say that some more fine part of either, or all the hypostatical principle, is the architect of this elaborate structure, is to give occasion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick spirit, and what agent made so skilful and happy a mixture. Boyle's Scept. Chym.

ARCHITE'CTURE. n. s. [architectura, Lat.]

1. The art or science of building.

Architecture is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification; and naval architecture, which, besides building of ships and vessels, includes also ports, moles, docks, &c. Some think the Tyrians were the first improvers of architecture; but others contend that the rules of this art were delivered by God himself to Solomon, from whom the Tyrians had their instruction, which they afterwards communicated to the Egyptians; these to the Grecians, and these again to the Romans. Under Augustus architecture arrived to its greatest glory; but it afterwards dwindled by degrees, and at last fell with the western empire, in the fifth century, when the Vandals destroyed all the most beautiful monuments of antiquity; and a new manner of building took its rise called the Gothick, coarse, ardets, and massive. Of the same kind was the Arabesk, Mosaick or Moorish architecture, brought from the South by the Moors and Saracens. The architects of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, who had some knowledge of sculpture, seemed to make perfection consist altogether in the delicacy and multitude of ornaments, which they frequently bestowed on their buildings without any conduct or taste. In the two last centuries, the architects of Italy and France were wholly bent upon retrieving the primitive simplicity and beauty of ancient architecture, in which they did not fail of success. This art is divided into five orders; the Tuscan, Dorick, Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite; which took their rise from the different proportions that the different kinds of buildings rendered necessary, according to the bulk, strength, delicacy, richness, or simplicity required. Chambers.

Our fathers next in architecture skill'd,
Cities for use, and forts for safety build:
Then palaces and lofty domes arose,
These for devotion, and for pleasure those. Blackm. Creat.

2. The effect or performance of the science of building.

The formation of the first earth being a piece of divine architecture, ascribed to a particular providence. Burnet's Theory.

A'RCHITRAVE. n. s. [from ἀρχὴ, chief, and trabs, Lat. a beam; because it is supposed to represent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the lowest member of the entablature. This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is sometimes called the reason piece, or master beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloisters, &c. In chimnies it is called the mantle piece; and over jambs of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron. Builders Dict.

The materials laid over this pillar were of wood; through the lightness whereof the architrave could not suffer, nor the column itself, being so substantial. Wotton's Architecture.

Westward a pompous frontispiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold. Pope.

A'RCHIVES. n. s. without a singular. [archiva, Lat.] The places where records or ancient writings are kept. It is perhaps sometimes used for the writings themselves.

Though we think our words vanish with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witnesses either for or against us. Government of the Tongue.

I shall now only look a little into the Mosaick archives, to observe what they furnish us with upon this subject. Woodward.

A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wise.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, so called ab arcuata ecclesia, or from Bow church in London, which is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, by reason of the steeple or clochier thereof, raised at the top with stone pillars in fashion of a bow bent archwise. Ayliffe's Par.

ARCI'TENENT. adj. [arcitenens, Lat.] Bow-bearing. Dict.

ARCTA'TION. n. s. [from arcto, to straighten.] Straightening; confinement to a narrower compass.

A'RCTICK. n. s. [from Ἄρκτος, the northern constellation.] Northern; lying under the Arctos, or bear. See ARTICK.

Ever during snows, perpetual shades
Of darkness, would congeal their livid blood,
Did not the arctick tract spontaneous yield
A cheering purple berry big with wine. Philips.

A'RCTICK Circle. See CIRCLE.

A'RCUATE. adj. [arcuatus, Lat.] Bent in the form of an arch.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion of species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines; but sounds that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the carneous fibres are inflected and arcuate. Ray on Creation.

A'RCUATILE, adj. [from arcuate.] Bent; inflected. Dict.

ARCUA'TION. n. s. [from arcuate.]

1. The act of bending any thing; incurvation.
2. The state of being bent; curvity, or crookedness.
3. [In gardening.] The method of raising by layers such trees as cannot be raised from seed, or that bear no seed, as the elm, lime, alder, willow; and is so called from bending down to the ground the branches which spring from the offsets or stools after they are planted. Chambers.

A'RCUATURE. n. s. [arcuatura, low Latin.] The bending or curvature of an arch. Dict.

ARCUBA'LISTER. n. s. [from arcus, a bow, and balista, an engine.] A crossbow man.

King John was espied by a very good arcubalister, who said, that he would soon dispatch the cruel tyrant. God forbid, vile varlet, varlet, quoth the earl, that we ſhould procure the death of the holy one of God. Camden's Remains.

ARD. [Saxon.] Signifies natural diſpoſition; as, Goddard is a divine temper; Reinard, a ſincere temper; Giffard, a bountiful and liberal diſpoſition; Bernard, filial affection, &c. Gibſon's Camden.

A'RDENCY. n. ſ. [from ardent.] Ardour; eagerneſs; warmth of affection.

Accepted they ſhall be, if qualified with humility, and ardency and preſeverance, ſo far as concerns the end immediate to them. Hammond's Pract. Catechiſm.

The ineffable happineſs of our dear Redeemer muſt needs bring an increaſe to ours, commenſurate to the ardency of our love for him. Boyle.

A'RDENT. adj. [ardens, Lat. burning.]

1. Hot; burning; fiery.

Chymiſts obſerve, that vegetables, as lavender, rue, marjoram, &c. diſtilled before fermentation, yield oils without any burning ſpirits; but, after fermentation, yield ardent ſpirits without oils; which ſhews, that their oil is, by fermentation, converted into ſpirit. Newton's Opticks.

2. Fierce; vehement.

A knight of ſwarthy face,
High on a cole-black ſteed purſu'd the chace;
With flaſhing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd. Dryden.

3. Paſſionate; affectionate: uſed generally of deſire.

Another nymph with fatal pow'r may riſe,
To damp the ſinking beams of Cælia's eyes;
With haughty pride may hear her charms confeſt,
And ſcorn the ardent vows that I have bleſt. Prior.

A'RDENTLY. adv. [from ardent.] Eagerly; affectionately.

With true zeal may our hearts be moſt ardently inflamed to our religion. Spratt's Sermons.

A'RDOUR. n. ſ. [ardor, Lat. heat.]

1. Heat.

2. Heat of affection, as love, deſire, courage.

Joy, like a ray of the ſun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickneſs, when it rebounds upon a man from the breaſt of his friend. South.

The ſoldiers ſhout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour, inly pleas'd to ſee
His hoſt. Dryden.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd,
And the vain ardours of our love reſtrain'd. Pope's Odyſſey.

3. The perſon ardent or bright. This is only uſed by Milton.

Nor delay'd the winged ſaint,
After his charge receiv'd; but from among
Thouſand celeſtial ardours, where he ſtood
Veil'd with his gorgeous wings, up-ſpringing light,
Flew thro' the midſt of heav'n. Paradiſe Loſt.

ARDU'ITY. n. ſ. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty. Dict.

A'RDUOUS. adj. [arduus, Lat.]

1. Lofty; hard to climb.

High on Parnaſſus' top her ſons ſhe ſhow'd,
And pointed out thoſe arduous paths they trod. Pope.

2. Difficult.

It was a means to bring him up in the ſchool of arts and policy, and ſo to fit him for that great and arduous employment that God deſigned him to. South.

A'RDUOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

ARE. The third perſon plural of the preſent tenſe of the verb to be; as, young men are raſh, old are cautious.

ARE, or Alamire. The loweſt note but one in Guido's ſcale of muſick.

Gamut I am, the ground of all accord,
Are to plead Hortenſio's paſſion;
B mi Bianca take him for thy lord,
C faut, that loves with all affection. Shakeſpeare.

A'REA. n. ſ. [Latin.]

1. The ſurface contained between any lines or boundaries.

The area of a triangle is found by knowing the height and the baſe. Watts's Logick.

2. Any open ſurface, as the floor of a room; the open part of a church; the vacant part or ſtage of an amphitheatre. An incloſed place, as liſts, or a bowling-green, or graſs-plot.

Let us conceive a floor or area of goodly length, with the breadth ſomewhat more than half the longitude. Wotton.

The Alban lake is of an oval figure, and, by reaſon of the high mountains that encompaſs it, looks like the area of ſome vaſt amphitheatre. Addiſon on Italy.

In areas vary'd with Moſaic art,
Some whirl the diſk, and ſome the jav'lin dart. Pope's Odyſſ.

To ARE'AD, or AREED. v. a. [aneban, Sax. to counſel.] To adviſe; to direct.

Knights and ladies gentle deeds,
Whoſe praiſes having ſlept in ſilence long,
Me, all too meane, the ſacred muſe areeds
To blazon broad. Fairy Queen.

But mark what I aread thee now: avant,
Fly thither whence thou fled'ſt! If from this hour
Within theſe hallow'd limits thou appear
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd. Paradiſe Loſt.

AREFAC'TION. n. ſ. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] The ſtate of growing dry; the act of drying.

From them, and their motions, principally, proceed arefaction, and moſt of the effects of nature. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

To A'REFY. v. a. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] To dry; to exhale moiſture.

Heat drieth bodies that do eaſily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, clay, &c. and ſo doth time or age arefy, as in the ſame bodies, &c. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

A'RGOSY. n. ſ. [derived by Pope from Argo, the name of Jaſon's ſhip.] A large veſſel for merchandiſe; a carrack.

Your mind is toſſing on the ocean;
There where your argoſies with portly ſail,
Like ſigniors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or as it were the pageants of the ſea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakeſ. Merch. of Venice.

To A'RGUE. v. n. [arguo, Lat.]

1. To reaſon; to offer reaſons.

I know your majeſty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her what
A woman of leſs place might aſk by law;
Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her. Shakeſp. Hen. VIII.

Publick arguing oft ſerves not only to exaſperate the minds, but to whet the wits of hereticks. Decay of Piety.

An idea of motion, not paſſing on, would perplex any one, who ſhould argue from ſuch an idea. Locke.

2. To perſuade by argument.

It is a ſort of poetical logick which I would make uſe of, to argue you into a protection of this play. Congr. Ded. to Old Bat.

3. To diſpute; with the particles with or againſt before the opponent, and againſt before the thing oppoſed.

Why do chriſtians, of ſeveral perſuaſions, ſo fiercely argue againſt the ſalvability of each other? Decay of Piety.

He that by often arguing againſt his own ſenſe, impoſes falſehoods on others, is not far from believing himſelf. Locke.

I do not ſee how they can argue with any one, without ſetting down ſtrict boundaries. Locke.

To A'RGUE. v. a.

1. To prove any thing by argument.

If the world's age and death be argued well,
By the ſun's fall, which now toward's earth doth bend,
Then we might fear that virtue, ſince ſhe fell
So low as woman, ſhould be near her end. Donne.

2. To debate any queſtion; as, to argue a cauſe.

3. To prove, as an argument.

So many laws argue ſo many ſins
Among them: how can God with ſuch reſide? Parad. Loſt.

It argues diſtemper of the mind as well as of the body, when a man is continually teſſing from one ſide to the other. South.

This argues a virtue and diſpoſition in thoſe ſides of the rays, which anſwers to that virtue and diſpoſition of the cryſtal. Newton's Opicks.

4. To charge with, as a crime; with of.

I have pleaded guilty to all thoughts and expreſſions of mine, which can be truly argued of obſcenity, profaneneſs, or immorality, and retract them. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The accidents are not the ſame, which would have argued him of a ſervile copying, and total barrenneſs of invention; yet the faſts were the ſame. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

ARGUER. n. ſ. [from argue.] A reaſoner; a diſputer; a controverſiſt.

Men are aſhamed to be profelytes to a weak arguer, as thinking they muſt part with their reputation as well as their ſin. Decay of Piety.

ARGUMENT. n. ſ. [argumentum, Lat.]

1. A reaſon alleged for or againſt any thing.

We ſometimes ſee, on our theatres, vice rewarded, at leaſt unpuniſhed; yet it ought not to be an argument againſt the art. Dryden's Preface to Tyrannick Love.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as that thing is capable of ſuppoſing it were; we ought not in reaſon to make any doubt of the exiſtence of that thing. Tillotſon's Preface.

And thus we have our author's two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.

2. The ſubject of any diſcourſe or writing.

That ſhe who ev'n but now was your beſt object,
Your praiſe's argument, balm of your age,
Deareſt and beſt. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

To the height of this great argument
I may aſſert eternal providence,
And juſtify the ways of God to man. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Sad taſk! yet argument
Not leſs, but more heroick than the wrath
Of ſtern Achilles. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

A much longer diſcourſe my argument requires; your mercies diſpoſitions a much ſhorter. Spratt's Sermons.

3. The contents of any work ſummed up by way of abſtract.

The argument of the work, that is, its principal action, the œconomy and diſpoſition of it, are the things which diſtinguiſh copies from originals. Dryden's Æneid, Preface.

4. A controverſy.

This day, in argument upon a caſe,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerſet and me. Sh. H. VI.

If the idea be not agreed on betwixt the ſpeaker and hearer, the argument is not about things, but names. Locke.

It was much like an argument that fell out laſt night, where each of us fell in praiſe of our country miſtreſſes. Sh. Cymbeline.

5. It has ſometimes the particle to before the thing to be proved, but generally for.

The beſt moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience itſelf. Tillotſon.

This, before that revelation had enlightened the world, was the only reaſon argument for a future ſtate. Atterbury's Sermons.

6. [In aſtronomy.] An arch by which we ſeek another unknown arch, proportional to the firſt. Chambers.

ARGUMENTAL. adj. [from argument.] Belonging to argument; reaſoning.

Afflicted ſenſe thou kindly doſt ſet free,
Oppreſs'd with argumental tyranny,
And routed reaſon finds a ſafe retreat in thee. Pope.

ARGUMENTA'TION. n. ſ. [from argument.] Reaſoning; the act of reaſoning.

Argumentation is that operation of the mind, whereby we infer one propoſition from two or more propoſitions premiſed. Or it is the drawing a concluſion, which before was unknown, or doubtful, from ſome propoſitions more known and evident; ſo when we have judged that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think, we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not matter. Watts's Logick.

I ſuppoſe it is no ill topick of argumentation, to ſhew the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of reſpect. South.

His thoughts muſt be maſculine, full of argumentation, and conſequently warm. Dryden.

It is certain, that the whole courſe of his argumentation comes to one thing. Addiſon's Freeholder.

ARGUMENTATIVE, adj. [from argument.] Conſiſting of argument; containing argument.

This omiſſion, conſidering the bounds within which the argumentative part of my diſcourſe was confined, I could not avoid. Atterbury's Preface to his Sermons.

He's going to his mother's cloſet;
Behind the arras I'll convey myſelf,
To hear the proceſs. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

As he ſhall paſs the galleries, I'll place
A guard behind the arras. Denham's Sophy.

ARRA'UGHT. v. a. [a word uſed by Spenſer in the preter tenſe, of which I have not found the preſent, but ſuppoſe he derived arreach from arracher, Fr.] Seized by violence.

His ambitious ſons unto them twain
Arraught the rule, and from their father drew. Fairy Q.

ARRA'Y. n. ſ. [arroy, Fr. arreo, Sp. arredo, Ital. from reye, Teut. order. It was adopted into the middle Latin, mille hominum arraiatum, Knighton.]

1. Order, chiefly of war.

The earl eſpying them ſcattered near the army, ſent one to command them to their array. Hayward.

Wer't thou fought to deeds,
That might require th' array of war, thy ſkill
Of conduct would be ſuch, that all the world
Could not ſuſtain thy prowеſs. Milton.

A gen'ral ſets his army in array
In vain, unleſs he fight and win the day. Denham.

2. Dreſs.

A rich throne, as bright as ſunny day,
On which there ſat moſt brave embelliſhed
With royal robes, and gorgeous array,
A maiden queen. Fairy Queen.

In this remembrance, Emily ere day
Aroſe, and dreſs'd herſelf in rich array;
Freſh as the month, and as the morning fair. Dryd.

3. In law. Array, of the Fr. array, i. e. ordo, the ranking or ſetting forth of a jury or inqueſt of men impannelled upon a cauſe. Thence is the verb to array a pannel, that is, to ſet forth one by another the men impannelled. Cowel.

To ARRA'Y. v. a. [arreyer, old Fr.]

1. To put in order.
2. To deck; to dreſs; to adorn the perſon; with the particle with.

Deck thyſelf now with majeſty and excellency, and array thyſelf with glory and beauty. Job.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in higheſt heav'n, array'd in gold
Empyreal. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

One veſt array'd the corps, and one they ſpread
O'er his clos'd eyes, and wrapp'd around his head. Dryd.

3. In law. See ARRAY in law.

ARRA'YERS. n. ſ. [from array.] Officers who anciently had the care of ſeeing the ſoldiers duly appointed in their armour. Cowel.

ARRE'AR. adv. [arriere, Fr. behind.] Behind. This is the primitive ſignification of the word, which, though not now in uſe, ſeems to be retained by Spenſer. See REAR.

To leave with ſpeed Atlanta ſwift arrear,
Through foreſts wild and unfrequented land,
To chaſe the lion, boar, or rugged bear. Fairy Queen.

ARRE'AR. n. ſ. That which remains behind unpaid, though due. See ARREARAGE.

His boon is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But loſt the prize; th' arrears are yet to pay. Dryden.

If a tenant run away in arrear of ſome rent, the land remains; that cannot be carried away, or loſt. Locke.

It will comfort our grand-children, when they ſee a few rags hung up in Weſtminſter-hall, which coſt an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boaſting as beggars do, that their grandfathers were rich. Swift.

ARRE'ARAGE. n. ſ. a word now little uſed. [from arriere, Fr. behind.]

Arrearage is the remainder of an account, or a ſum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant; or, more generally, any money unpaid at the due time, as arrearage of rent. Cowel.

Paget ſet forth the king of England's title to his debts and penſion from the French king; with all arrearages. Hayward.

I think,
He'll grant the tribute, ſend th' arrearages,
Ere look upon our Romans. Shakeſp.

The old arrearages under which that crown had long groaned, being defrayed, he hath brought Lurana to uphold and maintain herſelf. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

ARRE'ARANCE. n. ſ. The ſame with arrear. See ARREAR. D.

ARRENTA'TION. n. ſ. [from arrendar, Span. to farm.] Is, in the foreſt law, the licenſing an owner of lands in the foreſt, to incloſe them with a low hedge and ſmall ditch, in conſideration of a yearly rent. Dict.

ARREPTI'TIOUS. adj. [arreptus, Lat.]

1. Snatched away.
2. Crept in privily. Dict.

ARRE'ST. n. ſ. [from arreſter, Fr. to ſtop.]

1. In law.

A ſtop or ſtay; as, a man apprehended for debt, is ſaid to be arreſted. To plead in arreſt of judgment, is to ſhew cauſe why judgment ſhould be ſtayed, though the verdict of the twelve be paſſed. To plead in arreſt of taking the inqueſt upon the former iſſue, is to ſhew cauſe why an inqueſt ſhould not be taken. An arreſt is a certain reſtraint of a man's perſon, depriving him of his own will, and binding it to become obedient to the will of the law, and may be called the beginning of impriſonment. Cowel.

If I could ſpeak ſo wiſely under an arreſt, I would ſend for my creditors; yet I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of impriſonment. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

2. Any caption.

To the rich man, who had promiſed himſelf eaſe for many years, it was a ſad arreſt, that his ſoul was ſurpriſed the firſt night. Taylor's Holy Living.

3. A

3. A ſtop.

The ſtop and arreſt of the air ſheweth, that the air hath little appetite of aſcending. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory, N° 24.

To ARREST. v. a. [arreter, Fr. to ſtop.]

1. To ſeize by a mandate from a court or officer of juſtice. See ARREST.

Good tidings, my lord Haſtings, for the which
I do arreſt thee, traitor, of high treaſon. Shak. Hen. IV.

Well, well, there's one yonder arreſted, and carried to priſon, was worth five thouſand of you all. Shakeſp. Meaſ. for M.

2. To ſeize any thing by law.

He hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but twenty pounds of money, which muſt be paid to maſter Brook; his horſes are arreſted for it. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

3. To ſeize; to lay hands on.

But when as Morpheus had with leaden maze
Arreſted all that goodly company. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Age itſelf, which, of all things in the world, will not be baffled or defied, ſhall begin to arreſt, ſeize, and remind us of our mortality. South.

4. To with-hold; to hinder.

This defect of the Engliſh juſtice was the main impediment that did arreſt and ſtop the courſe of the conqueſt. Sir John Davies.

As often as my dogs with better ſpeed
Arreſt her flight, is ſhe to death decreed. Dryd. Fables.

Nor could her virtues, nor repeated vows
Of thouſand lovers, the relentleſs hand
Of death arreſt. Philips.

5. To ſtop motion.

To manifeſt the coagulative power, we have arreſted the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled ſubſtance. Boyle.

ARRE'ST. n. ſ. [In horſemanſhip.] A mangey humour between the ham and paſtern of the hinder legs of a horſe. Dict.

ARRE'STED. adj. [arreſtatus, low Lat.] He that is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. It is uſed ſometimes for imputed or laid unto; as, no folly may be arreted to one under age. Cowel.

To ARRI'DE. v. a. [arrideo, Lat.]

1. To laugh at.

2. To ſmile; to look pleaſantly upon one.

ARRIERE. n. ſ. [French.] The laſt body of an army, for which we now uſe rear.

The horſemen might iſſue forth without diſturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without ſhuffling with the battail or arriere. Sir J. Hayward.

ARRI'ERE-BAN. n. ſ. [Caſſeneuve derives this word from arriere and ban; ban denotes the convening of the nobleſſe or vaſſals, who hold fees immediately of the crown; and arriere, thoſe who only hold of the king mediately.] A general proclamation, by which the king of France ſummons to the war all that hold of him, both his own vaſſals or the nobleſſe, and the vaſſals of his vaſſals.

ARRI'ERE FEE, or FIEF. Is a fee dependant on a ſuperior one. Theſe fees commenced, when the dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary in their families, diſtributed to their officers parts of the royal domains, which they found in their reſpective provinces; and even permitted thoſe officers to gratify the ſoldiers under them, in the ſame manner.

ARRI'ERE VASSAL. The vaſſal of a vaſſal. Trevoux.

ARRI'SION. n. ſ. [arriſio, Lat.] A ſmiling upon. Dict.

ARRI'VAL. n. ſ. [from arrive.] The act of coming to any place; and, figuratively, the attainment of any purpoſe.

How are we changed, ſince we firſt ſaw the queen?
She, like the ſun, does ſtill the ſame appear,
Bright as ſhe was at her arrival here. Waller.

The unravelling is the arrival of Ulyſſes upon his own iſland. Broome's View of Epick Poetry.

ARRIVANCE. n. ſ. [from arrive.] Company coming.

Every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakeſp. Othello.

To ARRI'VE. v. n. [arriver, Fr. to come on ſhore.]

1. To come to any place by water.

At length arriving on the banks of Nile,
Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down. Dryden.

2. To reach any place by travelling.

When we were arrived upon the verge of his eſtate, we ſtopped at a little inn, to reſt ourſelves and our horſes.

3. To reach any point.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progreſs. Locke.

4. To gain any thing.

It is the higheſt wiſdom by deſpiſing the world to arrive at heaven; they are bleſſed who converſe with God. Taylor.

The virtuous may know in ſpeculation, what they could never arrive at by practice, and avoid the ſnares of the crafty. Addiſon, Spectator, N° 245.

5. The thing at which we arrive is always ſuppoſed to be good.

6. To happen; with to before the perſon. This ſenſe ſeems not proper.

Happy! to whom this glorious death arrives,
More to be valued than a thouſand lives. Waller.

To ARRO'DE. v. a. [arrodo, Lat.] To gnaw or nibble. Dict.

ARROGANCE. } n. ſ. [arrogantia, Lat.] The act or quality of ARROGANCY. } taking much upon one's ſelf; that ſpecies of pride which conſiſts in exorbitant claims.

Stanley, notwithſtanding ſhe's your wife,
And loves not me; be you, good lord, aſſur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Shakeſp. Rich. III.

Pride hath no other glaſs
To ſhew itſelf but pride; for ſupple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees. Sh. Tr. and Cr.

Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth do I hate. Prov. viii. 13.

Diſcourſing of matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogancy, entreat a credulity. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. i.

Humility it expreſſes by the ſtooping and bending of the head; arrogance, when it is lifted, or, as we ſay, toſſed up. Dryd. Dufreſnoy.

ARROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty; proud.

Feagh's right unto that country which he claims, or the ſigniory therein, muſt be vain and arrogant. Spenſer on Ireland.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and ſtates, is natural to popular governments. Temple.

ARROGANTLY. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

Our poet may
Himſelf admire the fortune of his play;
And arrogantly, as his fellows do,
Think he writes well, becauſe he pleaſes you.
Dryden's Prol. to Indian Emperor.

Another, warm'd
With high ambition, and conceit of proweſs
Inherent, arrogantly thus preſum'd;
What if this ſword, full often drench'd in blood,
Should now cleave ſheer the execrable head
Of Churchill. Philips.

ARROGANTNESS. n. ſ. [from arrogant.] The ſame with arrogance; which ſee. Dict.

To ARROGATE. v. a. [arrogo, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjuſt claims only prompted by pride.

I intend to deſcribe this battle fully, not to derogate any thing from one nation, or to arrogate to the other. Sir J. Hayw.

The popes arrogated unto themſelves, that the empire was held of them in homage. Sir Walter Raleigh's Eſſays.

Who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal ſtate,
Will arrogate dominion undeſerv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Rome never arrogated to herſelf any infallibility, but what ſhe pretended to be founded upon Chriſt's promiſe. Tillot. Pr.

ARROGA'TION. n. ſ. [from arrogate.] A claiming in a proud unjuſt manner. Dict.

ARRO'SION. n. ſ. [from arroſus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.

A'RROW. n. ſ. [ꝩnepe, Sax.] The pointed weapon which is ſhot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand; but in poetry they are confounded.

I ſwear to thee by Cupid's ſtrongeſt bow,
By his beſt arrow with the golden head.
Shakeſp. Midſummer Night's Dream.

Here were boys ſo deſperately reſolved, as to pull arrows out of their fleſh, and deliver them to be ſhot again by the archers on their ſide. Sir J. Hayward.

A'RROWHEAD. n. ſ. [from arrow and head.] A water plant, ſo called from the reſemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.

A'RROWY. adj. [from arrow.] Conſiſting of arrows.

He ſaw them in their forms of battle rang'd,
How quick they wheel'd, and flying, behind them ſhot
Sharp fleet of arrowy ſhow'r againſt the face
Of their purſuers, and o'ercame by flight. Paradiſe Loſt.

ARSE. n. ſ. [eapꝩe, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.

To hang an ARSE. A vulgar phraſe, ſignifying to be tardy, ſluggiſh, or dilatory.

For Hudibras wore but one ſpur,
As wiſely knowing, could he ſtir
To active trot one ſide of 's horſe,
The other would not hang an arſe. Hudibras.

ARSE-FOOT. n. ſ. A kind of water fowl, called alſo a didapper. D.

ARSE-SMART. [perſicaria, Lat.]

It is a plant with an apetalous flower, having ſeveral chives from the multifid calyx: the pointal becomes an oval pointed ſmooth ſeed, incloſed in the capſule, which was before the flower-cup; it hath jointed ſtalks, and the flowers are produced in ſpikes. Several ſpecies of this plant grow wild upon moiſt ſoils and dunghills. Miller.

A'RSENAL. n. ſ. [arſenale, Italian.] A repoſitory of things requiſite to war; a magazine.

I would have a room for the old Roman inſtruments of war, where you might ſee all the antient military furniture, as it might have been in an arſenal of old Rome. Add. on An. Med.

ARSE'NICAL. adj. [from arſenick.] Containing arſenick; conſiſting of arſenick.

An hereditary conſumption, or one engendered by arſenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Harvey.

There are arſenical, or other like noxious minerals lodged underneath. Woodward.

A'RSENICK. n. ſ. [ἀρσένικον.] A ponderous mineral ſubſtance, volatile and uninflammable, which gives a whiteneſs to metals in fuſion, and proves a violent corroſive poiſon; of which there are three ſorts. Native or yellow arſenick, called alſo auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines, in a ſort of glebes or ſtones of different figures and ſizes. Its colour, though always yellow, yet admits of different ſhades and mixtures, as a golden yellow, a reddiſh yellow, or a green yellow. It contains a ſmall portion of gold, but not worth the expence of ſeparating it. White or cryſtalline arſenick is extracted from the native kind, by ſubliming it with a proportion of ſea ſalt, and is chiefly uſed among us. It is ſaid to be found native in ſome German mines. The ſmalleſt quantity of cryſtalline arſenick, being mixed with any metal, abſolutely deſtroys its malleability; and a ſingle grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful ſeeming ſilver, but without ductility. There is a method practiſed in Hungary, of procuring yellow and white arſenick from cobalt. Red arſenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral ſulphur. There are ſeveral chymical preparations of arſenick, intended to blunt its corroſive ſalts, and render it a ſafe medicine; but experience proves that it ſhould never be uſed inwardly, in any form. Chambers.

Arſenick is a very deadly poiſon; held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little. Woodward.

ART. n. ſ. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing ſomething not taught by nature and inſtinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. South.

Bleſt with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.
Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
The laſt and greateſt art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A ſcience; as, the liberal arts.

Arts that reſpect the mind were ever reputed nobler than thoſe that ſerve the body. Ben. Johnſon.

3. A trade.

This obſervation is afforded us by the art of making ſugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulneſs; ſkill; dexterity.

The art of our neceſſities is ſtrange,
That can make vile things precious. Shakeſpeare.

5. Cunning.

6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art as you;
But yet my nature could not bear it ſo. Shakeſpeare.

ARTE'RIAL. adj. [from artery.] That which relates to the artery; that which is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the ſpringy frame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languiſh'd in th' arterial road. Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle paſſeth through the arterial tube, it is preſſed by two contrary forces; that of the heart driving it forward againſt the ſides of the tube, and the elaſtick force of the air, preſſing it on the oppoſite ſides of thoſe air-bladders; along the ſurface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

ARTERIO'TOMY. n. ſ. [from ἀρτηρία, and τέμνω, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in uſe among the French.

A'RTERY. n. ſ. [arteria, Lat.] An artery is a conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body. Each artery is compoſed of three coats; of which the firſt ſeems to be a thread of fine blood veſſels and nerves, for nouriſhing the coats of the artery; the ſecond is made up of circular, or rather ſpiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer ſtrata, according to the bigneſs of the artery. Theſe fibres have a ſtrong elaſticity, by which they contract themſelves with ſome force, when the power by which they have been ſtretched out ceaſes. The third and inmoſt coat is a fine tranſparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal, that otherwiſe, upon the dilatation of an artery, would eaſily ſeparate the ſpiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow ſmaller, theſe coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins ſeem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elaſtick tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood ſtill forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arb.

A'RTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

1. Performed with art.

The laſt of theſe was certainly the moſt eaſy, but, for the ſame reaſon, the leaſt artful. Dryden.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; ſkilful; dexterous.

O ſtill the ſame, Ulyſſes, ſhe rejoin'd,
In uſeful craft ſucceſsfully refin'd,
Artful in ſpeech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

A'RTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; ſkillfully; dexterouſly.

The reſt in rank: Honoria chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to ſet her face,
To front the thicket, and behold the chace. Dryden.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption. How irreſiſtibly muſt it prevail, when the ſeeds of it are artfully ſown, and induſtriouſly cultivated? Rogers.

A'RTFULNESS. n. ſ. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Conſider with how much artfulneſs his bulk and ſituation is contrived, to have juſt matter to draw round him theſe maſſy bodies. Cheyne.

2. Cunning.

ARTHRI'TICK. } adj. [from arthritis.]
ARTHRI'TICAL. }

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritick diſeaſes. Arbuth.

2. Relating to joints.

Serpents, worms, and leaches, though ſome want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritical analogies; and, by the motion of fibrous and muſculous parts, are able to make progreſſion. Brown.

ARTHRITIS. n. ſ. [ἄρθρῖτις, from ἄρθρον, a joint.] Any diſtemper that affects the joints, but the gout moſt particularly. Quin.

A'RTICHOKE. n. ſ. [artichault, Fr.]

This plant is very like the thiſtle, but hath large ſcaly heads ſhaped like the cone of the pine tree; the bottom of each ſcale, as alſo at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleſhy eatable ſubſtance. The ſpecies are, 1. The garden artichoke, with prickly and ſmooth leaves. 2. Garden artichoke, without prickles, and reddiſh heads. 3. The wild artichoke of Bœotia. There is at preſent but one ſort of artichoke cultivated in the gardens near London, which is commonly known by the name of the red artichoke. It is propagated from ſlips or ſuckers taken from the old roots in February or March. Miller.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the ſtalk, another to the fruit or ſeed, but the artichoke. Bacon.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, ſtimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'RTICHOKE of Jeruſalem. See SUN-FLOWER, of which it is a ſpecies.

ARTICK. adj. [It ſhould be written arctick, from ἄρκτος.] Northern; under the Bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters like thoſe beyond the artick circle; for the ſun would be 80 degrees from them. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

In the following example it is, contrary to cuſtom, ſpelt after the French manner, and accented on the laſt ſyllable.

To you, who live in chill degree,
As map informs, of fifty three,
And do not much for cold atone,
By bringing thither fifty one,
Methinks all climes ſhould be alike,
From tropick e'en to pole artique. Dryden.

A'RTICLE. n. ſ. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of ſpeech, as the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A ſingle clauſe of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws touching matters of order are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine not ſo. Hooker.

Have the ſummary of all our griefs,
When time ſhall ſerve to ſhew in articles. Shakeſpeare.

Many believe the article of remiſſion of ſins, but believe it without the condition of repentance. We believe the article otherwiſe than God intended it. Taylor.

All the precepts, promiſes, and threatenings of the goſpel will riſe up in judgment againſt us; and the articles of our faith will be ſo many articles of accuſation; and the great weight of our charge will be this, that we did not obey the goſpel which we profeſſed to believe; that we made confeſſion of the chriſtian faith, but lived like heathens. Tillotſon.

You have ſmall reaſon to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

3. Terms; ſtipulations.

I embrace theſe conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakeſpeare's Cymbeline.

It would have gall'd his ſurly nature,
Which eaſily endures not article,
Tying him to aught. Shakeſpeare.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Cansfield had not, in that article of time, given them that briſk charge, by which other troops were ready, the king himſelf had been in danger. Clarendon.

To A'RTICLE. v. n. [from the noun article.] To ſtipulate; to make terms.

Such

Such in love's warfare is my caſe,
I may not article for grace,
Having put love at laſt to ſhow this face. Donne.

He had not infringed the leaſt tittle of what was articled, that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentrick. Howel's Vocal Foreſt.

If it be ſaid, God choſe the ſucceſſor, that is manifeſtly not ſo in the ſtory of Jephtha, where he articled with the people, and they made him judge over them. Locke.

To ARTICLE. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He, whoſe life ſeems fair, yet if all his errours and follies were articled againſt him, the man would ſeem vicious and miſerable. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

ARTI'CULAR. adj. [articularis, Lat. belonging to the joints.] Is, in medicine, an epithet applied to a diſeaſe, which more immediately infeſts the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus articularis.

ARTICULATE. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Diſtinct, as the parts of a limb by joints; not continued in one tone, as articulate ſounds; that is, ſounds varied and changed at proper pauſes, in oppoſition to the voice of animals, which admit no ſuch variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of ſpeaking clear and diſtinct, in which one ſound is not confounded with another.

In ſpeaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme exility, yet the articulate ſounds, the words, are not confounded. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N° 195.

The firſt, at leaſt, of theſe I thought deny'd
To beaſts; whom God, on their creation-day,
Created mute to all articulate ſound. Milton's Parad. Loſt.

2. Branched out into articles. This is a meaning little in uſe.

His inſtructions were extreme curious and articulate; and, in them, more articles touching inquiſition, than negotiation: requiring from his ambaſſadors an anſwer in diſtinct articles to his queſtions. Bacon's Henry VII.

To ARTI'CULATE. v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to ſpeak as a man.

The dogmatiſt knows not by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating ſounds into voices. Glanville's Scepſis Scientifica.

Pariſian academiſts, in their anatomy of apes, tell us, that the muſcles of the tongue, which do moſt ſerve to articulate a word, were wholly like to thoſe of man. Ray on Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themſelves with a little articulated air. Locke.

2. To draw up in articles.

Theſe things, indeed, you have articulated,
Proclaim'd at market-croſſes, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With ſome fine colour. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

3. To make terms. Theſe two latter ſignifications are unuſual.

Send us to Rome
The beſt, with whom we may articulate
For their own good and ours. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

ARTI'CULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

The ſecret purpoſe of our heart, no leſs articulately ſpoken to God, who needs not our words to diſcern our meaning. Decay of Piety.

ARTI'CULATENESS. n. ſ. [from articulate.] The quality of being articulate.

ARTICULA'TION. n. ſ. [from articulate.]

1. The juncture, or joint of bones.

How to build ſhips, and dreadful ordnance caſt,
Inſtruct the artiſts, and reward their haſte. Waller.

Rich with the ſpoils of many a conquer'd land,
All arts and artiſts Theſeus could command,
Who ſold for hire, or wrought for better fame:
The maſter painters and the carvers came. Dryden's Fables.

When I made this, an artiſt undertook to imitate it; but uſing another way, fell much ſhort. Newton's Opticks.

2. A ſkilful man; not a novice.

If any one thinks himſelf an artiſt at this, let him number up the parts of his child's body. Locke.

A'RTLESLY. adv. [from artleſs.] In an artleſs manner; naturally; ſincerely.

Nature and truth, though never ſo low or vulgar, are yet pleaſing when openly and artleſly repreſented. Pope's Letters.

A'RTLESS. adj. [from art and leſs.]

AS. conjunct. [als, Teut.]

1. In the same manner with something else.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

In singing, as in piping, you excel;
And scarce your master could perform so well. Dryden.

I live as I did, I think as I did, I love you as I did; but all these are to no purpose; the world will not live, think, or love as I do. Swift.

2. In the manner that.

Mad as I was, I could not bear his fate
With silent grief, but loudly blam'd the state. Dryden.

The landlord, in his shirt as he was, taking a candle in one hand, and a drawn sword in the other, ventured out of the room. Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. That; in a consequential sense.

The cunningest mariners were so conquered by the storm, as they thought it best with stricken sails to yield to be governed by it. Sidney.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness. Wotton.

The relations are so uncertain, as they require a great deal of examination. Bacon.

God shall by grace prevent sin so soon, as to keep the soul in the virginity of its first innocence. South.

4. In the state of another.

Madam, were I as you, I'd take her counsel;
I'd speak my own distress. A. Philips, Distrest Mother.

5. Under a particular consideration; with a particular respect.

Besides that law which concerneth men as men, and that which belongs unto men as they are men, linked with others in some society; there is a third which touches all several bodies politick, so far forth as one of them hath publick concerns with another. Hooker.

I say 'tis copper. Dar'st thou be as good as thy word now?—
—Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but a man, I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp. Shakespeare.

The objections that are raised against it as a tragedy, are as follow. Gay.

6. Like; of the same kind with.

A simple idea is one uniform idea, as sweet, bitter. Watts.

7. In the same degree with.

Where you, unless you are as matter blind,
Conduct and beauteous disposition find. Blackmore.

Well hast thou spoke, the blue-ey'd maid replies,
Thou good old man, benevolent as wise. Pope.

8. As if; in the same manner.

The squire began nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.

They all contended to creep into his humour, and to do that, as of themselves, which they conceived he desired they should do. Sir J. Hayward.

Contented in a nest of snow
He lies, as he his bliss did know,
And to the wood no more would go. } Waller.

So hot th' assault, so high the tumult rose,
As all the Dardan and Argolick race
Had been contracted in that narrow space. Dryden.

Can misery no place of safety know,
The noise pursues me wheresoe'er I go,
As fate fought only me. Dryden.

9. According to what.

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man.
1 Cor. iii. 5.

Their figure being printed,
As just before, I think, I hinted,
Alma inform'd can try the case,
As she had been upon the place. Prior.

The republick is shut up in the great duke's dominions, who at present is very much incensed against it. The occasion is as follows. Addison.

10. As it were; in some sort.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV. they thought king Richard had said enough for them; and took them to be but as of the king's party, because they were in his power, and at his disposal. Bacon.

11. While; at the same time that.

At either end, it whistled as it flew,
And as the brands were green, so dropp'd the dew;
Infected as it fell with sweat of sanguine hue. Dryden.

These haughty words Alecto's rage provoke,
And frighted Turnus trembled as she spoke. Dryden.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and as it runs refines. Addison.

12. Because.

He that commanded the injury to be done, is first bound; then he that did it; and they also are obliged who did so assist, as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. As being.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice fit to nourish the tree, as those that would be trees themselves. Bacon.

14. Equally.

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As many voices issue, and the sound
Of Sibyl's word as many times rebound. Dryden.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being confuted, as of being understood. Boyle.

16. With; answering to like or same.

Sister, well met; whither away so fast?—
—No further than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to as.

Every offence committed in the state of nature, may, in the state of nature, be also punished, and as far forth as it may in a commonwealth. Locke.

As sure as it is good, that human nature should exist; so certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets, rather than other motions which might as possibly have been, do declare God. Bentley.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense; the first, as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison.

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair. Granville.

19. Answering to such.

Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a governour of the world as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage? Tillotson.

20. Having so to answer it; in a conditional sense.

As far as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understanding, so far, I hope, my labour may be of use to him. Locke.

21. So is sometimes understood.

As in my speculations I have endeavoured to extinguish passion and prejudice, I am still desirous of doing some good in this particular. Spectator.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' auspicious queen of love,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;
As thou, to whom the muse commends
The best of poets and of friends,
Dost thy committed pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how it is sometimes redundant; but this is low language.

As how, dear Syphax? Addison.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet; to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six, yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;
So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope.

26. AS FOR; with respect to.

As for the rest of those who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice. Dryden.

27. AS IF; in the same manner that it would be, if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that needed it. Locke.

28. AS TO; with respect to.

I pray thee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts
The worst of words. Shakespeare.

They pretend, in general, to great refinements, as to what regards christianity. Addison.

I was mistaken as to the day, placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner that it happened. Swift.

29. AS WELL AS; equally with.

Each man's mind has some peculiarity, as well as his face, that distinguishes him from all others. Locke.

It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well modern as ancient. Addison.

30. AS THOUGH; as if.

These should be at first gently treated, as though we expected an imposthumation. Sharp.

of known efficacy in ſome uterine diſorders; but the rankneſs of its ſmell occaſions it to be ſeldom uſed but by farriers; yet, in the Eaſt Indies, it makes an ingredient in their ragouts. Chambers.

ASARABACCA. n. ſ. [aſarum, Lat.] The name of a plant.

The flower cup is divided into four parts, and the fruit into ſix cells, filled with oblong ſeeds. The leaves are roundiſh, thick, and almoſt of the colour of thoſe of the ivy tree. There are two ſorts, the common aſarabacca, and that of Canada. The firſt ſort is uſed in medicine. It delights in a moiſt ſhady place, and is increaſed by parting the roots in autumn. Miller.

ASBE'STINE. adj. [from aſbeſtos.] Something incombuſtible, or that partakes of the nature and qualities of the lapis aſbeſtos.

ASBE'STOS. n. ſ. [ἄσβεστος.] A ſort of native foſſile ſtone, which may be ſplit into threads and filaments, from one inch to ten inches in length, very fine, brittle, yet ſomewhat tractable, ſilky, and of a greyiſh colour, not unlike talc of Venice. It is almoſt inſipid to the taſte, indiſſoluble in water, and endued with the wonderful property of remaining unconſumed in the fire, which only whitens it. But, notwithſtanding the common opinion, in two trials before the Royal Society, a piece of cloth made of this ſtone was found to loſe a dram of its weight each time. Paper as well as cloth has been made of this ſtone; and Pliny ſays he had ſeen napkins of it, which, being taken foul from the table, were thrown into the fire, and better ſcowered than if they had been waſhed in water. This ſtone is found in many places of Aſia and Europe; particularly in the iſland of Angleſey in Wales, and in Aberdeenſhire in Scotland. Chambers.

ASCA'RIDES. n. ſ. [ἀσκαρίδες, from ἀσκαρίζω, to leap.] Little worms in the rectum, ſo called from their continual troubleſome motion, cauſing an intolerable itching. Quincy.

To ASCE'ND. v. n. [aſcendo, Lat.]

What ſtar I know not, but ſome ſtar I find,
Has giv'n thee an aſcendant o'er my mind. Dryden.

When they have got an aſcendant over them, they ſhould uſe it with moderation, and not make themſelves ſcarecrows. Locke.

4. One of the degrees of kindred reckoned upwards.

The moſt nefarious kind of baſtards, are inceſtuous baſtards, which are begotten between aſcendants and deſcendants in infinitum; and between collaterals, as far as the divine prohibition. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ASCE'NDANT. adj.

1. Superiour; predominant; overpowering.

Chriſt outdoes Moſes, before he diſplaces him; and ſhews an aſcendant ſpirit above him. South.

2. In an aſtrological ſenſe, above the horizon.

Let him ſtudy the conſtellation of Pegaſus, which is about that time aſcendant. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ASCE'NDENCY. n. ſ. [from aſcend.] Influence; power.

Cuſtom has ſome aſcendency over underſtanding, and what at one time ſeemed decent, appears diſagreeable afterwards. Watts.

ASCE'NSION. n. ſ. [aſcenſio, Lat.]

1. The act of aſcending or riſing; frequently applied to the viſible elevation of our Saviour to heaven.

Then riſing from his grave,
Spoil'd principalities and pow'rs, triumph'd
In open ſhew; and, with aſcenſion bright,
Captivity led captive through the air. Paradiſe Loſt.

2. The thing riſing, or mounting.

Men err in the theory of inebriation, conceiving the brain doth only ſuffer from vaporous aſcenſions from the ſtomach. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ASCE'NSION, in aſtronomy, is either right or oblique. Right aſcenſion of the ſun, or a ſtar, is that degree of the equinoctial, counted from the beginning of Aries, which riſes with the ſun or ſtar in a right ſphere. Oblique aſcenſion is an arch of the equator intercepted between the firſt point of Aries, and that point of the equator which riſes together with a ſtar in an oblique ſphere.

ASCE'NSION-DAY. The day on which the aſcenſion of our Saviour is commemorated, commonly called Holy Thurſday; the Thurſday but one before Whitſuntide.

ASCE'NSIONAL Difference, is the difference between the right and oblique aſcenſion, of the ſame point to the ſurface of the ſphere. Chambers.

ASCE'NSIVE. adj. [from aſcend.] In a ſtate of aſcent.

The cold augments when the days begin to encreaſe, though the ſun be then aſcenſive, and returning from the winter tropick. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

ASCE'NT. n. ſ. [aſcenſus, Lat.]

1. Riſe; the act of riſing.

To him with ſwift aſcent he up return'd,
Into his bliſsful boſom reaſſum'd
In glory, as of old. Milton.

2. The way by which one aſcends.

The temple, and the ſeveral degrees of aſcent, whereby men did climb up to the ſame, as if it had been a ſcala cœli, be all poetical and fabulous. Bacon.

It was a rock
Conſpicuous far; winding with one aſcent
Acceſſible from earth, one ent'rance high. Par. Loſt.

3. An eminence, or high place.

No land like Italy erects the ſight,
By ſuch a vaſt aſcent, or ſwells to ſuch a height. Addiſon.

A wide flat cannot be pleaſant in the Elyſian fields, unleſs it be diverſified with depreſſed valleys and ſwelling aſcents. Bentl.

To ASCERTA'IN. v. a. [acertener, Fr.]

1. To make certain; to fix; to eſtabliſh.

The divine law both aſcertaineth the truth, and ſupplieth unto us the want of other laws. Hooker.

Money differs from uncoined ſilver, in this, that the quantity of ſilver in each piece is aſcertained by the ſtamp. Locke.

2. To make confident; to take away doubt; often with of.

If it be on right judgment of myſelf, it may give me the other certainty, that is, aſcertain me that I am in the number of God's children. Hammond.

This makes us act with a repoſe of mind and wonderful tranquillity, becauſe it aſcertains us of the goodneſs of our work. Dryden.

ASCERTA'INER. n. ſ. [from aſcertain.] The perſon that proves or eſtabliſhes.

ASCERTA'INMENT. n. ſ. [from aſcertain.] A ſettled rule; an eſtabliſhed ſtandard.

For want of aſcertainment how far a writer may expreſs his good wiſhes for his country, innocent intentions may be charged with crimes. Swift.

ASCE'TICK. adj. [ἀσκητικὸς.] Employed wholly in exerciſes of devotion and mortification. South.

None lived ſuch long lives as monks and hermits, ſequeſtered from plenty to a conſtant aſcetick courſe of the ſevereſt abſtinence and devotion. South.

ASCE'TICK. n. ſ. He that retires to devotion and mortification; a hermit.

I am far from commending thoſe aſceticks, that, out of a pretence of keeping themſelves unſpotted from the world, take up their quarters in deſarts. Norris.

He that preaches to man, ſhould underſtand what is in man; and that ſkill can ſcarce be attained by an aſcetick in his ſolitudes. Atterbury.

A'SCII. n. ſ. It has no ſingular. [from α, without, and σκιὰ, a ſhadow.] Thoſe people who, at certain times of the year, have no ſhadow at noon; ſuch are the inhabitants of the torrid zone, becauſe they have the ſun twice a year vertical to them. Dict.

ASCI'TES. n. ſ. [from ἄσκος, a bladder.] A particular ſpecies of dropſy; a ſwelling of the lower belly and depending parts, from an extravaſation and collection of water broke out of its proper veſſels. This caſe, when certain and inveterate, is univerſally allowed to admit of no cure but by means of the manual operation of tapping. Quincy.

There are two kinds of dropſy, the anaſarca, called alſo leucophlegmacy, when the extravaſated matter ſwims in the cells of the membrana adipoſa; and the aſcites, when the water poſſeſſes the cavity of the abdomen. Sharp.

ASCI'TICAL. } adj. [from aſcites.] Belonging to an aſcites; dropASCI'TICK. } ſical; hydropical.

ASCRI'BABLE. adj. [from aſcribe.] That which may be aſcribed.

The greater part have been forward to reject it, upon a miſtaken perſuaſion, that thoſe phænomena are the effects of nature's abhorrency of a vacuum, which ſeem to be more fitly aſcribable to the weight and ſpring of the air. Boyle.

To ASCRI'BE. v. a. [aſcribo, Lat.]

1. To attribute to as a cauſe.

The cauſe of his baniſhment is unknown, becauſe he was unwilling to provoke the emperor, by aſcribing it to any other reaſon than what was pretended. Dryden.

To this we may juſtly aſcribe thoſe envies, jealouſies, and encroachments, which render mankind uneaſy to one another. Roger's Sermons.

2. To attribute to as a poſſeſſor, or ſubſtance receiving accidents.

Theſe perfections muſt be ſomewhere, and therefore may much better be aſcribed to God, in whom we ſuppoſe all other perfections to meet, than to any thing elſe. Tillotſon.

ASCRI'PTION. n. ſ. [aſcriptio, Lat.] The act of aſcribing. Dict.

ASCRIPTI'TIOUS. adj. [aſcriptitius, Lat.] That which is aſcribed. Dict.

ASH. n. ſ. [fraxinus, Lat. æꝛc, Saxon.]

This tree hath pennated leaves, which end in an odd lobe. The male flowers, which grow at a remote diſtance from the fruit, have no petals, but conſiſt of many ſtamina. The ovary becomes a ſeed veſſel, containing one ſeed at the bottom, ſhaped like a bird's tongue. The ſpecies are, 1. The common aſh tree. 2. The ſtriped aſh. 3. The manna aſh, &c. The firſt ſort is a common timber tree in every part of England. The ſecond is a variety of the firſt. The third ſort is ſuppoſed to be the tree from whence the true Calabrian manna is taken. The timber is of excellent uſe to the wheelwright and cartwright. Miller.

Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where againſt
My grained aſh an hundred times hath broke,
And ſcar'd the moon with ſplinters. Shakeſpeare.

With which of old he charm'd the ſavage train,
And call'd the mountain aſhes to the plain. Dryden.

ASH-COLOURED. adj. [from aſh and colour.] Coloured between brown and grey, like the bark of an aſhen branch.

Clay, aſh-coloured, was part of a ſtratum which lay above the ſtrata of ſtone. Woodward.

ASHA'MED. adj. [from ſhame.] Touched with ſhame; generally with of before the cauſe of ſhame.

Profeſs publickly the doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, not being aſhamed of the word of God, or of any practices enjoined by it. Taylor.

One wou'd have thought ſhe would have ſtirr'd; but ſtrove
With modeſty, and was aſham'd to move. Dryden.

This I have ſhadowed, that you may not be aſhamed of that hero, whoſe protection you undertake. Dryden.

A'SHEN. adj. [from aſh.] Made of aſh-wood.

At once he ſaid, and threw
His aſhen ſpear; which quiver'd as it flew. Dryden.

A'SHES. n. ſ. wants the ſingular. [aꝛca, Sax. aſche, Dutch.]

1. The remains of any thing burnt.

Some relicks would be left of it, as when aſhes remain of burned bodies. Digby.

This late diſſenſion, grown betwixt the peers,
Burns under feigned aſhes of forg'd love,
And will at laſt break out into a flame. Shakeſpeare.

Aſhes contain a very fertile ſalt, and are the beſt manure for cold lands, if kept dry, that the rain doth not waſh away their ſalt. Mortimer.

2. The remains of the body; often uſed in poetry for the carcaſe, from the ancient practice of burning the dead,

Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale aſhes of the houſe of Lancaſter!
Thou bloodleſs remnant of that royal blood! Shakeſpeare.

To great Laërtes I bequeath
A taſk of grief, his ornaments of death;
Leſt, when the fates his royal aſhes claim,
The Grecian matrons taint my ſpotleſs name. Pope.

ASHWEDNESDAY. n. ſ. The firſt day of Lent, ſo called from the ancient cuſtom of ſprinkling aſhes on the head.

A'SHLAR. n. ſ. [with maſons.] Free ſtones as they come out of the quarry, of different lengths, breadths, and thickneſſes.

2. To demand; to claim; as, to aſk a price for goods.

Aſk me never ſo much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye ſhall ſay unto me; but give me the damſel to wife. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

He ſaw his friends, who, whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and aſk'd their quiet graves. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To enquire; to queſtion; with for before the thing, and ſometimes of before the perſon.

Stand ye in the ways, and ſee, and aſk for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye ſhall find reſt for your ſouls. Jerem. vi. 16.

For aſk now of the days that are paſt, which were before thee, ſince the day that God created man upon the earth, and aſk from the one ſide of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any ſuch thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it. Deut. iv. 32.

O inhabitant of Aroer, ſtand by the way and eſpy, aſk him that flieth, and her that eſcapeth, and ſay, what is done? Jeremiah, xlviii. 19.

4. To enquire; with after before the thing.

He ſaid, wherefore is it that thou doſt aſk after my name? And he bleſſed him there. Geneſis, xxxii. 29.

5. To require, as phyſically neceſſary.

A lump of ore in the bottom of a mine will be ſtirred by two men's ſtrength; which, if you bring it to the top of the earth, will aſk ſix men to ſtir it. Bacon.

The adminiſtration paſſes into different hands at the end of two months, which contributes to diſpatch; but any exigence of ſtate asks a much longer time to conduct any deſign to its maturity. Addiſon.

ASK, ASH, AS, do all come from the Saxon æꝛc, an aſh-tree. Gibſon's Camden.

ASKA'NCE. } adv. Sideways; obliquely.
ASKAUNCE. }

Zelmane, keeping a countenance askance, as ſhe underſtood him not, told him, it became her evil. Sidney.

His wanniſh eyes upon them bent askance.
And when he ſaw their labours well ſucceed,
He wept for rage, and threatened dire miſchance. Fairfax.

Some ſay, he bids his angels turn askance
The poles of earth, twice ten degrees, and more,
From the ſun's axle; they with labour puſh'd
Oblique the centrick globe. Milton.

ASKA'UNT. adv. Obliquely; on one ſide.

At this Achilles roll'd his furious eyes,
Fix'd on the king askaunt, and thus replies,
O, impudent. Dryden.

Since the ſpace, that lies on either ſide
The ſolar orb, is without limits wide,
Grant that the ſun had happened to prefer
A ſeat askaunt, but one diameter:
Loſt to the light by that unhappy place,
This globe had lain a frozen lonelome maſs. Blackmore.

A'SKER. n. ſ. [from ask.]

1. Petitioner.

Have you
Ere now denied the asker? and, now again
On him that did not aſk, but mock, beſtow
Your ſu'd for tongues. Shakeſpeare.

The greatneſs of the asker, and the ſmallneſs of the thing asked, had been ſufficient to enforce his requeſt. South.

2. En-

Thou in me kindlest much more great desire. Spenser.

ASLA'NT. adv. [from a and slant.] Obliquely; on one side; not perpendicularly.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoar leaves in the glassy stream. Shakesp.

He fell; the shaft
Drove through his neck aslant; he spurns the ground,
And the soul issues through the weazon's wound. Dryden.

Aslant the dew-bright earth, and colour'd air,
He looks in boundless majesty abroad. Thomson.

ASLEEP. adv. [from a and sleep.]

1. Sleeping; at rest.

How many thousands of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep! O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee! Shakesp.

The diligence of trade, and noiseful gain,
And luxury more late asleep were laid:
All was the night's, and, in her silent reign,
No sound the rest of nature did invade. Dryden.

There is no difference between a person asleep, and in an apoplexy, but that the one can be awaked, and the other cannot. Arbuthnot.

2. To sleep.

If a man watch too long, it is odds but he will fall asleep. Bacon's Essays.

Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
By whispering winds soon lull'd asleep. Milton.

Set them not upright, but aslope, a reasonable depth under the ground. Bacon.

The curse aslope
Glanc'd on the ground; with labour I must earn
My bread: what harm? Idleness had been worse:
My labour will sustain me. Milton.

The knight did stoop,
And sat on further side aslope. Hudibras.

ASO'MATOUS. adj. [from α, priv. and σῶμα, a body.] Incorporeal, or without a body.

ASP. } n. s. [aspis, Lat.] A kind of serpent, whose poi-
A'SPICK. } son is so dangerous and quick in its operation, that it kills without a possibility of applying any remedy. It is said to be very small, and peculiar to Egypt and Lybia. Those that are bitten by it, die within three hours; and the manner of their dying being by sleep and lethargy, without any pain, Cleopatra chose it, as the easiest way of dispatching herself. Calmet.

High-minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of asp's sting, herself did kill. Fairy Queen.

Scorpion, and asp, and amphisbæna dire,
And dipsas. Milton.

ASP. n. s. A tree. See ASPEN.

ASPALATHUS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A plant called the rose of Jerusalem, or our lady's rose.

2. The wood of a prickly tree, heavy, oleaginous, somewhat sharp and bitter to the taste, and anciently in much repute as an astringent, but now little used. There are four kinds of this wood; the first of the colour of box, hard, solid, heavy, and smelling like roses; which is therefore called rosewood. The second, red like yew, and of a very agreeable smell. The third, hard, twisted, knotty, of a rank smell, like that of a goat, and a disagreeable taste. The fourth has an ash coloured bark, and the wood is of a purple dye. Aspalathus affords an oil of admirable scent, reputed one of the best perfumes. Chambers.

I gave a sweet smell like cinnamon and aspalathus, and I yielded a pleasant odour like the best myrrh. Eccluf. xxiv. 15.

ASPA'RAGUS. n. s. [Lat.] The name of a plant. It has a rosaceous flower of six leaves, placed orbicularly, out of whose center rises the pointal, which turns to a soft globular berry, full of hard seeds. The leaves are finely cut. The species are twelve, of which all but the two first are exoticks. 1. Garden asparagus. 2. Wild asparagus, with narrow leaves. The first sort is cultivated for the table, and propagated by the seeds, which should be sown in the beginning of February. The next year they should be planted out; the third spring, after planting, they may be begun to be cut, and, by proper management, a plot of asparagus may be continued ten or twelve years in cutting. The second sort grows wild in some parts, but, producing slender shoots, it is rarely cultivated. Miller.

Asparagus affects the urine with a fetid smell, especially if cut when they are white; and therefore have been suspected by some physicians, as not friendly to the kidneys; when they are older, and begin to ramify, they lose this quality; but then they are not so agreeable. Arbuthnot.

A'SPECT. n. s. [aspectus, Lat. It appears anciently to have been pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, which is now placed on the first.]

1. Look; air; appearance.

I have presented the tongue under a double aspect, such as may justify the definition, that it is the best and worst part. Government of the Tongue.

They are both, in my judgment, the image or picture of a great ruin, and have the true aspect of a world lying in its rubbish. Burnet.

2. Countenance; look.

Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity. Spenser.

Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops. Shakesp.

I am fearful: wherefore frowns he thus?
'Tis his aspect of terrour. All's not well. Shakespeare.

Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.

Then shall thy Craggs (and let me call him mine)
On the cast ore another Pollio shine;
With aspect open shall erect his head. Pope.

3. Glance; view; act of beholding.

When an envious or an amorous aspect doth infect the spirits of another, there is joined both affection and imagination. Bacon.

The setting sun
Slowly descended; and with right aspect
Against the eastern gate of paradise,
Levell'd his ev'ning rays. Milton.

4. Direction towards any point; view; position.

I have built a strong wall, faced to the south aspect with brick. Swift.

5. Disposition of any thing to something else; relation.

The light got from the opposite arguings of men of parts, shewing the different sides of things, and their various aspects and probabilities, would be quite lost, if every one were obliged to assent to, and say after the speaker. Locke.

6. Disposition of a planet to other planets.

There's some ill planet reigns,
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Shakespeare.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other. Wotton.

To the blank moon
Her office they prescrib'd: to th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite. Milton.

Why does not every single star shed a separate influence, and have aspects with other stars of their own constellation? Bentley's Sermons.

To ASPE'CT. v. a. [aspicio, Lat.] To behold.

Happy in their mistake, those people whom
The northern pole aspects; whom fear of death
(The greatest of all human fears) ne'er moves. Temple.

ASPE'CTABLE. adj. [aspectabilis, Lat.] Visible; being the object of sight

He was the sole cause of this aspectable and perceivable universal. Raleigh.

ASPE'CTION. n. s. [from aspect.] Beholding; view.

A Moorish queen, upon aspection of the picture of Andromeda, conceived and brought forth a fair one. Brown.

A'SPEN, or ASP. n. s. [espe, Dutch; asp, Dan. eyrpe, trembling, Sax. Somner.] See POPLAR, of which it is a species. The leaves of this tree always tremble.

The aspen or asp tree hath leaves much the same with the poplar, only much smaller, and not so white. Mortimer.

The builder oak, sole king of forests all,
The aspen, good for statues, the cypress funeral. Spenser.

A'SPEN. adj. [from asp or aspen.]

1. Belonging to the asp tree.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble like a pen leaves upon a lute. Shakespeare.

No gale disturbs the trees,
Nor aspen leaves confess the gentlest breeze. Gay.

2. Made of aspen wood.

ASPER. adj. [Latin.] Rough; rugged. This word I have found only in the following passage.

All base notes, or very treble notes, give an asper sound; for that the base striketh more air than it can well strike equally. Bacon.

To

Truth ſhines the brighter clad in verſe. Swift.

ASPE'RSION. n. ſ. [aſperſio, Lat.]

1. A ſprinkling.

If thou doſt break her virgin knot, before
All ſanctimonious ceremonies,
No ſweet aſperſions ſhall the heav'ns let fall,
To make this contract grow. Shakeſpeare.

It exhibits a mixture of new conceits and old; whereas the inſtauration gives the new unmixed, otherwiſe than with ſome little aſperſion of the old, for taſte's ſake. Bacon.

2. Calumny; cenſure.

The ſame aſperſions of the king, and the ſame grounds of a rebellion. Dryden.

ASPHA'LTICK. adj. [from aſphaltos.] Gummy; bituminous.

And with aſphaltick ſlime, broad as the gate,
Deep to the roots of hell, the gather'd beach
They faſten'd. Milton.

ASPHA'LTOS. n. ſ. [ἀσφαλτὸς, bitumen.] A ſolid, brittle, black, bituminous, inflammable ſubſtance, reſembling pitch, and chiefly found ſwimming on the ſurface of the Lacus Aſphaltites, or Dead ſea, where anciently ſtood the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. It is caſt up from time to time, in the nature of liquid pitch, from the earth at the bottom of this ſea; and, being thrown upon the water, ſwims like other fat bodies, and condenſes gradually by the heat of the ſun, and the ſalt that is in it. It burns with great vehemence. The Arabs uſe it for pitching their ſhips; and much of it was employed in the embalming of the ancients.

ASPHA'LTUM. n. ſ. [Lat.] A bituminous ſtone found near the ancient Babylon, and lately in the province of Neufchâtel; which, mixed with other matters, makes an excellent cement, incorruptible by air, and impenetrable by water; ſuppoſed to be the mortar ſo much celebrated among the ancients, with which the walls of Babylon were laid. Chambers.

A'SPHODEL. n. ſ. [lilio aſphodelus, Lat.] Day-lily.

The characters are; It hath a root like kingſpear; the flower conſiſts of one leaf, which is deeply cut into ſix ſegments, and expands in form of a lily; the flower is ſucceeded by an oval fruit, which contains ſeveral roundiſh ſeeds. The ſpecies are, 1. The yellow aſphodel. 2. The red aſphodel. Theſe two ſorts are very common in moſt of the Engliſh gardens; the firſt is often called by the gardeners the yellow tuberoſe, from its having a very agreeable ſcent; but the other is called the day-lily, or the tuberoſe orange-lily, in moſt places. They are both hardy plants, and multiply exceedingly, if ſuffered to remain two or three years undiſturbed; eſpecially the red ſort, which ſends forth offſets. The beſt time to tranſplant their roots is in September or October. They will grow in any ſoil or ſituation; the yellow produces its flowers in May and June; the red a month later. Miller.

Aſphodels were by the ancients planted near burying-places, in order to ſupply the manes of the dead with nouriſhment.

By thoſe happy ſouls who dwell
In yellow meads of aſphodel. Pope.

A'SPICK. n. ſ. [See ASP.] The name of a ſerpent.

He riſes on his toe; that ſpirit of his
In aſpiration lifts him from the earth. Shakeſpeare.

3. The pronunciation of a vowel with full breath.

H is only a guttural aſpiration, i. e. a more forcible impulſe of the breath from the lungs. Holder.

To ASPI'RE. v. n. [aſpiro, Lat.]

1. To deſire with eagerneſs; to pant after ſomething higher; ſometimes with the particle to.

Moſt excellent lady, no expectation in others, nor hope in himſelf, could aſpire to a higher mark, than to be thought worthy to be praiſed by you. Sidney.

Hence ſprings that univerſal ſtrong deſire,
Which all men have of immortality:
Not ſome few ſpirits unto this thought aſpire,
But all mens minds in this united be. Sir J. Davies.

Horace did ne'er aſpire to epic bays:
Nor lofty Maro ſtoop to lyric lays. Roſcommon.

Till then a helpleſs, hopeleſs, homely ſwain;
I ſought not freedom, nor aſpir'd to gain. Dryden.

Aſpiring to be gods, if angels fell,
Aſpiring to be angels, men rebel. Pope.

2. Sometimes with after.

Thoſe are raiſed above ſenſe, and aſpire after immortality, who believe the perpetual duration of their ſouls. Tillotſon.

How have I fear'd your fate! but fear'd it moſt,
When love aſſail'd you on the Libyan coaſt. Dryden.

All books he reads, and all he reads aſſails,
From Dryden's Fables down to D—y's Tales. Pope.

In vain Thaleſtris with reproach aſſails;
For who can move when fair Belinda fails? Pope.

ASSA'ILABLE. adj. [from aſſail.] That which may be attacked.

Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.——
—But in them nature's copy's not eternal.—
—There's comfort yet, they are assailable. Shakespeare.

ASSA'ILANT. n. s. [assaillant, Fr.] He that attacks; in opposition to defendant.

The same was so well encountered by the defendants, that the obstinacy of the assailants did but increase the loss.
Sir J. Hayward.

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face,
The like do you: so shall we pass along,
And never stir assailants. Shakespeare.

That monſtrous errour which doth ſome aſſot. Spenſer.

To ASSUA'GE. v. a. [The derivation of this word is uncertain; Minſhew deduces it from adſuadere, or aſſuaviare; Junius, from ῥᾳστ, ſweet; from whence Skinner imagines ασᾳαν might have been formed.]

1. To mitigate; to ſoften; to allay.

Refreſhing winds the ſummer's heats aſſuage,
And kindly warmth diſarms the winter's rage. Addiſon.

2. To appeaſe; to pacify.

Yet is his hate, his rancour ne'er the leſs,
Since nought aſſuageth malice when 'tis told. Fairfax.

This was neceſſary for the ſecuring the people from their fears; which were capable of being aſſuaged by no other means. Clarendon.

Shall I, t' aſſuage
Their brutal rage,
The regal ſtem deſtroy? Dryden.

3. To eaſe; as, the medicine aſſuages pain.

To ASSUA'GE. v. n. To abate.

God made a wind to paſs over the earth, and the waters aſſuaged. Geneſis.

ASSUA'GEMENT. n. ſ. [from aſſuage.] What mitigates or ſoftens.

Tell me, when ſhall theſe weary woes have end,
Or ſhall their ruthleſs torment never ceaſe?
But all my days in pining languor ſpend,
Without hope of aſſuagement or releaſe. Spenſer.

ASSUA'GER. n. ſ. [from aſſuage.] One who pacifies or appeaſes.

ASSUA'SIVE. adj. [from aſſuage.] Softening; mitigating.

In every hypotheſis, ſomething is allowed to be aſſumed. Boyle.

5. To apply to one's own uſe; to appropriate.

His majeſty might well aſſume the complaint and expreſſion of king David. Clarendon.

ASSU'MER. n. ſ. [from aſſume.] An arrogant man; a man who claims more than his due.

Can man be wiſe in any courſe, in which he is not ſafe too? But can theſe high aſſumers and pretenders to reaſon, prove themſelves ſo? South.

ASSU'MING. participial adj. [from aſſume.] Arrogant; haughty.

His haughty looks, and his aſſuming air,
The ſon of Iſis could no longer bear. Dryden.

ASSUMPSIT. n. ſ. [aſſumo, Lat.] A voluntary promiſe made by word, whereby a man taketh upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: It contains any verbal promiſe made upon conſideration. Cowel.

ASSU'MPTION. n. ſ. [aſſumptio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking any thing to one's ſelf.

The perſonal deſcent of God himſelf, and his aſſumption of our fleſh to his divinity, more familiarly to inſinuate his pleaſure to us, was an inforcement beyond all methods of wiſdom. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. The ſuppoſition, or act of ſuppoſing of any thing without farther proof.

Theſe by way of aſſumption, under the two general propoſitions, are intrinſically and naturally good or bad. Norris.

For the aſſumption, that Chriſt did ſuch miraculous and ſupernatural works, to confirm what he ſaid, we need only repeat the meſſage ſent by him to John the Baptiſt. South.

3. The thing ſuppoſed; a poſtulate.

Hold, ſays the Stoick, your aſſumption's wrong:
I grant, true freedom you have well defin'd. Dryden.

4. The taking up any perſon into heaven, which is ſuppoſed by the Romiſh church of the Bleſſed Virgin.

Upon the feaſt of the aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin, the pope and cardinals keep the veſpers. Stillingfleet.

Had Adam done this after a certain period of years, he would have been rewarded with an aſſumption to eternal felicity. Wake's Preparation for Death.

ASSU'MPTIVE. adj. [aſſumptivus, Lat.] That may be aſſumed.

ASSU'RANCE. n. ſ. [aſſurance, Fr.]

1. Certain expectation.

Though hope be, indeed, a lower and leſſer thing than aſſurance, yet, as to all the purpoſes of a pious life, it may prove more uſeful. South.

What encouragement can be given to goodneſs, beyond the hopes of heaven, and the aſſurance of an endleſs felicity? Tillot.

2. Secure confidence; truſt.

What man is he, that boaſts of fleſhly might,
And vain aſſurance of mortality,
Which all ſo ſoon as it doth come to fight
Againſt ſpiritual foes, yields by and by. Spenſer.

3. Freedom from doubt; certain knowledge.

I grant that proof from the authority of man's judgment, is not able to work that aſſurance, which doth grow by a ſtronger proof. Hooker.

'Tis far off,
And rather like a dream, than an aſſurance
That my remembrance warrants. Shakeſpeare.

The obedient, and the man of practice, ſhall outgrow all their doubts and ignorances, till perſuaſion paſs into knowledge, and knowledge advance into aſſurance. South.

Hath he found, in an evil courſe, that comfortable aſſurance of God's favour, and good hopes of his future condition, which a religious life would have given him. Tillotſon.

4. Firmneſs; undoubting ſteadineſs.

Men whoſe conſideration will relieve our modeſty, and give us courage and aſſurance in the duties of our profeſſion. Rogers.

5. Confidence; want of modeſty; exemption from awe and fear.

My behaviour ill governed, gave you the firſt comfort; my affection ill hid, hath given you this laſt aſſurance. Sidney.

Converſation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and aſſurance. Locke.

6. Ground of confidence; ſecurity given.

The nature of deſire itſelf is no eaſier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as deſire is glad to embrace the firſt ſhew of comfort, ſo is deſire deſirous of perfect aſſurance. Sidney.

As the conqueſt was but ſlight and ſuperficial, ſo the pope's donation to the Iriſh ſubmiſſions were but weak and fickle aſſurances. Davies.

None of woman born
Shall harm Mackbeth.————
—Then live, Macduff, what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make aſſurance double ſure,
And take a bond of fate; Thou ſhalt not live. Shakeſp.
I muſt confeſs your offer is the beſt;
And, let your father make her the aſſurance,
She is your own, elſe you muſt pardon me,
If you ſhould die before him, where's her dower?
Shakeſpeare's Taming of the Shrew.

7. Spirit; intrepidity.

With all th' aſſurance innocence can bring,
Fearleſs without, becauſe ſecure within;
Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I ſee
This pomp, a ſhame to you, a pride to me. Dryden.

8. Sanguinity; readineſs to hope.

This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural aſſurance or confidence, which Ariſtotle obſerves young men to be full of, and old men not ſo inclined to. Hammond.

9. Teſtimony of credit.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,
And from ſome knowledge and aſſurance of you,
Offer this office. Shakeſpeare.

We have as great aſſurance that there is a God, as we could expect to have, ſuppoſing that he were. Tillotſon.

10. Conviction.

Such an aſſurance of things as will make men careful to avoid a leſſer danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillot.

11. The ſame with inſurance. See INSURANCE.

To ASSU'RE. v. a. [aſſeurer, Fr. from aſſecurare, low Latin.]

1. To give confidence by a firm promiſe.

So when he had aſſured them with many words, that he would reſtore them without hurt, according to the agreement, they let him go for the ſaving of their brethren. 2 Mac.

2. To secure to another.

And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of
Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands and leases whatsoever.
Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

So irresistible an authority cannot be reflected on, without the most awful reverence, even by those whose piety assures its favour to them. Rogers.

3. To make confident; to exempt from doubt or fear; to confer security.

And hereby we know, that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. 1 John, iii. 19.

I revive
At this last sight; assur'd that men shall live,
With all the creatures, and their seed preserve. Parad. Lost.

4. To make secure.

But what on earth can long abide in state?
Or who can him assure of happy day? Spens. Muiopotmos.

5. To affiance; to betroth.

This diviner laid claim to me, called me Dromio, swore I was assured to her. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errours.

ASSU'RED. participial adj. [from assure.]

1. Certain; indubitable.

It is an assured experience, that flint laid about the bottom of a tree makes it prosper. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Certain; not doubting.

Young princes, close your hands,
——And your lips too; for, I am well assur'd
That I did so, when I was first assur'd. Shak. King John.

As when by night the glass
Of Galileo, less assur'd, observes
Imagin'd lands, and regions, in the moon. Paradise Lost.

3. Immodest; viciously confident.

ASSU'REDLY. adv. [from assured.] Certainly; indubitably.

They promis'd me eternal happiness,
And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel
I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall assuredly.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

God is absolutely good, and so, assuredly, the cause of all that is good; but, of any thing that is evil, he is no cause at all. Raleigh's History of the World.

Assuredly he will stop our liberty, till we restore him his worship. South.

ASSU'REDNESS. n. s. [from assured.] The state of being assured; certainty.

ASSU'RER. n. s. [from assure.]

1. He that gives assurance.

2. He that gives security to make good any loss.

To ASSWAGE. See ASSUAGE.

A'STERISK. n. s. [ἀστερίσκος.] A mark in printing or writing, in form of a little star; as *.

He also published the translation of the Septuagint by itself, having first compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what was redundant. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

A'STERISM. n. s. [asterismus, Lat.]

1. A constellation.

Poetry hath filled the skies with asterisms, and histories belonging to them; and then astrology devises the feigned virtues and influences of each. Bentley's Sermons.

2. An asterisk, or mark. This is a very improper use.

Dwell particularly on passages with an asterism *; for the observations which follow such a note, will give you a clear light. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A'STHMA. n. s. [ἄσθμα.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night time, and when the body is in a prone posture; because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move. Quincy.

An asthma is the inflation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax, but does not continue long. Floyer on the Humours.

ASTHMA'TICAL. } adj. [from asthma.] Troubled with an ASTHMA'TICK. } asthma.

In asthmatical persons, we often see, that though the lungs be very much stuffed with tough phlegm, yet the patient may live some months, if not some years. Boyle.

After drinking, our horses are most asthmatick; and, for avoiding the watering of them, we wet their hay.
Floyer on the Humours.

ASTE'RN adv. [from a and stern.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

The galley gives her side, and turns her prow,
While those astern descending down the steep,
Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep. Dryden.

To ASTE'RT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser, as it seems, for start, or startle.] To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of ill desert;
But knew we fools what it us brings until,
Die would we daily, once it to expert;
No danger there the shepherd can astert. Spenser's Past.

ASTO'NIED. particip. adj. A word used in the version of the bible for astonished.

Many were astonied at thee. Isaiah, lii. 14.

To ASTO'NISH. v. a. [estonner, Fr. from attonitus, Lat.] To confound with some sudden passion, as with fear or wonder; to amaze; to surprise.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
Astonish'd at the voice, he stood amaz'd,
And all around with inward horror gaz'd. Addison's Ovid.
A genius universal as his theme,
Astonishing as chaos. Thomson's Summer.

ASTO'NISHINGNESS. n. s. [from astonish.] Of a nature to excite astonishment.

ASTO'NISHMENT. n. s. [estonnement, Fr.] Amazement; confusion of mind from fear or wonder.

We found, with no less wonder to us, than astonishment to themselves, that they were the two valiant and famous brothers. Sidney.

She esteemed this as much above his wisdom, as astonishment is beyond bare admiration. South.

To ASTO'UND. v. a. [estonner, Fr.] To astonish; to confound with fear or wonder. This word is now somewhat obsolete.

These thoughts may startle well, but not astound
The virtuous mind, that ever walks attended
By a strong siding champion, conscience. Paradise Regain'd.

ASTRA'DDLE. adv. [from a and straddle.] With one's legs across any thing. Dict.

A'STRAGAL. n. s. [ἀστράγαλος, the ankle, or ankle-bone.] A little round member, in the form of a ring or bracelet, serving as an ornament at the tops and bottoms of columns. Build. Dict.

We see none of that ordinary confusion, which is the result of quarter rounds of the astragal, and I know not how many other intermingled particulars. Spectator.

A'STRAL. adj. [from astrum, Lat.] Starry; relating to the stars.

Some astral forms I must invoke by pray'r,
Fram'd all of purest atoms of the air;
Not in their natures simply good or ill;
But most subservient to bad spirits will. Dryd. Tyran. Love.

ASTRA'Y. adv. [from a and stray.] Out of the right way.

May seem the wain was very evil led,
When such an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray. F. Q.

You run astray, for whilst we talk of Ireland, you rip up the original of Scotland. Spenser on Ireland.

Like one that had been led astray
Through the heav'n's wide pathless way. Milt. Il Penseroso.

To ASTRI'CT. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To contract by applications, in opposition to relax: a word not so much used as constringe.

The solid parts were to be relaxed or astricted, as they let the humours pass either in too small or too great quantities.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRI'CTION. n. s. [astrictio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Astriction is in a substance that hath a virtual cold; and it worketh partly by the same means that cold doth. Bacon.

This virtue requireth an astriction, but such an astriction as is not grateful to the body; for a pleasing astriction doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them: and therefore such astriction is found in things of a harsh taste. Bacon's Nat. History.

Such lenitive substances are proper for dry atrabilarian constitutions, who are subject to astriction of the belly and the piles.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTRI'CTIVE. adj. [from astrict.] Stiptick; of a binding quality. Dict.

ASTRI'CTORY. adj. [astrictorius, Lat.] Astringent; apt to bind. Dict.

ASTRI'DE. adv. [from a and stride.] With the legs open.

To lay their native arms aside,
Their modesty, and ride astride. Hudibras.

I saw a place where the Rhone is so straitened between two rocks, that a man may stand astride upon both at once. Boyle.

ASTRI'FEROUS. adj. [astrifer, Lat.] Bearing, or having stars. D.

ASTRI'GEROUS. adj. [astriger, Lat.] Adorned with stars. Dict.

To ASTRI'NGE. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To press by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astringeth the moisture of the brain, and thereby sendeth tears into the eyes. Bacon.

ASTRI'NGENCY. n. s. [from astringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body; opposed to the power of relaxation.

Astriction prohibiteth dissolution; as, in medicines, astringents inhibit putrefaction: and, by astringency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying. Bacon's Natural History.

Acid, acrid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astringency, create horrour, that is, stimulate the fibres. Arbuthnot.

ASTRI'NGENT. adj. [astringens, Lat.] Binding; contracting; opposed to laxative.

Aſtringent medicines are binding, which act by the aſperity of their particles, whereby they corrugate the membranes, and make them draw up cloſer. Quincy.

The juice is very aſtringent, and therefore of ſlow motion. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

What diminiſheth ſenſible perſpiration, encreaſeth the inſenſible; for that reaſon a ſtrengthening and aſtringent diet often conduceth to this purpoſe. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'STROGRAPHY. n. ſ. [from ἄστρον and γράφω.] The ſcience of deſcribing the ſtars. Dict.

A'STROLABE. n. ſ. [ἀστρολάβιον, of ἀστὴρ, and λαβεῖν, to take.]

1. An inſtrument chiefly uſed for taking the altitude of the pole, the ſun or ſtars, at ſea.
2. A ſtereographick projection of the circles of the ſphere upon the plain of ſome great circle. Chambers.

ASTRO'LOGER. n. ſ. [aſtrologus, Lat. from ἄστρον and λόγος.]

1. One that, ſuppoſing the influences of the ſtars to have a cauſal power, profeſſes to foretel or diſcover events depending on thoſe influences.

Not unlike that which aſtrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aſpect the one to the other. Wotton.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the ſtars, ſay the aſtrologers; on the organs of the body, ſay the naturaliſts; it is the particular gift of heaven, ſay the divines, both Chriſtians and Heathens. Dryd. Dufreſnoy, Pref.

Aſtrologers, that future fates foreſhew. Pope.

I never heard a finer ſatire againſt lawyers, than that of aſtrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a ſuit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant. Swift.

2. It was antiently uſed for one that underſtood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy aſtrologer now living, who, by the help of perſpective glaſſes, hath found in the ſtars many things unknown to the ancients, affirms much to have been diſcovered in Venus. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

ASTROLO'GIAN. n. ſ. [from aſtrology.] The ſame with aſtrologer.

The twelve houſes of heaven, in the form which aſtrologians uſe. Camden.

The ſtars, they ſay, cannot diſpoſe,
No more than can the aſtrologian. Hudibras.

ASTROLO'GICAL. } adj. [from aſtrology.] Relating to aſtrology;
ASTROLO'GICK. } profeſſing aſtrology.

Some ſeem a little aſtrological, as when they warn us from places of malign influence. Wotton.

No aſtrologick wizard honour gains,
Who has not oft been baniſh'd, or in chains. Dryd. Juv.

Aſtrological prayers ſeem to me to be built on as good reaſon as the predictions. Stillingfleet's Def. of Diſc. on Rom. Idolatry.

The poetical fables are more ancient than the aſtrological influences, that were not known to the Greeks till after Alexander the Great. Bentley's Sermons.

ASTROLO'GICALLY. adv. [from aſtrology.] In an aſtrological manner.

To ASTROLO'GIZE. v. n. [from aſtrology.] To practiſe aſtrology.

ASTROLOGY. n. ſ. [aſtrologia, Lat.] The practice of foretelling things by the knowledge of the ſtars; an art now generally exploded, as without reaſon.

I know it hath been the opinion of the learned, who think of the art of aſtrology, that the ſtars do not force the actions or wills of men. Swift.

ASTRO'NOMER. n. ſ. [from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a rule or law.] He that ſtudies the celeſtial motions, and the rules by which they are governed.

The motions of factions under kings, ought to be like the motions, as the aſtronomers ſpeak in the inferior orbs. Bacon.

The old and new aſtronomers in vain
Attempt the heav'nly motions to explain. Blackmore.

Since aſtronomers no longer doubt of the motion of the planets about the ſun, it is fit to proceed upon that hypotheſis. Locke.

ASTRONO'MICAL. } adj. [from aſtronomy.] Belonging to aſtro-
ASTRONO'MICK. } nomy.

Our forefathers marking certain mutations to happen in the ſun's progreſs through the zodiack, they regiſtrate and ſet them down in their aſtronomical canons. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Can he not paſs an aſtronomick line,
Or does he dread th' imaginary ſign,
That he ſhould ne'er advance to either pole. Blackmore.

ASTRONO'MICALLY. adv. [from aſtronomical.] In an aſtronomical manner.

ASTRONOMY. n. ſ. [ἀστρονομία, from ἄστρον, a ſtar, and νόμος, a law, or rule.] A mixed mathematicel ſcience, teaching the knowledge of the celeſtial bodies, their magnitudes, motions, diſtances, periods, eclipſes, and order. The origin of aſtronomy is uncertain; but from Egypt it travelled into Greece, where Pythagoras was the firſt European who taught that the earth and planets turn round the ſun, which ſtands immoveable in the center; as he himſelf had been inſtructed by the Egyptian prieſts. From the time of Pythagoras, aſtronomy ſunk into neglect, till it was revived by the Ptolemys, kings of Egypt; and the Saracens, after their conqueſt of that country, having acquired ſome knowledge of it, brought it from Africa to Spain, and again reſtored this ſcience to Europe, where it has ſince received very conſiderable improvements. Chambers.

To this muſt be added the underſtanding of the globes, and the principles of geometry and aſtronomy. Coules.

A'STROSCOPY. n. ſ. [ἀστὴρ, a ſtar, and σκοπέω, to view.] Obſervation of the ſtars. Dict.

A'STRO-THEOLOGY. n. ſ. [from aſtrum, a ſtar, and theologia, divinity.] Divinity founded on the obſervation of the celeſtial bodies.

That the diurnal and annual revolutions are the motions of the terraqueous globe, not of the ſun, I ſhew in the preface of my Aſtro-theology. Derham's Phyſico-theology.

ASU'NDER. adv. [aſundran, Sax.] Apart; ſeparately; not together.

Two indirect lines, the further that they are drawn out, the further they go aſunder. Spenſer on Ireland.

Senſe thinks the planets ſpheres not much aſunder;
What tells us then their diſtance is ſo far? Sir J. Davies.

Greedy hope to find
His wiſh, and beſt advantage, us aſunder. Paradiſe Loſt.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our ſtate,
Seeks hid advantage to betray us worſe;
Which, when aſunder, will not prove too hard,
For both together are each other's guard. Dryd. State of Inn.

Born far aſunder by the tides of men,
Like adamant and ſteel they meet agen. Dryden's Fables.

All this metallick matter, both that which continued aſunder, and in ſingle corpuſcles, and that which was amaſſed and concreted into nodules, ſubſided. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

ASY'LUM. n. ſ. [Lat. ἄσυλον, from α, not, and συλάω, to pillage.] A place out of which he that has fled to it, may not be taken; a ſanctuary; a refuge.

So ſacred was the church to ſome, that it had the right of an aſylum, or ſanctuary. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ASY'MMETRY. n. ſ. [from α, without, and συμμετρία, ſymmetry.]

1. Contrariety to ſymmetry; diſproportion.

The aſymmetries of the brain, as well as the deformities of the legs or face, may be rectified in time. Grew's Coſm. Sacra.

2. This term is ſometimes uſed in mathematics, for what is more uſually called incommenſurability; when between two quantities there is no common meaſure.

A'SYMPTOTE. n. ſ. [from α, priv. σύν, with, and πίπτω, to fall; which never meet; incoincident.] Aſymptotes are right lines, which approach nearer and nearer to ſome curve; but which, though they and their curve were infinitely continued, would never meet; and may be conceived as tangents to their curves at an infinite diſtance. Chambers.

Aſymptote lines, though they may approach ſtill nearer together, till they are nearer than the leaſt aſſignable diſtance, yet, being ſtill produced infinitely, will never meet. Grew's Coſm.

ASY'MPTOTICAL. adj. [from aſymptote.] Curves are ſaid to be aſymptotical, when they continually approach, without a poſſibility of meeting.

ASY'NDETON. n. ſ. [ἀσύνδετον, of α, priv. and συνδέω, to bind together.] A figure in grammar, when a conjunction copulative is omitted in a ſentence; as in veni, vidi, vici, & is left out.

AT. prep. [æt, Saxon]

1. At before a place, notes the nearneſs of the place; as, a man is at the houſe before he is in it.

This cuſtom continued among many, to ſay their prayers at fountains. Stillingfleet's Def. of Diſc. on Romiſh Idolatry.

To all you ladies now at land,
We men at ſea indite. Buckhurſt.

2. At before a word ſignifying time, notes the coexiſtence of the time with the event; the word time is ſometimes included in the adjective.

We thought it at the very firſt a ſign of cold affection. Hooker.

How frequent to deſert him, and at laſt
To heap ingratitude on worthieſt deeds. Milt. Samp. Agon.

At the ſame time that the ſtorm beats upon the whole ſpecies, we are falling foul upon one another. Addiſon's Spect.

We made no efforts at all, where we could have moſt weakened the common enemy, and, at the ſame time, enriched ourſelves. Swift.

1. Such a perſon as by conſent, commandment, or requeſt, takes heed, ſees, and takes upon him the charge of other men's buſineſs, in their abſence. Attorney is either general or ſpecial: Attorney general is he that by general authority is appointed to all our affairs or ſuits; as the attorney general of the king, which is nearly the ſame with Procurator Cæſaris in the Roman empire. Attorneys general are made either by the king's letters patent, or by our appointment before juſtices in eyre, in open court: Attorney ſpecial or particular, is he that is employed in one or more cauſes particularly ſpecified. There are alſo, in reſpect of the divers courts, attorneys at large, and attorneys ſpecial, belonging to this or that court only. Cowel.
Attorneys in common law, are nearly the ſame with proctors in the civil law, and ſolicitors in courts of equity. Attorneys ſue out writs or proceſs, or commence, carry on, and defend actions, or other proceedings, in the names of other perſons, in the courts of common law. None are admitted to act without having ſerved a clerkſhip for five years, taking the proper oath, being enrolled, and examined by the judges. The attorney general pleads within the bar. To him come warrants for making out patents, pardons, &c. and he is the principal manager of all law affairs of the crown. Chambers.
I am a ſubject,
And challenge law: attorneys are deny'd me,
And therefore perſonally I lay my claim
To mine inheritance. Shakeſpeare.
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confeſſions,
Of divers witneſſes. Shakeſpeare.
Deſpairing quacks with curſes fled the place,
And vile attorneys, now an uſeleſs race. Pope.
2. It was anciently uſed for thoſe who did any buſineſs for another; now only in law.
I will attend my huſband; it is my office;
And will have no attorney but myſelf;
And therefore let me have him home. Shakeſpeare.
Why ſhould calamity be full of words? ——
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy ſucceeders of inteſtate joys. Shakeſpeare.

AVOCA'DO. n. s. [Span. Persica, Lat.] The name of a plant.

This plant hath a rose-shaped flower, consisting of several leaves, which are ranged in a circle; from whose middle rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a soft, fleshy, pear-shaped fruit, in which is an hard stone or seed, having two lobes, which is included in a membrane or pericardium

The tree grows in great plenty in the Spanish West Indies, as also in the island of Jamaica; and hath been transplanted into the English settlements in America, upon account of its fruit, which is very necessary for the support of life. The fruit is of itself very insipid, for which reason they generally eat it with the juice of lemons and sugar, to give it a poignancy. This tree, in warm countries where it is planted, grows to the height of thirty feet, with a trunk as large as common apple-trees; the bark smooth and of an ash colour; the branches are beset with pretty large oblong smooth leaves, of a deep green colour throughout the year. The flowers and fruit are produced towards the extremity of the branches. Miller.

Sir Valentine, whither away ſo faſt? Shakeſpeare.

8. Perhaps the phraſe, he cannot away with, may mean he cannot travel with; he cannot bear the company.

She never could away with me.——Never, never; ſhe would always ſay, ſhe could not abide maſter Shallow.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

9. Away with. Throw away; take away.

If you dare think of deſerving our charms,
Away with your ſheephooks, and take to your arms. Dryd.

AWE. n. ſ. [ege, oga, Saxon.] Reverential fear; reverence.

They all be brought up idly, without awe of parents, without precepts of maſters, and without fear of offence. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

It fixed upon him who is is only to be feared, God: and yet with a filial fear, which at the ſame time both fears and loves. It was awe without amazement, and dread without diſtraction. South.

What is the proper awe and fear, which is due from man to God? Rogers.

To AWE. v. a. [from the noun.] To ſtrike with reverence, or fear.

If you will work on any man, you muſt either know his nature and faſhions, and ſo lead him; or his ends, and ſo perſuade him; or his weakneſſes and diſadvantages, and ſo awe him; or thoſe that have intereſt in him, and ſo govern him. Bacon.

Why then was this forbid? why, but to awe?
Why, but to keep you low, and ignorant,
His worſhippers? Milton.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this iſland to give law,
To balance Europe, and her ſtates to awe. Waller.

The rods and axes of princes, and their deputies, may awe many into obedience; but the fame of their goodneſs, juſtice, and other virtues, will work on more. Atterbury.

Brown's Vulgar Errours.

AXIS. n. s. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.
But since they say our earth, from morn to morn,
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;
That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear. Blackmore.
It might annually have compassed the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis. Bentley.
On their own axis as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole.
Pope's Essay on Man.

AXLE. } n. s. [axis, Lat.] The pin which passes through AXLE-TREE. } the midst of the wheel, on which the circumvolutions of the wheel are performed.

Minerva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.
The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson.

B.

B A B

B, The ſecond letter of the Engliſh alphabet, is pronounced as in moſt other European languages, by preſſing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a ſtrong breath. It has a near affinity with the other labial letters, and is confounded by the Germans with P, and by the Gaſcons with V; from which an epigrammatiſt remarks, that bibere and vivere are in Gaſcony the ſame. The Spaniards, in moſt words, uſe B or V indifferently.

BAA. n. ſ. [See the verb.] The cry of a ſheep.

To BAA. v. n. [balo, Lat.] To cry like a ſheep.

Or like a lamb, whoſe dam away is ſet,
He treble baas, for help, but none can get. Sidney.

To BA'BBLE. v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr.]

To BAIGNE. v. a. [bagner, Fr.] To drench; to ſoak: a word out of uſe.

The women forſlow not to baigne them, unleſs they plead their heels, with a worſe perfume than Jugurth found in the dungeon. Carew's Survey of Cornwal.

BAIL. n. ſ. [of this word the etymologiſts give many derivations; it ſeems to come from the French bailler, to put into the hand; to deliver up, as a man delivers himſelf up in ſurety.]

Bail is the freeing or ſetting at liberty one arreſted or impriſoned upon action either civil or criminal, under ſecurity taken for his appearance. There is both common and ſpecial bail; common bail is in actions of ſmall prejudice, or ſlight proof, called common, becauſe any ſureties in that caſe are taken: whereas, upon cauſes of greater weight, or apparent ſpeciality, ſpecial bail or ſurety muſt be taken. There is a difference between bail and mainprize; for he that is mainpriſed, is at large, until the day of his appearance: but where a man is bailed, he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward and cuſtody for the time: and they may, if they will, keep him in ward or in priſon at that time, or otherwiſe at their will. Cowel.

Worry'd with debts, and paſt all hopes of bail,
Th' unpity'd wretch lies rotting in a jail. Roſcommon.

And bribe with preſents, or when preſents fail,
They ſend their proſtituted wives for bail. Dryden.

To BAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To give bail for another.

To BAIT. v. a. [batan, Sax. baitzen, Germ.]

1. To put meat upon a hook, in ſome place, to tempt fiſh or other animals.

Oh, cunning enemy, that to catch a ſaint,
With ſaints doſt bait thy hook! moſt dangerous
Is that temptation that doth goad us on
To ſin in loving virtue. Shakeſp. Meaſure for Meaſure.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, give him a ſhow of comfort in his ſuit, and lead him on with a ſure baited delay, till he hath pawned his horſes to mine hoſt of the garter. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windſor.

Many ſorts of fiſhes feed upon inſects, as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Ray.

How are the ſex improv'd in am'rous arts!
What new-found ſnares they bait for human hearts! Gay.

2. To give meat to one's ſelf, or horſes, on the road.

What ſo ſtrong,
But wanting reſt, will alſo want of might?
The ſun, that meaſures heaven all day long,
At night doth bait his ſteeds the ocean waves among. F. Q.

To BAIT. v. a. [from battre, Fr. to beat.] To attack with violence; to set dogs upon.

Who seeming sorely chaffed at his band,
As chained bear, whom cruel dogs do bait,
With idle force did fain them to withstand. Fairy Queen.

I will not yield
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet;
And so be baited with the rabble's curse. Shak. Macbeth.

To BAIT. v. n. To stop at any place for refreshment; perhaps this word is more properly bate; to abate speed.

But our desires, tyrannical extorsion
Doth force us there to set our chief delightfulness,
Where but a baiting place is all our portion. Sidney.

As one who on his journey baits at noon,
Tho' bent on speed: so here th' archangel paus'd. Par. Lost.

In all our journey from London to his house, we did not so much as bait at a whig inn. Addison, Spectator.

To BAIT. v. n. [as an hawk.] To clap the wings; to make an offer of flying; to flutter.

All plum'd like estridges, that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats like images. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Hood my unman'd blood baiting in my cheeks
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,
Thinks true love acted simple modesty. Shak. Rom. and Jul.

Another way I have to man my haggard,
To make her come, and know her keepers call;
That is, to watch her as we watch these kites,
That bait and beat, and will not be obedient.
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

BAIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Meat set to allure fish, or other animals, to a snare.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait.
Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.

2. A temptation; an enticement.

And that same glorious beauty's idle boast,
Is but a bait such wretches to beguile. Spens. sonnet xli.

But greatest hopes of greatest crosses meet. Fairfax.

Fruit, like that
Which grew in paradise, the bait of Eve
Us'd by the tempter. Milton's Par. Lost.

Secure from foolish pride's affected state,
And specious flattery's more pernicious bait. Roscommon.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knot was ty'd above:
Sweet negligence! unheeded bait of love! Dryden.

Grant that others could with equal glory,
Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense. Add. Cato.

3. A refreshment on a journey.

BAIZE. n. s. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having a long nap; sometimes frized on one side, and sometimes not frized, according to the uses it is intended for. This stuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

To BAKE. v. a. participle passive, baked, or baken. [bæcan, Sax. becken, Germ. supposed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, signified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a close place; generally in an oven.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it, and baketh bread. Isaiah, xliv. 15.

The difference of prices of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps something in their manner of baking. Arbuthnot.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatsoever the fire baketh, time doth in some degree dissolve. Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement suns
When dusty summer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch,
To ply the sweet carouse! Philips.

The sun with flaming arrows pierc'd the flood,
And, darting to the bottom, bak'd the mud. Dryden.

To BAKE. v. n.

In life and health, every man must proceed upon trust, there being no knowing the intention of the cook or baker. South.

BA'LANCE. n. s. [balancé, Fr. libanx, Lat.]

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanicks, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of scales.

A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.

For when on ground the burden'd balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher. Sir John Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance justly weighed,
What wrong our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer:
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shakesp. Henry IV.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L' Estrange.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Adv. to Sir G. Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even: as, he stated the account with his correspondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoise; as, balance of power. See the second sense.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleasure's smiling train,
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
These mix'd with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind. Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but supposing that all watches, whilst the balance beats, think: and it is sufficiently proved, that my watch thought all last night. Locke.

9. In astronomy. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

To BA'LANCE. v. a. [balancer, Fr.]

And dext'rous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.

BALD adj. [bal, Welch.]

1. Without hair.
Neither shall men make themselves bald for them. Jeremiah.
I find it remarked by Marchetti, that the cause of baldness in men is the dryness of the brain, and its shrinking from the skull; he having observed, that in bald persons, under the bald part, there was a vacuity between the skull and the brain. Ray.
He should imitate Cæsar, who, because his head was bald, covered that defect with laurels. Addison.

2. Without natural covering.
Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shakespeare.

3. Without the usual covering.
He is set at the upper end o' th' table; but they stand bald before him. Shakespeare.

4. Unadorned; inelegant.
Hobbes, in the preface to his own bald translation of the Ilias, begins the praise of Homer when he should have ended it. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
And that, though labour'd, line must bald appear,
That brings ungrateful musick to the ear. Creech.

5. Stripped: naked; without dignity; without value; bare.
What should the people do with these bald tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience fails
To th' greater bench. Shakespeare.

6. Bald was used by the northern nations, to signify the same as audax, bold; and is still in use. So Baldwin, and by inversion Winbald, is bold conqueror; Ethelbald, nobly bold; Eadbald, happily bold; which are of the same import as Thrasæas, Thrasymachus, and Thrasybulus, &c. Gibson.

BALL. n. s. [bol, Dan. bol, Dut.]
Bel, diminutively Belin, the sun, or Apollo of the Celtæ, was called by the ancient Gauls Abellio. Whatever was round, and in particular the head, was called by the ancients either Bál, or Bel, and likewise Ból and Biil. Among the modern Persians, the head is called Pole; and the Flemings still call the head Bolle. Πόλος is the head or poll, and πολεῖν, is to turn. βῶλος likewise signifies a round ball, whence bowl, and bell, and ball, which the Welch term bêl. By the Scotch also the head is named bhél; whence the English bill is derived, signifying the beak of a bird. Figuratively, the Phrygians and Thurians, by βαλλην understood a king. Hence also, in the Syriack dialects, βααλ, βήλ, and likewise Βῶλ, signifies lord, and by this name also the sun; and, in some dialects, Ἦλ and Ἴλ, whence Ἴλος, and Ἥλιος, Ϝήλιος, and Βηλιος, and also in the Celtick diminutive way of expression, Ἕλενος, Ϝέλενος, and Βέλενος, signified the sun; and Ἑλένη, Ϝελένη, and Βελένη, the moon. Among the Teutonicks, bol and beil have the same meaning; whence the adjective holig, or heilig, is derived, and signifies divine or holy; and the aspiration being changed into s, the Romans form their Sol. Baxter.

1. Any thing made in a round form.
The worms with many feet, which round themselves into balls under logs of timber, but not in the timber. Bacon.
Nor arms they wear, nor swords and bucklers wield,
But whirl from leathern strings huge balls of lead. Dryden.
Like a ball of snow tumbling down a hill, he gathered strength as he passed. Howel.
Still unripen'd in the dewy mines,
Within the ball a trembling water shines,
That through the chrystal darts. Addison.
Such of those corpuscles as happened to combine into one mass, formed the metallick and mineral balls, or nodules, which we find. Woodward.

2. A round thing to play with, either with the hand or foot, or a racket.
Balls to the stars, and thralls to fortune's reign,
Turn'd from themselves, infected with their cage,
Where death is fear'd, and life is held with pain. Sidney.
Those I have seen play at ball, grow extremely earnest who should have the ball. Sidney.

3. A

3. A ſmall round thing, with ſome particular mark, by which votes are given, or lots caſt.

Let lots decide it.
For ev'ry number'd captive put a ball
Into an urn; three only black be there,
'The reſt, all white, are ſafe. Dryden.

Minos, the ſtrict inquiſitor, appears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls;
Abſolves the juſt, and dooms the guilty ſouls. Dryden.

4. A globe; as, the ball of the earth.

Julius and Antony, thoſe lords of all,
Low at her feet preſent the conquer'd ball. Granville.

Ye gods, what juſtice rules the ball?
Freedom and arts together fall. Pope.

5. A globe borne as an enſign of ſovereignty.

Hear the tragedy of a young man, that by right ought to hold the ball of a kingdom; but, by fortune, is made himſelf a ball, toſſed from miſery to miſery, and from place to place. Bacon's Henry VII.

6. Any part of the body that approaches to roundneſs; as the lower and ſwelling part of the thumb, the apple of the eye.

Be ſubject to no ſight but mine; inviſible
To every eye ball elſe. Shakeſpeare.

To make a ſtern countenance, let your brow bend ſo, that it may almoſt touch the ball of the eye. Peacham.

BALL. n. ſ. [bal, Fr. from ballare, low Lat. from βαλλίζειν, to dance.] An entertainment of dancing, at which the preparations are made at the expence of ſome particular perſon.

If golden ſconces hang not on the walls,
To light the coſtly ſuppers and the balls. Dryden.

He would make no extraordinary figure at a ball; but I can aſſure the ladies, for their conſolation, that he has writ better verſes on the ſex than any man. Swift.

BA'LLAD. n. ſ. [balade, Fr.] A ſong.

Ballad once ſignified a ſolemn and ſacred ſong, as well as trivial, when Solomon's Song was called the ballad of ballads; but now it is applied to nothing but trifling verſe. Watts.

An' I have not ballads made on you all, and ſung to filthy tunes, may a cup of ſack be my poiſon. Shakeſpeare.

Like the ſweet ballad, this amuſing lay
Too long detains the lover on his way. Gay.

To BA'LLAD. v. n. [from the noun.] To make or ſing ballads.

Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like ſtrumpets, and ſcall'd rhimers
Ballad us out o' tune. Shakeſpeare.

BA'LLAD-SINGER. n. ſ. [from ballad and ſing.] One whoſe employment is to ſing ballads in the ſtreets.

No ſooner 'gan he raiſe his tuneful ſong,
But lads and laſſies round about him throng.
Not ballad-ſinger, plac'd above the crowd,
Sings with a note ſo ſhrilling, ſweet and loud. Gay.

BA'LLAST. n. ſ. [ballaſt, Dutch.]

1. Something put at the bottom of the ſhip to keep it ſteady to the center of gravity.

There muſt be ſome middle counſellors to keep things ſteady; for, without that ballaſt, the ſhip will roul too much. Bacon's Eſſays.

As for the aſcent of it, this may be eaſily contrived, if there be ſome great weight at the bottom of the ſhip, being part of its ballaſt; which, by ſome cord within, may be looſened from it. Wilkins.

As when empty barks or billows float,
With ſandy ballaſt ſailors trim the boat;
So bees bear gravel ſtones, whoſe poiſing weight
Steers through the whiſtling winds their ſteddy flight. Dryd.

2. That which is uſed to make any thing ſteady.

Why ſhould he ſink where nothing ſeem'd to preſs?
His lading little, and his ballaſt leſs. Swift.

To BA'LLAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put weight at the bottom of a ſhip, in order to keep her ſteady.

If this ark be ſo ballaſted, as to be of equal weight with the like magnitude of water, it will be moveable. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. To keep any thing ſteady.

Whilſt thus to ballaſt love, I thought,
And ſo more ſteddily t' have gone,
I ſaw, I had love's pinnace overfraught. Donne.

Now you have given me virtue for my guide,
And with true honour ballaſted my pride. Dryden.

Thy place is filled, thy ſceptre wrung from thee;
Thy balm waſh'd off wherewith thou waſt anointed. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

3. Any thing that ſooths or mitigates pain.

You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms apply'd to you. Shakeſpeare.

Your praiſe's argument, balm of your age;
Deareſt and beſt. Shakeſpeare.

BALM. } n. ſ. [meliſſa, Lat.] The name of a plant.
BALM Mint. }

It is a verticillate plant, with a labiated flower, conſiſting of one leaf, whoſe upper lip is roundiſh, upright, and divided into two; but the under lip, into three parts: out of the flower-cup riſes the pointal, attended, as it were, with four embryos; theſe afterwards turn to ſo many ſeeds, which are roundiſh, and incloſed in the flower-cup: to theſe notes may be added, the flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves, but are not whorled round the ſtalks. The ſpecies are, 1. Garden balm. 2. Garden balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with ſofter hairy leaves. The firſt of theſe ſorts is cultivated in gardens for medicinal and culinary uſe: it is propagated by parting the roots either in ſpring or autumn. When they are firſt planted, if the ſeaſon proves dry, you muſt carefully water them until they have taken root. Miller.

BALM of Gilead.

1. The juice drawn from the balſam tree, by making inciſions in its bark. Its colour is firſt white, ſoon after green; but when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The ſmell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taſte of it bitter, ſharp and aſtringent. As little iſſues from the plant by inciſion, the balm ſold by the merchants, is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, diſtilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine. Calmet.

It ſeems moſt likely to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our Engliſh bible by the word balm, was not the ſame with the balſam of Mecca, but only a better ſort of turpentine, then in uſe for the cure of wounds and other diſeaſes. Prideaux's Connection.

2. A plant remarkable for the ſtrong balſamick ſcent, which its leaves emit, upon being bruiſed; whence ſome have ſuppoſed, erroneouſly, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant. Miller.

To BALM. v. a. [from balm.]

1. To anoint with balm.

Balm his foul head with warm diſtilled waters,
And burn ſweet wood. Shakeſpeare.

2. To ſooth; to mitigate; to aſſuage.

Oppreſt nature ſleeps:
This reſt might yet have balm'd thy ſenſes,
Which ſtand in hard cure. Shakeſpeare.

BA'LMY. adj. [from balm.]

1. Having the qualities of balm.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid,
In balmy ſweat; which with his beams the ſun
Soon dry'd. Milton.

2. Producing balm.
3. Soothing; ſoft; mild.

Come, Deſdemona, 'tis the ſoldier's life
To have their balmy ſlumbers wak'd with ſtrife. Shakeſp.

Such viſions hourly paſs before my ſight,
Which from my eyes their balmy ſlumbers fright. Dryden.

4. Fragrant; odoriferous.

Thoſe rich perfumes which, from the happy ſhore,
The winds upon their balmy wings convey'd,
Whoſe guilty ſweetneſs firſt the world betray'd. Dryden.

First Eurus to the rising morn is sent,
The regions of the balmy continent. Dryden.

5. Mitigating; assuasive.
Oh balmy breath, that doth almost persuade Justice to break her sword! Shakespeare.

BA'LNEARY. n. s. [balnearium, Lat. A bathing-room.
The balnearies, and bathing-places, he exposeth unto the summer setting. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

BALNEA'TION. n. s. [from balneum, Lat. a bath.] The act of bathing.
As the head may be disturbed by the skin, it may the same way be relieved, as is observable in balneations, and fomentations of that part. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

BA'LNEATORY. adj. [balnearius, Lat.] Belonging to a bath or stove.

BALOTIDE. n. s. The leap of an horse, so that when his fore-feet are in the air, he shews nothing but the shoes of his hinder-feet, without yerking out. A balotade differs from a capriole; for when a horse works at caprioles, he yerks out his hinder legs with all his force. Farrier's Dict.

BA'LSAM. n. s. [balsamum, Lat. Ointment; unguent; an unctuous application thicker than oil, and softer than salve.
Christ's blood our balsam; if that cure us here,
Him, when our judge, we shall not find severe. Denham.

BALSAM apple. [momordica, Lat.] An annual Indian plant.
The flower consists of one leaf, is of the expanded bell-shaped kind, but so deeply cut, as to appear composed of five distinct leaves; the flowers are some male, or barren; others female, growing upon the top of the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, which is fleshy, and sometimes more or less tapering and hollow, and, when ripe, usually bursts, and casts forth the seeds with an elasticity; which seeds are wrapped up in a membranous covering, and are, for the most part, indented on the edges. Miller.

BALSAM Tree.
This is a shrub which scarce grows taller than the pomegranate tree; it shoots out abundance of long slender branches, with a few small rounding leaves, always green; the wood of it is gummy, and of a reddish colour; the blossoms are like small stars, white, and very fragrant; whence spring our little pointed pods, inclosing a fruit like an almond, called carpobalsamum, as the wood is called xylobalsamum, and the juice opobalsamum; which see. This tree is cultivated in Arabia and Judea; but it is forbid to be sown or multiplied without the permission of the grand signior. Calmet.

BALSA'MICAL. } adj. [from balsam.] Having the qualities of BALSA'MICK. } balsam; unctuous; mitigating; soft; mild; oily.
If there be a wound in my leg, the vital energy of my soul thrusts out the balsamical humour of my blood to heal it.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.
The aliment of such as have fresh wounds ought to be such as keeps the humours from putrefaction, and renders them oily and balsamick. Arbuthnot.

BALUSTER. n. s. according to du Cange, from balaustrium, low Lat. a bathing place.] A small column or pilaster from an inch and three quarters to four inches square or diameter. Their dimensions and forms are various; they are frequently adorned with mouldings; they are placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries in churches.
This should first have been planched over, and railed about with balusters. Carew.

BALUSTRADE. n. s. [from baluster.] An assemblage of one or more rows of little turned pillars, called balusters, fixed upon a terras, or the top of a building, for separating one part from another.

BAM, BEAM, being initials in the name of any place, usually imply it to have been woody; from the Saxon beam, which we use in the same sense to this day. Gibson.

BA'MBOO. n. s. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has several shoots, much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. They are said by some, but by mistake, to contain sugar; the bamboo being much larger than the sugar-cane. The leaves grow out of each knot, and are prickly. They are four or five inches long, and an inch in breadth, somewhat pointed, and ribbed through the whole length with green and sharp fibres. Its flowers grow in ears, like those of wheat.

To BAMBOO'ZLE. v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writings.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.
After Nick had bamboozled about the money, John called for counters. Arbuthnot.

BAMBOO'ZLER. n. s. [from bamboozle.] A tricking fellow; a cheat.
There are a set of fellows they call banterers and bamboozlers, that play such tricks. Arbuthnot.

BAN. n. s. [ban, Teut. a publick proclamation, as of proscription, interdiction, excommunication, publick sale.]
1. Publick notice given of any thing, whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word we use especially in the publishing matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can say against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred or otherwise, they may take their exception in time. And, in the canon law, banna sunt proclamationes sponsi & sponsæ in ecclesiis fieri soliti. Cowel.
I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contradict your bans. Shakespeare.
Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding-day
To draw her neck into the bans. Hudibras.
2. A curse; excommunication.
Thou mixture rank of midnight weeds collected,
With Hecate's ban thrice blasted, thrice infected. Hamlet.
A great oversight it was of St. Peter that he did not accurse Nero, whereby the pope might have got all; yet what need of such a ban, since friar Vincent could tell Atabalipa, that kingdoms were the pope's. Raleigh.
3. Interdiction.
Much more to taste it, under ban to touch. Paradise Lost.
4. Ban of the Empire; a publick censure by which the privileges of any German prince are suspended.
He proceeded so far by treaty, that he was proferred to have the imperial ban taken off Altapinus, upon submission. Howel.

To BAN. v. a. [bannen, Dut. to curse.] To curse; to execrate.
Shall we think that it baneth the work which they leave behind them, or taketh away the use thereof. Hooker.
It is uncertain whether this word, in the foregoing sense, is to be deduced from ban, to curse, or bane, to poison.
In thy closet pent up, rue my shame,
And ban our enemies, both mine and thine. Shakespeare.
Before these Moors went a Numidian priest, bellowing out charms, and casting scrowls of paper on each side, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles.

BANA'NA Tree. See PLANTAIN; of which it is a species.

BAND. n. s. [bende, Dut. band, Saxon.]

6. A company of persons joined together in any common design.
And, good my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot.
Shakesp. Henry VI.
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers. Shakesp.
The queen in white array before her band,
Saluting took her rival by the hand. Dryden.
On a sudden, methought this select band sprang forward, with a resolution to climb the ascent, and follow the call of that heavenly musick. Tatler.
Strait the three bands prepare in arms to join,
Each band the number of the sacred Nine. Pope.
7. In architecture. Any flat low member or moulding, called also fascia, face, or plinth.

To BAND. v. a. [from band.]
1. To unite together into one body or troop.
The bishop, and the duke of Glo'ster's men,
Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble stones,
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt at one another's pates. Shakespeare.
Some of the boys banded themselves as for the major, and others for the king; who, after six days skirmishing, at last made a composition, and departed. Carew.
To live exempt
From heav'ns high jurisdiction, in new league
Banded against his throne. Milton.

BANDI'TTO. n. f. in the plural banditti. [bandito, Ital.]

A Roman sworder, and banditto slave,
Murder'd sweet Tully. Shakespeare.

BA'NDOG. n. f. [from ban or band, and dog. The original of this word is very doubtful. Caius, de canibus Britannicis, derives it from band, that is, a dog chained up. Skinner inclines to deduce it from bana, a murderer. May it not come from ban a curse, as we say a curst cur; or rather from baund, swelled or large, a Danish word; from whence, in some counties they call a great nut a ban-nut.] A kind of large dog.

The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screech-owls cry, and bandogs howl.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Or privy, or pert, if any bin,
We have great bandogs will tear their skin. Spenser.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

In vain the herdman calls him back again;
The dogs stand off afar, and bark in vain. Cowley.

2. To clamour at; to pursue with reproaches.

Vile is the vengeance on the ashes cold,
And envy base, to bark at sleeping fame.
Fairy Queen.

You dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue,
Against my lord the duke of Somerset! Shakespeare.

To BARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip trees of their bark.

The severest penalties ought to be put upon barking any tree that is not felled. Temple.

These trees, after they are barked, and cut into shape, are tumbled down from the mountains into the stream.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

BARK-BARED. adj. [from bark and bare.] Stripped of the bark.

Excoriated and bark-bared trees may be preserved, by nourishing up a shoot from the foot, or below the stripped place, cutting the body of the tree sloping off a little above the shoot, and it will quickly heal, and be covered with bark.
Mortimer's Art of Husbandry.

BA'RKER. n. s. [from bark.]

1. One that barks or clamours.

What hath he done more than a base cur? barked and made a noise? had a fool or two to spit in his mouth? But they are rather enemies of my fame than me, these barkers.
Ben. Johnson's Discovery.

2. [from bark of trees.] One that is employed in stripping trees.

BA'RKY. adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark; containing bark.

Ivy so enrings the barky fingers of the elm.
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

B'ARLEY. n. s. [derived by Junius from בר.]

It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn, and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough; the seed is swelling in the middle, and, for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are, 1. Common long-eared barley. 2. Winter or square barley, by some called big. 3. Sprat barley, or battledoor barley. All these sorts of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in a dry time. In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soils it is not sown till April. The square barley or big, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England, and in Scotland; and is hardier than the other sorts. Where barley is sown upon new broken up land, the usual method is to plough up the land in March, and let it lie fallow until June; at which time it is ploughed again, and sown with turneps, which are eaten by sheep in winter, by whose dung the land is greatly improved; and then, in March following, the ground is ploughed again, and sown with barley. Miller.

Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as proper food in inflammatory distempers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

BA'RLEYBRAKE. n. s. A kind of rural play.

By neighbours prais'd she went abroad thereby,
At barleybrake her sweet swift feet to try. Sidney.

BARLEY BROTH. n. s. [from barley and broth.] A low word, sometimes used for strong beer.

Can sodden water,
A drench for surreyn'd jades, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? Shakesp.

BARLEY CORN. n. s. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley; the beginning of our measure of length; the third part of an inch.

A long, long journey, choak'd with breaks and thorns,
Ill measur'd by ten thousand barley corns. Tickell.

BARLEY MOW. n. s. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley is stowed up.

Whenever by yon barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay.

BARM. n. s. [burm, Welch; beorm, Sax.] Yeast; the ferment put into drink to make it work, and into bread, to lighten and swell it.

Are you not he
That sometimes make the drink bear no barm,
Mislead light wand'rers, laughing at their harm? Shakesp.

You may try the force of imagination, upon staying the working of beer when the barm is put into it.
Bacon's Natural History.

BA'RMY. adj. [from barm.] Containing barm.

Their jovial nights in frolicks and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away;
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goblets cheer,
Of windy cider, and of barmy beer. Dryden.

BARN. n. s. [bern, Sax.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw, &c.

In vain the barns expect their promis'd load,
Nor barns at home, nor reeks are heap'd abroad. Dryden.

I took notice of the make of several barns here: after having laid a frame of wood, they place, at the four corners of it, four blocks, in such a shape as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Addison on Italy.

BA'RNACLE. n. s. [probably of bearn, Sax. a child, and aac, Sax. an oak.]

1. A bird like a gooſe, fabulouſly ſuppoſed to grow on trees.

Surely it is beyond even an atheiſt's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the firſt men might grow upon trees, as the ſtory goes about barnacles; or perhaps might be the lice of ſome vaſt prodigious animals, whoſe ſpecies is now extinct. Bentley's Sermons.

And from the moſt refin'd of ſaints,
As naturally grow miſcreants,
As barnacles turn ſolan geeſe
In th' iſlands of the Orcades. Hudibras.

2. An inſtrument made commonly of iron for the uſe of farriers, to hold a horſe by the noſe, to hinder him from ſtruggling when any inciſion is made. Farrier's Dict.

BARO'METER. n. ſ. [from βάρος, weight, and μέτρον, meaſure.] A machine for meaſuring the weight of the atmoſphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroſcope, which only ſhews that the air is heavier at one time than another, without ſpecifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, ſo called from Torricelli the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643; which is a glaſs tube filled with mercury, horizontally ſealed at one end; the other open and immerged in a baſon of ſtagnant mercury; ſo that, as the weight of the atmoſphere diminiſhes, the mercury in the tube will deſcend, and, as it encreaſes, the mercury will aſcend; the column of mercury ſuſpended in the tube, being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmoſphere. Many attempts have been made to render the changes in the barometer more ſenſible, in order to meaſure the atmoſphere more accurately; and hence aroſe a great number of barometers, of different ſtructures. Dr. Halley obſerves, in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, that in calm weather, when the air is inclined to rain, the mercury is commonly low; in ſerene good ſettled weather, high. On great winds, though unaccompanied with rain, the mercury is loweſt of all, with regard to the point of the compaſs the wind blows on. The greateſt heights of the mercury are on eaſterly and north-eaſterly winds, cæteris paribus. After great ſtorms of wind, when the mercury has been low, it riſes again very faſt. In calm froſty weather, it ſtands high. The more northerly places find greater alterations than the more ſouthern; and within the tropicks, and near them, there is little or no variation of the height of the mercury. The riſing of the mercury forebodes fair weather after foul, and an eaſterly or north-eaſterly wind; its falling protends ſoutherly or weſterly winds, or both. In a ſtorm, the mercury begining to riſe, is a pretty ſure ſign that it begins to abate. But there are frequently great changes in the air, without any perceptible alteration in the barometer. The alterations of the weight of the air, are generally allowed to be the cauſe of thoſe in the barometer; but philoſophers cannot eaſily determine whence thoſe alterations riſe in the atmoſphere.

The meaſuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the ſea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that eſſential property of the air, its gravity or preſſure. As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoiſed by a column of air of equal weight, ſo whatever cauſes make the air heavier or lighter, the preſſure of it will be thereby encreaſed or leſſened, and of conſequence the mercury will riſe or fall. Again, the air is condenſed or expanded, in proportion to the weight or force that preſſes it. Hence it is, that the higher from the ſea, in the midland countries, the mercury deſcends the lower; becauſe the air becomes more rarified and lighter, and it falls loweſt upon the tops of the higheſt mountains. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoiſes a column of mercury from twenty-ſeven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmoſphere varying one tenth, which are its utmoſt limits; ſo that the exact ſpecifick gravity of the air cannot be determined when the barometer ſtands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbuthnot on Air.

BAROME'TRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical inſtruments. Derham's Phyſico-Theology.

BA'RON. n. ſ. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, ſignified a brave warriour, or a brutal man; and, from the firſt of theſe ſignifications, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others ſuppoſe it originally to ſignify only a man; in which ſenſe baron, or varon, is ſtill uſed by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uſes baron and femme, huſband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gauliſh word, ſignifying commander; others from the Hebrew גבר, of the ſame import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which ſeems leaſt probable.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a viſcount. It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all thoſe were called barons, that had ſuch ſigniories as we now call court barons. And it is ſaid, that, after the conqueſt, all ſuch came to the parliament, and ſat as nobles in the upper houſe. But when, by experience, it appeared, that the parliament was too much crouded with ſuch multitudes, it became a cuſtom, that none ſhould come, but ſuch as the king, for their extraordinary wiſdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men, ſeeing that this ſtate of nobility was but caſual, and depending merely on the prince's pleaſure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male: and theſe were called barons by letters patent, or by creation; whoſe poſterity are now thoſe barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleaſure. It is nevertheleſs thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be diſcerned by their titles; the barons by writ being thoſe, that to the title of lord have their own ſurnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent, are named by their baronies. Theſe barons which were firſt by writ, may now juſtly alſo be called barons by preſcription; for that they have continued barons, in themſelves and their anceſtors, beyond the memory of man. There are alſo barons by tenure, as the biſhops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their biſhopricks, have always had place in the upper houſe of parliament, and are called lords ſpiritual.

2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king: of theſe the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his aſſiſtants, between the king and his ſubjects, in cauſes of juſtice, belonging to the exchequer.

3. There are alſo barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the ſeven towns, Haſtings, Winchelſea, Rye, Rumney, Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower houſe of parliament. Cowel.

They that bear
The cloth of ſtate above, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakeſpeare.

4. Baron is uſed for the huſband in relation to his wife. Cowel.

5. A baron of beef is when the two ſirloins are not cut aſunder, but joined together by the end of the backbone. Dict.

BA'RONAGE. n. ſ. [from baron.]

1. The body of barons and peers.

His charters of the liberties of England, and of the foreſt, were hardly, and with difficulty, gained by his baronage at Staines, A. D. 1215. Hale.

2. The dignity of a baron.

3. The land which gives title to a baron.

BA'RONESS. n. ſ. [baroneſſa, Ital. baroniſſa, Lat.] A baron's lady.

BA'RONET. n. ſ. [of baron and et, diminutive termination.] The loweſt degree of honour that is hereditary; it is below a baron and above a knight; and has the precedency of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was firſt founded by king James I. A. D. 1611. Cowel. But it appears by the following paſſage, that the term was in uſe before, though in another ſenſe.

King Edward III. being bearded and croſſed by the clergy, they being too ſtrong for him, ſo as he could not order and reform things, was adviſed to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the beſt abilities, entitling them therein barons in the next parliament. By which means he had ſo many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy; which barons were not afterwards lords, but baronets, as ſundry of them do yet retain the name. Spenſer.

BA'RONY. n. ſ. [baronnie, Fr. beonny, Sax.] That honour or lordſhip that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of biſhops alſo. Cowel.

BA'ROSCOPE. n. ſ. [βάρος and σκοπέω.] An inſtrument to ſhew the weight of the atmoſphere. See BAROMETER.

Who draw their little bawbles, when they play. Dryden.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;
'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with bawbles and seals. Prior.

Our author then, to please you in your way,
Presents you now a bauble of a play,
In gingling rhyme. Granville.
A prince, the moment he is crown'd,
Inherits every virtue round,
As emblems of the sov'reign pow'r;
Like other bawbles of the Tow'r. Swift.

BA'WBLING. adj. [from bawble.] Trifling; contemptible: a word not now in use, except in conversation.

A bawbling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprized;
With which such scathful grapple did he make,
With the most noble bottom of our fleet.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

BA'WCOCK. n. ſ. [perhaps from beau, or laude, and cock.] A familiar word, which ſeems to ſignify the ſame as fine fellow.

Why, how now, my bawcock? how doſt thou, chuck?
Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

BAWD. n. ſ. [baude, old Fr.] A procurer, or procureſs; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

If your worſhip will take order for the drabs and the knaves; you need not to fear the bawds. Shakeſpeare.

This commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all changing word,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid. Shak.

Our author calls colouring lena ſororis, the bawd of her ſiſter deſign; ſhe dreſſes her up, ſhe paints her, ſhe procures for the deſign, and makes lovers for her. Dryden.

With hounds of Sparta. Shakespeare.
If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch
Baying him at the heels. Shakespeare.

BAY Salt. Salt made of sea water, which receives its consistence from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour. The greatest quantities of this salt are made in France, on the coast of Bretagne, Saintonge, &c. from the middle of May to the end of August, by letting the sea water into square pits or basons, where its surface being struck and agitated by the rays of the sun, it thickens at first imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a slight crust, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into salt. The water in this condition is scalding hot, and the crystallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at most fifteen days. Chamb.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give sound, which we call crackling, puffing, spitting, &c. as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into fire. Bacon.

BAY Window. A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room.

Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shakesp.

BE'ACHY. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.
Other times, to see
The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips. Shakesp.

BE'ACON. n. s. [beacon, Sax. from beon, a signal, and beenan, whence beckon, to make a signal.]

1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.
His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkled living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields,
Send forth their flames. Fairy Queen.
Modest doubt is called
The beacon of the wise. Shakespeare.
The king seemed to account of the designs of Perkin as a may-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin. Bacon's Henry VII.
No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war. Gay.

2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their courses, and warn them from rocks, shallows, and sandbanks.

BEAD. n. s. [beade, prayer, Saxon.]

1. Small globes or balls of glass, or pearl, or other substance, strung upon a thread, and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from whence the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer.
That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads. Fairy Q.
Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear,
With ev'ry bead I drop too soft a tear. Pope.

To BEAL. v. n. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather matter, or come to a head, as a sore does.

BEAM n. s. [beam, Sax. a tree; sunnebeam, a ray of the sun.]

1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.

A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and if the building be of timber, the teazel-tenons of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on each side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.

The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon's N. Hist.

He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd the neighb'ring beam. Dryd.

2. Any large and long piece of timber: a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.

But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find. Dryden's Æneid.

3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.

Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the ends be both equal, the beam will be in horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be equal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilk. Mathem. Mag.

4. The horn of a stag.

And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam. Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Juturna heard, and seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer. Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam. 1 Chr. xi. 23.

7. The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or reflected by the eye.

Let them present me death upon the wheel,
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down-stretch

Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Bear with me then, if lawful what I aſk. Milton.

BEAR. n. ſ. [bera, Saxon.]

1. A rough ſavage animal.

Every part of the body of theſe animals is covered with thick ſhaggy hair, of a dark brown colour, and their claws are hooked, which they uſe in climbing trees. They feed upon fruits, honey, bees, and fleſh. Some have falſely reported, that bears bring their young into the world ſhapeleſs, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and aſleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and ſo ſoundly for the firſt fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the ſleepy ſeaſon, they are ſaid to have no nouriſhment but from licking their feet; for it is certain they eat nothing, and, at the end of it, the males are very fat. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and ſtupid as it ſeems to be, it is capable of diſcipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thouſand little tricks at the ſound of a trumpet. The fleſh of bears was much eſteemed by the ancients. They abound in Poland, Muſcovy, Lithuania, and the great foreſts in Germany; and alſo in the remote northern countries where the ſpecies is white. Calmet.

Call hither to the ſtake my two brave bears,
Bid Saliſbury and Warwick come to me.——
—Are theſe thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,
And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shakeſpeare.

Thou'dſt ſhun a bear;
But if thy flight lay tow'rd the roaring ſea,
Thou'dſt meet the bear i' th' mouth. Shakeſpeare.

2. The name of two conſtellations, called the greater and leſſer bear; in the tail of the leſſer bear, is the pole ſtar.

BEAR'S-BREECH. n. ſ. [acanthus.] The name of a plant.

The leaves are like thoſe of the thiſtle; the flowers labiated; the under lip of the flower is divided into three ſegments, which, in the beginning, is curled up in the form of a tube; in the place of the under lip are produced the ſtamina, which ſupport the pointals; the cup of the flowers is compoſed of prickly leaves, the upper part which is bent over like an arch, and ſupplies the defect of the upper lip of the flower; the fruit is of an oval form, divided in the middle into two cells, each containing one ſmooth ſeed. The ſpecies are, 1. The ſmooth-leaved garden bear's-breech. 2. The prickly bear's-breech. 3. The middle bear's-breech, with ſhort ſpines, &c. The firſt is uſed in medicine, and is ſuppoſed to be the mollis acanthus of Virgil. The leaves of this plant are cut upon the capitals of the Corinthian pillars, and were formerly in great eſteem with the Romans. They are eaſily propagated by paring the roots in February or March, or by the ſeed ſown at the ſame time. Miller.

BEAR'S-EAR, or Auricula. [auricula urſi, Lat.] The name of a plant.

It hath a perennial root; the leaves are thicker and ſmoother than thoſe of the primroſe; the cup of the flower is ſhorter, ſo that the tube appears naked; the flower is ſhaped like a funnel; the upper part is expanded, and divided into five ſegments; this is ſucceeded by a globular ſeed-veſſel, containing many ſmall ſeeds; every year it produces vaſt quantities of new flowers, differing in ſhape, ſize, or colour; and there is likewiſe a great variety in the leaves of theſe plants. They flower in April, and ripen their ſeeds in June. Miller.

BEAR'S-EAR, or Sanicle. [cortuſa, Lat.]

This plant hath a perennial root; the leaves are roundiſh, rough, and crenated on the edges, like thoſe of ground ivy; the cup of the flower is ſmall, and divided into ſix parts; the flowers are ſhaped like a funnel, cut at the top into many ſegments, and diſpoſed in an umbel; the fruit is roundiſh, terminating in a point, and is cloſely fixt in the cup, in which are contained many ſmall angular ſeeds. We have but one ſpecies of this plant, which is nearly allied to the auricula urſi; but the flowers are not quite ſo large and fair. It loſes its leaves in winter, but puts out new ones early in the ſpring; and, in April, it produces flowers, which are ſometimes ſucceeded by ſeed pods; but it is very rare that they perfect their ſeeds with us. Miller.

BEAR'S-FOOT. n. ſ. See HELLEBORE, of which it is a ſpecies.

BEAR'S-WORT. n. ſ. An herb.

BEATI'FICAL. } adj. [beatificus, low Lat. from beatus, happy.]
BEATI'FICK. } That which has the power of making happy, or completing fruition; bliſsful. It is uſed only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring the riches of heav'n's pavement
Than ought divine or holy elſe, enjoy'd
In viſion beatifick. Milton.

It is alſo their felicity to have no faith; for, enjoying the beatifical viſion in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

We may contemplate upon the greatneſs and ſtrangeneſs of the beatifick viſion; how a created eye ſhould be ſo fortified, as to bear all thoſe glories, that ſtream from the fountain of uncreated light. South.

BEATI'FICALLY. adv. [from beatifical.] In ſuch a manner as to complete happineſs.

Beatifically to behold the face of God in the fulneſs of wiſdom, righteouſneſs and peace, is bleſſedneſs no way incident unto the creatures beneath man. Hakewell.

BEATIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [from beatifick.] A term in the Romiſh church, diſtinguiſhed from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgment made by the pope, that the perſon beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be reverenced as bleſſed; but is not a conceſſion of the honours due to ſaints, which are conferred by canonization.

To BEA'TIFY. v. a. [beatifico, Lat.]

1. To make happy; to bleſs with the completion of celeſtial enjoyment.

I wiſh I had the wings of an angel, to have aſcended into paradiſe, and to have beheld the forms of thoſe beatified ſpirits, from which I might have copied my archangel. Dryden.

The uſe of ſpiritual conference is unimaginable and unſpeakable, eſpecially if free and unreſtrained, bearing an image of that converſation which is among angels and beatified ſaints. Hammond.

We ſhall know him to be the fulleſt good, the neareſt to us, and the moſt certain; and, conſequently, the moſt beatifying of all others. Brown.

2. To ſettle the character of any perſon by a publick acknowledgment that he is received in heaven, though he is not inveſted with the dignity of a ſaint.

Over-againſt this church ſtands a large hoſpital, erected by a ſhoemaker, who has been beatified, though never ſainted. Addiſon on Italy.

BE'ATING. n. ſ. [from beat.] Correction; puniſhment by blows.

Playwright, convict of publick wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again. Ben. Johnſon.

BEA'TITUDE. n. ſ. [beatitudo, Lat.]

The end of that government, and of all man's aims, is agreed to be beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.

This is the image and little repreſentation of heaven; it is beatitude in picture. Taylor.

He ſet out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of ſenſe; ſlightly paſſing over the accompliſhment of the ſoul, and the beatitude of that part which earth and viſibilities too weakly affect. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A declaration of bleſſedneſs made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU, n. ſ. [beau, Fr. It is ſounded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux.] A man of dreſs; a man whoſe great care is to deck his perſon.

What, will not beaux attempt to pleaſe the fair? Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind
To Vill'roy; are the land nymphs ſo?
And fly they all, at once combin'd
To ſhame a general, and a beau? Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift.

BE'AVER. n. ſ. [bievre, Fr.]

1. An animal, otherwiſe named the caſtor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His ſkin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his ſtones, knowing that for them only his life is ſought. Hakewell.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the ſagacity and wiſdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

2. A hat of the beſt kind; ſo called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You ſee a ſmart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue: a deaf man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addiſon.

The broker here his ſpacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow ſit jealouſies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the face. [baviere, Fr.]

BE'AVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a birchen garland bears,
Dropping with infant's blood, and mother's tears:
All fleſh is humbled. Pope.

BEAU'ISH. adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; ſoppiſh.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form; pleaſing to the ſight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petrucio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous.
Shakeſp. Taming of the Shrew.

Alas! not hoping to ſubdue,
I only to the flight aſpir'd;
To keep the beauteous foe in view,
Was all the glory I deſir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.] In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleaſing to the ſight; beautifully.

Look upon pleaſures not upon that ſide that is next the ſun, or where they look beauteouſly; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from beauteous.] The ſtate or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From leſs virtue, and leſs beauteouſneſs,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddeſſes. Donne.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.] Fair; having the qualities that conſtitute beauty.

He ſtole away and took by ſtrong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Raleigh.

The principal and moſt important parts of painting, is to know what is moſt beautiful in nature, and moſt proper for that art; that which is the moſt beautiful, is the moſt noble ſubject: ſo, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, becauſe the perſons are greater whom the poet inſtructs, and conſequently the inſtructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
And ſummer ſeas are turn'd by ſudden winds. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.] In a beautiful manner.

No longer ſhall the boddice aptly lac'd,
From thy full boſom to thy ſlender waiſt,
That air and harmony of ſhape expreſs,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully leſs. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS. n. ſ. [from beautiful.] The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. a. [from beauty.] To adorn; to embelliſh; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was ſorrow more ſweetly ſet forth, their faces ſeeming rather to beautify their ſorrow, than their ſorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke. Shakeſpeare.

Theſe were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the uſe of man and beaſt. Raleigh.

How all conſpire to grace
Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.

There is charity and juſtice; and the one ſerves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It muſt be a proſpect pleaſing to God himſelf, to ſee his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him, by greater degrees of reſemblance. Addiſon.

BEAU'TY. n. ſ. [beauté, Fr.]

1. That

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect,
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.—
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.
Shakesp. Richard III.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators; that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold, if we consider the figure, colours, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delight,
And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

3. Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.

4. A beautiful person.

Remember that Pellean conquerour,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and slightly overpass'd. Par. Lost.

What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.

To BEAUTY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish.

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
Than is my deed to your most painted word. Shakespeare.

BEAUTY-SPOT. n. s. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.

The filthiness of swine makes them the beauty-spot of the animal creation. Grew.

BECAFI'CO. n. s. [becafigo, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a fig-pecker. Pineda.

The robin-redbreast, till of late, had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest;
Till becaficos sold so dev'lish dear,
To one that was, or would have been, a peer. Pope.

To BECA'LM. v. a. [from calm.]

1. To still the elements.

The moon shone clear on the becalmed flood. Dryden.

2. To keep a ship from motion.

A man becalmed at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun, or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion. Locke.

3. To quiet the mind.

Soft whisp'ring airs, and the lark's mattin song,
Then woo to musing, and becalm the mind
Perplex'd with irksome thoughts. Philips.

Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul
With easy dreams. Addison.

4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to with-hold from motion.

BECAME. The preterite of become; which see.

BECA'USE. conjunct. [from by and cause.]

1. For this reason that; on this account that; for this cause that.

How great soever the sins of any person are, Christ died for him, because he died for all; and he died for those sins, because he died for all sins; only he must reform. Hammond.

Men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men, are more concerned in the one than the other. Tillotson.

2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.

Infancy demands aliment, such as lengthens fibres without breaking, because of the state of accretion. Arbuthnot.

To BECHA'NCE. v. n. [from be and chance.] To befal; to happen to; a word proper, but now in little use.

BENEFI'CIARY. adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependent and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope. Bacon.

BENEFI'CIARY. n. f. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person. Ayliffe.

BENEFIT. n. f. [beneficium, Lat.]

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms. Shakespeare.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Psalm ciii.

As many as offer'd life,
Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By faith, not void of works. Milton.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abateth his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee. Wisdom.

3. In law.

Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy, is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and so burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or, otherwise, suffereth death for his transgression. Cowel.

To BE'NEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge. Shakespeare.

He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine. Arbuthnot.

To BE'NEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old renowned authors, I shall spare. Milton.

BENE'MPT. adj. [See NEMPT.] Appointed; marked out: an obsolete word.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gain,
Than kid or cosset, which I thee benempt;
Then up, I say. Spenser.

To BENE'T. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benetted round with villains,
Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane
They had begun the play. Shakespeare.

BENE'VOLENCE. n. f. [benevolentia, Lat.]
